BIG EARTHQUAKE IN CATANIA SICILY

VILLAGES LEVELED BY SHOCK. 183 REPORTED KILLED, 153 HURT.

SCENE OF RUIN AND DEATH

Most Victims Women and Children. Men Wild With Terror and Grief.

Catania, Sicily.—A great earthquake brought death and destruction to many villages near Mount Eta. The number of dead was officially placed at 183, with about 350 injured. A large part of the devastated territory has not been inspected.

The affected zone extends from Zaffarana, the highest village on Mount Etna, to the sea, between Aci Reale, on the south, and Giarre on the north. It includes Linera, the center of the disturbance; Pisano and Santa Venerla. In Linera alone 110 persons were killed and 300 injured. In Bongiardo 13 dead and 27 injured have been taken from the ruins. At Cozentini 16 were killed and many injured. These villages and many smaller places were levelled.

The entire district presented a spectacle of desolation, ruin and death Many of the injured had not been taken from the debris. All train service has been abandoned owing to the collapse of bridges, broken tracks and obstructed tunnels.

For centuries this region has suffured from earthquakes, owing to the activity of Mount Etna. Yet it is thickly populated, as the land is fertile, vineyards growing with little attention. Near the central point of the disturbance dozens of bodies were lying along the road. Many were unrecognizable, as they were badly crushed. The injured lay in the open, awaiting assistance, which has been sent to them.

Where Linera stood is a mass of ruins. Those houses which did not collapse entirely were so broken as to emphasize the completeness of the disaster. The village consisted of about 800 inhabitants. Most of the people escaped because the shock occurred when the men and some of the women were working in the fields. From the vineyards they saw their houses falling and when they arrived, breathless, at their homes, they found only wreckage, with some of their people buried beneath.

This accounts for the fact that most of the victims at Linera were women and children. The men, wild with terror and grief, attacked the debris with their bare hands in an effort to save their families.

Generals Trabucchi and Moccagatta are in command of the work of rescue, which is being expeditiously performed by soldiers, firemen, policemen and Red Cross volunteers. It is expected, however, that weeks will pass before the full extent of the disaster can be ascertained, as it is believed many peasants are buried under their homes in the isolated country districts.

Late reports from the stricken district add to the death list. At Passo Pomo 12 persons were killed; at Malati 12; at Santa Veneri 6; Santa Tecla 2; Santa Maria Vergine 8; Garbati 4.

MICHIGAN MILLIONAIRE SUICIDES.

Charles W. Post Kills Himself While Temporarily Insane.

Santa Barbara, Cal.—Charles W. Post, wealthy cereal food manufacturer of Battle Creek, Mich., shot himself to death with a rifle while temporarily insane, according to testimony of his physician, Dr. J. C. Bainbridge, offered at an inquest held shortly after the tragedy. The verdict of the coroner's jury was noncommittal, holding that Mr. Post died from the effects of a gunshot wound.

Mr. Post recently made a hurried trip to Rochester, Minn., to undergo a major operation to save his life. He had been in a nervous state since his return to California and had fought against an inclination to suicide for some time, according to the testimony of Miss Ella Benson, his nurse.

Mr. Post asked the nurse to leave him alone for a short time. In a few minutes a shot was heard and on entering the room, the nurse found Mr. Post on the bed with a rifle. The position of the body and the weapon indicated that the man had placed the muzzle in his mouth and pulled the trigger with his foot. Death was instantaneous.

Ship Brings Story of Massacre.

New York.—Capt. W. P. Aspinoll of the steamer Gregory, which arrived from Iquitos, 2500 miles up the Amazon, brought a story of a massacre of 45 Peruvian soldiers, all Indians, who had mutinied and killed their officers. The 45 mutineers, when captured, were shackled togethed, and taken out on the Napo river on a lighter in town of a gunboat. Then the story goes, a machine gun on the gunboat was turned on the prisoners and all were killed.

HUMOR DISFIGURED BABY

Clarendon, N. C.—"My baby was broken out with a red, thick and rough-looking humor when about two months old. It would come in patches and went almost all over her in that way. The places were like ringworm and as they would spread they would turn red and make sores and itch. The trouble went to her face and disfigured her badly. Her clothes irritated it.

"I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I got a sample and in one night's time I could see a change in the redness and in two days the place would be nearly gone. I sent and got one twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and two fifty-cent boxes of Cuticura Ointment, which cured my baby. She was well in three months." Had Made a Good Start.

In a certain family there is one of those rare old maids—a type that is almost extinct. Two sad love affairs have made life appear rather curdled, and she's about as cheerful as a rainy day at the seashore. A five-year-old grandniece is her one confidante, because she's the "only one who understands me." The other day at dinner, after casting a reproachful glance at the other members of the family, she murmured: "Yes, darling, I never thought enough of myself. I'm only now beginning to. I hope when you grow up you'll think something of yourself." "Oh, auntie!" exclaimed the little one, "I don't have to wait 'till then, 'cause I think a whole lot of myself now!"

RESINOL WILL HEAL BABY'S ITCHING SKIN

Resinol ointment and resinol soap are absolutely free from anything of a harsh or injurious nature, and can therefore be used with perfect confidence in the treatment of babies' skin troubles—eczema, teething rash, chafings, etc.—where you wouldn't dare use ordinary "skin-cures." Resinol stops itching instantly and speedily heals even severe and stubborn eruptions. Doctors have prescribed it for the past nineteen years.

Resinol soap and resinol ointment clears away pimples, blackheads and dandruff, and is an invaluable household remedy for sores, burns, boils, piles, etc. Sold by every druggist.—Adv.

EDITOR'S CHAT.

Only two letters this week! I am just a little disappointed this week. But perhaps you are all waiting for some one else. If so I hope to hear from you next week. If you don't think you can write as good as some one else, just write anyway, and I assure you the effort will be appreciated. In her letter this week "Mother of Two" has given her views on making the small boys and girls love the farm. Now, I would like to have some views about making older children and young men and young women love the farm.

THE LETTERS.

Editor Home Department:—I thought I would wait for some one else to write this week, but have decided if everyone should do that our page would be a failure and I don't want it to be that. I want to say a little about making boys and girls love the farm. I believe if they are treated right they will love the farm and country life. But there is a great difference in opinion as to what that expression, "treated right," means. Here's mine: Give them something for their very own if nothing but a calf or hen; do everything in your power to have good schools to send them to; provide them with all the good books and the best musical instrument you can afford; and last but not least, remember they are children and cannot help having fun, so let them have friends their own age, and when they are at your home treat them as you would have their mother treat your child. This is the way I shall try to treat mine.

As my letter is getting lengthy will close by giving a few hints and making a request. If when washing sheer garments you will add a handful of lump starch to the last rense water, they will iron nicely.

When making candy, butter top of vessel in which it is boiled and it will not boil over. Will some please give directions for making home-made light bread and rolls, also for making yeast cake from fig leaves? Best wishes for the Union-Banner, and especially the Home Department. Mother of Two.

[Thank you, am indeed glad you did not wait. I hope your request will be answered real soon.—Ed.]

Editor Home Department:—I am glad we are to have a department in the Union-Banner. I think it will help us so much if we will do our part. I will try to give a few helpful suggestions. If a pinch of soda is added to the water in which dry peas or beans are put to soak, they will cook much quicker. A teaspoonful of vinegar will have the same effect on tough fowl or beef.

If you do not measure your milk and soda for biscuit, try using one-fourth teaspoonful of soda to each cup of milk and see if you don't make good biscuit, the rule instead of the exception. Will some one please give directions for making rose beads?

Mrs. A. C. Kicker.

[Thank you, come again.—Ed]

THE DOCTOR'S VERDICT

I heartily recommend Poindexter's Diarrhoea and Dysentery Remedy to anyone in need of such a remedy; I have used it in my practice and it gives immediate relief. After I had tried various prescriptions on one of my children with little results, I gave the child Poindexter's Diarrhoea and Dysentery Remedy, and the third dose brought it perfectly straight; it relieves quickly and removes the cause permantly. The preparation is free from opiates, consequently, there is no danger of creating an opium habit.

COL. JOHN M. PARKER SAYS PROGRESSIVEISM IS PEOPLE'S SALVATION

The following speech was delivered in New Yord City by Col. John M. Parker, of New Orleans, La., at the banquet given in celebration of Lincoln's birthday.

The greatest disaster that ever befell the people of the South was the death of Abraham Lincoln.

"With malace toward none, with charity for all", his kindly disposition and great brain would never for a moment have permitted those intolerable and inhuman conditions that existed through the South during those dark and terrible days of reconstruction.

General Sherman said that "War is hell," and boasted that a crow would have to carry his own rations to fly over the course of his army.

Our beople uncomplainingly bore the terrible hardships of war for more than four long years, battling for their honest and earnest convictions, but the hell of warfare fell into insignificance in comparrison with the hell of reconstruction and the sufferings and atrocities which were perpetuated during that period.

Our people felt no personal enmity to the brave men who were fighting for their honest convictions, waging an open, manly battle againt men equally sincere in their different opinions but all over the South they did have an abhorence for the camp follower and carpet bagger, who utilized our misery and misfortune as a stepping stone and with the assistance of the utterly ignorant and illiterete negro, built up in the South of the Republican party, the most corrupt political machine ever organized, a machine that has been steadily and constantly used ever since by the political leaders of that party to serve the interests of the bosses and against the interests of the people.

Many men of the South today were too young to personally know all of the details of those years of misrule by the republican party, the squandering of millions of dollars of money, not one dollar of which, in some cases, ever reached the state treasury; but do know that for years our Southern states have staggered under the burden of those days of misrule and corruption and the very memory of the republican party throughout the length and breadth of the South, is such a terrible nightmare, that even those of the second and third generation cannot, and will not and will never put aside their revered traditions to follow a party whose very name recalls sorrowful and expensive recollections. Honest republicans from the North have for ever been driven from their party by the absolute boss control, nominating candidates, controling committees, dictating party polices and preverting justice by manipulating delegates from Southern states where there was no remote possibility of electing a single member of the electorial college.

The republican party saved the nation and prevented the dissolution of the United States. It has fulfilled its mission and reached that period of decay, when all its efforts to again vitalize it are useless.

Many of our southern states have not a single official high or low, except democrats; many of us who have devoted a lifetime of service to that party, feel that its leaders have become so arrogant that it can no longer serve the people and has absolutely outlived its day of usefulness. In some states the patriot has been supplanted by the demagogue and decent men will not mix in the resultant political mire. You of New York, by overwhelming vote, have expressed your opinion of Tammany.

Thousands of democrats throughout the South believe in reasonable protection for the American farmer, working man and manufacturer, but they cannot, under the circumstances, affiliate with the republican party. For but eight years during the last fifty, has the South had any influence in national affairs and even during those eight years, counted for little, as we were recognized as soundly democratic by inheritance and certain to blindly support the democric ticket, no matter who its leader, or how visionary or injurious the platform, for which that party stood.

Modern commercial and transportation facilities have drawn our states very close together and the welfare of each is closely reflected in national prosperity.

We have reached the mile stone, where the nation's best interests demand the obligation for all time, of any sectional lines or issues and throughout every single Southern state a new Declaration of Indepen- is rising: a new determination for absolute froodom is being created.

The platform of the Progressive party is clear and explicit and is the same in Connecticut and California, Minnesota and Florida.

The first and only unanimous resolution adopted by the convention at Chicago, recognized the inherent and costitutional rights of the states to select their delegates to all state and national conventions by such rules as the states themselves saw fit. This throughout the South means a white man's party and the elimination of the ignorant and illiterate; and sooner or later the nation's welfare will demand similar laws in every stete, to avoid future evils and danger.

The Progressive party offers the first and only platform where men from the North, South, East, and West can stand arm and arm, shoulder to shoulder and where patriotic democrats, patriotic republicans and patriotic progressives can universally fight for those principles, which will make this nation bigger, broader and better to live in.

Experience of the Spanish-American war satisfied the entire nation that the Mason and Dixon line was forever oblilerated and that no more patriotic and loyal Americans could be found anywhere than throughout the South.

As one of the representatives of that section, proudly acknowledging allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, I ask an appeal to patriotic men from every sectson to live up to that magnificent sentiment expressed at Gettysburg—"And that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Let us forever bury all section and local lines and work side by side, to the limit of our physical ability, to solve for the best interests of the entire nation, those questions which mean so much to our future welfare and prosperity. Let us put the national honor above the dollar and, as the immortal Lincoln said: "Let us have faith, that right makes might," and in that faith let us, to the end, dare to do our duty as we understand it.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space to write a few words to my friends in old Alabama, my childhood home. I'll never forget to love my kind folks and friends. It has been twenty years since I left Alabama. Last December the 4th we moved to Texas, and from Texas to Oklahoma, and I went back this past March to see my mother, Mrs. Susan Davenport. She lived at my brother's, Mr. J. M. Davenport. She was sick when I got there, but I stayed two weeks, and she came home with me. Dr. Kincaid of Jemison, Ala., waited on her. He said she could not make the trip, but I am glad to say she made it alright, and is now in good health and very strong to her age; she will be 84 in October. I want to say I had a nice time, and found everybody doing well. The country did not seem like it did when I left there; It has made a wonderful change in twenty years. I think I like Oklahoma the best because it is so level here, and we have good roads all over our country and plenty of autos to travel them. We have good kind people here, and we haven't any negroes; we have some Greeks, but they are very kind and good.

Well, for fear the kind editor gets tired of this long letter and puts it in the waste basket, I will close by saying I want to thank cousin Wilce Gipson for sending me the Union-Banner, for I am always anxious to get it, for it is like getting a letter from home.

Marvin Wilson Instantly Kil'd

Body found dead near the Railroad above Thorsby Sunday Morning

Early Sunday morning the body of Marvin Wilson was found lying at the foot of an embankment of the railroad a short way above Thorsby. Life was not entirely gone when he was first found, but severe bruises and cuts had wounded him so badly that he was entirely unconscious of anything. Shortly after being carried down to the station at Thorsby he breathed his last breath.

A coroner's jury empannelled by Justice A. F. Childress, after a thorough investigation, conceded that he came to his death either by falling from a fast moving train, or jumping from a train or by being knocked from a train.

The body was brought to Clanton Sunday afternoon and prepared for burial.

Mr. Wilson was a young man of about twenty-five years of age, and unmarried. He lived here, where he was well known and where he enjoyed the friendship of a large number of acquaintances. He was a son of the late W. M. Wilson, one of the most prominent citizens of Clanton, during his life.

The only one remaining of the family now is Willie, who is about twenty years of age, and is this year graduating at Highland Home College.

Funeral services were conducted at the residence of Mr. Ed Smitherman Monday afternoon by Rev. Chappelle. After which interment was made at the Clanton cemeter. The following acted as pall bearers:

M. C. Broadhead, T. M. Parrish, J. T. Morgan, Alvin Jones, G. O. Mckee, M. M. Wyatt, S. E. Johnson, Joe Gray.

NASHVILLE BOOSTERS COME TO CLANTON

Register Chanc'y 2April2

As announced last week, and according to schedule, the Booster Club of the city of Nashville arrived in Clanton on their special train at 5:55 Monday afternoon. They were made up of a sincere business set of fellows, who in addition to the fun they are having on the trip, went directly to making friends for themselves and Nashville and her commercial interests.

Speeches, though short, were made by several members of the visiting party, following a brief and hearty welcome to our town by Mayor Mathews. A large number of citizens greeted them, and enjoyed the interest they showed in our town and community. They have a purpose that is broad in its meaning, and sincere in its purpose, being a deeper one than a mere trip through the South for the sake of the excursion. They want to get acquainted with the business men of the south as a whole and thereby create friendly relations that will extend into commercial transactions with one another to the mutual advantage of all concerned. Every city and every community welcomes such a spirit, and hopes to see some of the motives which Nashville is advancing carried to a successful termination.

POSTPONE LACY CASE UNTIL THE NEXT CALL

WILL NOT FILE TRANSCRIPTS UNTIL NEXT CALL OF THIRD DIVISION.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Attorneys for Theo. Lacy, who was convicted recently on a charge of embezzling $50,000 from the state, will not file transcripts in Lacy's case until the next call of the third division will be made by the state court of appeals. When the Lacy case was called it was postponed until the next call because no transcripts were filed. The law gives 90 days in which to file transcripts, hence the attorneys still have time to file their appeal and if filed after the present call of the third division it will go over until the December term.

New High School Courses.

Work of revising the courses of study of the county high schools of the State was completed by the commission appointed by Superintendent of Education William E. Feagin. The special committee had been in session two days, and the new curriculum will be adopted next session.

Many important changes were made by the revision committee, and it is expected that the high schools of the State will be greatly benefited by the new courses of study. The revision specifies three courses, A. B and C, which are provided according to the needs of the students. Courses A and B will be used in high schools with three instructors and course C will be used in high schools with four and more instructors.

Superintendent Feagin believes that the new courses of study will greatly increase the efficiency of the high school in every community, inasmuch as the courses are now arranged with the idea of filling the requirements of all future vocations.

The agricultural course contemplates instruction in the art of farming. Another course is specially arranged for students who may follow the teaching profession, while the third provides sufficient preliminary instruction for students who may pursue classical or professional instructions in the colleges and universities of the country.

The work of revising the courses of study was performed by the following committee: J. B. Hobdy of Auburn, J. S. Thomas of the university, W. C. Blasingame, principal of the Marengo County High school; J. A. Moore, principal of the Walker County High school, and Oscar Horton, principal of the Marshall County High school.

Citronelle Applies for Bank.

Application for the establishment of a State bank at Citronelle, Mobile county, has been made to the State banking department by R. Dell Buono of that place. Mr. Buono informed the banking department that the new institution will be capitalized at $15,000, with citizens of Citronelle and Mobile county as stockholders.

Submits Report on Cullman Books.

Charles L. Townes, examiner of public accounts, filed in the office of Governor O'Neal a report of his examination of the books and accounts of the officials of Cullman county. Mr. Townes' report has not yet been made public, but it is understood that the books of the Cullman officials were practically correct.

Convict Paroled.

Because of tubercular trouble which rendered his physical condition critical, Coot Knight, a Choctaw county convict, has been paroled by Governor O'Neal. Knight has served two years of a ten year sentence for second degree murder.

To Observe Fortieth Anniversary.

Lawyers of Alabama who graduated at the University of Alabama Law School are planning to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of that school during the commencement exercises of the university, which will be held May 30 to June 3. All persons who ever attended the University Law School have been invited to attend the meeting by A. B. VandeGraaff, professor of law at the law school. Plans for bringing about improvements in the law school will be formulated at the meeting.

Affirm Pryor Case.

A death sentence imposed on Walter Pryor, a white man at Gadsden, was affirmed and Pryor was condemned to be hanged on June 26. Pryor, in April, 1913, shot and killed George Quest, foreman of the Alabama Power and Development Company near Gadsden. He was rushed to Birmingham for safe keeping and returned to Gadsden a month later for trial. Pryor was an employe of the Power company and his trouble with Quest grew out of a dispute which his wife had and which caused his discharge.

Bar Association Will Prosecute.

Lawyers of Alabama who have been charged with violations of the code of ethics of their profession will be vigorously prosecuted by the Central Council of the Alabama State Bar Association, according to an announcement made by Col. Alexander Troy, secretary of the association.

Evidence against several attorneys has been laid before the Central Council and the cases against the attorneys are now being outlined.

"We are determined to rid our profession in this state of its unworthy members," declared Colonel Troy. "For some time we have been receiving protests against the methods used by certain attorneys and have been making quiet investigations of the charges. In several cases we have found that the charges were based on facts and as a consequence we will prosecute to the full extent of the law."

Colonel Troy did not make public the names of the attorneys against whom the charges have been made, but it is understood that two of them reside in Birmingham.

Regulate Freight Rates.

Attorneys for five railroads appeared before the State Railroad Commission in answer to a citation issued by the commission requiring the railroads to show cause why reasonable freight rates should not be established on their lines in Alabama. The railroads are the Louisville & Nashville, Central of Georgia, Western of Alabama and Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis.

These citations were issued against the roads in connection with the signing af the recent agreement between the railroads and commission in which the railroads agreed to drop all litigation against the establishment of certain rates fixed by the commission. The passenger rate has been fixed at two and one-half cents a mile and the freight rates will be regulated by the commission after testimony has been taken.

Not only will the commission regulate the rate on 110 commodities, but will also take up any freight rates that are inequitable. The commission will go about the hearing of the freight rates in much the same manner that the testimony in the passenger rate cases was heard.

Charles Henderson, president of the commission, recently nominated for Governor, presided. Leon McCord and Frank N. Julian, associate commissioners, were both present.

Superintendents to Meet.

Conferences of county superintendents of education will be held in 13 cities of Alabama within the next 30 days for the purpose of discussing matters of great importance to these officials, according to an announcement made by W. F. Feagin, state superintendent of education.

Mr. Feagin has arranged an itinerary which includes all sections of the state and at the cities designated in this list he will meet and confer with the county superintendents.

Following is a list of the places where conferences will be held and the dates for the session: Dothan, Wednesday, May 27; Opelika, Wednesday, June 11; Union Springs, Saturday, June 13; Georgiana, Tuesday, June 16; Mobile, Wednesday, June 17; Selma Friday, June 19; Talladega, Tuesday, June 23; Gadsden, Wednesday, June 24; Birmingham, Thursday, June 25; Tuscaloosa, Monday, June 29; Decatur, Tuesday, June 30.

Waller Declines Marshalship.

When the official count of the votes cast in the primary May 11 declared him nominated sheriff of Montgomery county, W. R. Waller, recently appointed United States marshal for the Middle district of Alabama, wrote the department in Washington declining the office. This statement made by Mr. Waller throws new light on the situation and leaves the applications of a number of other Alabamians open for consideration.

Mr. Waller had stated during his campaign for sheriff that he would decline the marshalship if nominated in the primary, but after the primary he would give no statement in regard to the matter until the executive committee had made an official canvass of the votes. His appointment sent in by President Wilson several days ago was immediately affirmed by the Senate and the matter has been awaiting the decision of Mr. Waller.

Big Attendance Looked For.

DYNIMITERS MUST GO BACK TO JAIL

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS ENTERS ORDER—ATTORNEY FOR EXTENSION.

MUST REPORT ON JUNE 6

Order Practically Affects Only Twenty-four of Men Included, as Five Voluntarily Returned to Penitentiary.

Chicago.—The United States circuit court of appeals for the Seventh circuit entered an order remanding twenty-four men convicted of dynamite conspiracy back to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kas.

The convicted men were ordered to report either to the United States marshal at Chicao or to the warden of the penitentiary not later than June 6.

Presiding Judge Baker and Judges Seaman and Mack granted the men three additional weeks upon the earnest plea of Attorney Elijah N. Zoline, of counsel for the defense. He asked for sixty days.

Charles W. Miller, former district attorney of Indianapolis, who prosecuted the dynamite cases, and the new district attorney, Frank C. Dailey, objected to an extension of time.

The order of the court practically will affect only nineteen of the convicted men, as five of those whose cases were affirmed returned to the penitentiary voluntarily when the United States supreme court denied them a hearing on a writ of certiorari, and are now serving their terms.

ADRIFT AT SEA TWO WEEKS

Four Are Rescued From Columbian's Life Boat—Eleven Others Died From Exposure.

Halifax, N. S.—A brief wireless message received here told of the discovery by the United States revenue cutter Seneca of the third missing lifeboat of the Leland Line steamship Columbian, which was destroyed by fire in mid-Atlantic.

Of the fifteen men who scrambled over the side of the ill-fated liner into the third boat only four were alive when found by the Seneca. All the others had succumbed to the terrible privations to which they had been exposed during the two weeks when the steamship lanes of the North Atlantic were being scoured for some trace of the missing boat.

In the boat were First Officer Robert Teire, Oscar Kendall and Peter Bellanger, seamen, and Michael Ludwigsen, fireman.

These men were in a terriblei state of exhaustion when picked up. Half-crazed from thirst, hunger and exposure, they presented an awful sight when the stalwart bluejackets from the Seneca reached the side of the little craft.

GALVESTON HAS BIG FIRE

Nearly a Million Dollars' Worth of Cotton Destroyed in Fire at Planters' Compress Company.

Galveston, Tex.—Cotton valued at $900,000 was destroyed and one man killed in the burning of the west warehouse of the Merchants and Planters' Comyress company near the water front. An unidentified white man watching the fire was caught under a falling brick wall and injured so badly that he died while being taken to the hospital.

Eleven thousand bales of cotton were stored in the warehouse. The east warehouse, containing 10,000 bales, and the buildings housing all the machinery of the plant were probably saved by a strong east wind.

The fire had made considerable headway when discovered by a watchman, and for a time baffled the efforts of the entire fire department. Origin of the fire is unknown.

ORIENTAL LIMITED HELD UP

Masked Robbers Hold Up Train Near Rexford, Mont.—Little Valuable Loot Was Obtained.

Spokane, Wash.—Great Northern passenger train No. 1, the Oriental limited, was held up by two masked men near Rexford, Mont. The combination mail and baggage car was detached from the train and run four miles west of Rendo, where the car was rifled.

Little valuable loot was obtained by the bandits, as the registered pouches had been brought west earlier by the fast mail. As soon as the train was stopped the mail clerk and baggageman jumped, locked the doors and hid in the bushes. When the bandits could not open the doors they dynamited the car.

The train arrived here without the damaged car three hours late.

Seven years ago the Oriental limited was held up at Rondon and $40,000 in currency was obtained.

FAIL TO BREAK ROSE'S TALE

Bald-headed Informer Re-tells Story of Rosenthal's Death—Underworld Intrigue—Denies Charges.

New York.—"Bald Jack" Rose, chief witness for the prosecution at the second trial of Charles Becker, charged with being the instigator of the plot that resulted in the murder of Herman Rosenthal, came from the stand at the conclusion of five hours of relentless cross-examination bright-eyed and smiling. The bald-headed informer quietly and unfalteringly answered every question asked him by Martin T. Manton, chief of Becker's counsel. Even when Manton shouted accusations of murder at Rose and tried to make him admit that he had made his living by committing petty larcenies and by selling opium to the slaves of the habit of New York's Chinatown, the former gambler remained unperturbed.

Rose's expression never changed during all the grilling. The tone of his voice was neither raised nor lowered at any time. He reiterated his story of the underworld intrigue and murder with a calm and matter-of-fact air. He showed no fear, no emotion and no remorse except on one occasion. Then he said his conscience pricked him when he thought over how he had plotted to have Herman Rosenthal murdered.

During the examination Manton put questions to Rose which were designed to show that Rosenthal figured prominently in a gambler's war and was hated. Rose admitted that Sam Paul, a gambler, and Rosenthal had a filling out soon after the latter's house was raided. Rose also said Rosenthal hired "Spanish Louis" to kill Sam Paul. "Louie" failed to do it. He told Rosenthal, according to Rose, that Paul had given him $50 and that he wouldn't shoot a man who was so generous. Then, Rose said, Rosenthal hired "Bloody Mike" to kill "Spanish Louie." He did.

ARREST EIGHT IN FAMILY

Over $10,000 Worth of Merchandise Recovered—Great Shoplifting Scheme Is Exposed.

Pittsburgh.—With the arrest of eight persons, all closely related, and recovery of $10,000 worth of merchandise in the various homes of those in custody, the authorities believe they have broken up the greatest system of shoplifting ever conducted in this city. Those under arrest are Mrs. Anna Busch, Margaret Busch, Mrs. Angeline Bachman, Jacob Bachman, Christ Bebhart, Mrs. Sofia Gebhart, Fritz Valscaol and Melchon Gebhart.

The merchandise was found in eighteen large trunks. There were 1,000 pairs of shoes, 200 pieces of jewelry, statuary clocks, dozens of hatpins, 150 boys' suits, ladies' overcoats, skirts, silk undergarments and many other articles. The police say they have learned that the prisoners were about to ship the goods to Germany, where they intended to conduct a store.

WILSON DISCUSSES MEXICAN SITUATION

TELLS U. S. REPRESENTATIVES TO AWAIT PROPOSALS FROM A. B. C. ENVOYS.

HUERTA WILLING TO RESIGN

Mexican Delegates See Dictator's Elimination Is Essential to Peaceful Settlement.

Washington. — President Wilson told the American commissioners before leaving for the mediation conference at Niagara Falls, Ontario, that the United States government regards the settlement of the Mexican problem in a definite form as a prerequisite to the withdrawal of the American forces from Vera Cruz.

The president gave the American commissioners—Justice Lamar of the supreme court of the United States, Frederick W. Lehmann, former solicitor general and diplomatic secretary; H. Perceval Dodge—no specific instructions. He told them to place themselves in a receptive mood and await proposals from the three South American mediators. But at the same time he outlined to his representatives that peace in Mexico seemed to him to be conditioned on the elimination of the Huerta administration and the establishment in its place of a strong provisional government which would conduct an election, giving fair treatment to all factions and parties and guaranteeing, moreover a solution of the agrarian problem and other internal difficulties which have bred revolution in the southern republic during the last three years.

The president wishes the Mexican question settled on comprehensive lines that will take into account the economic principles for which Zapata in the south, as well as Carranza in the north, have been fighting and at the same time will conserve the rightful interests of the people in the territory now controlled by the Huerta government.

During the day a dispatch came to one of the foreign diplomats here from a diplomatic source in Mexico City stating that General Huerta was ready to resign and would permit his representatives at the mediation to eliminate hi mif it should become absolutely necessary. Intimations that have come from three Huerta delegates since their visit to this country showed that they had realized Huerta's elimination was regarded as essential to a settlement and knew from the outset that unless they came prepared to deal with this phase of the problem their efforts would be fruitless. The Huerta delegates, too, it is learned from persons who have talked with them, understand thoroughly that the scope of mediation now comprises the entire Mexican poblem.

They are said to be ready to recommend Huerta's retirement, but only on the condition that a definite understanding is reached on the kind of government that is to follow.

President Wilson in his final talk with the American commissioners, at which Secretary Bryan also was present, spoke hopefully of the mediation. He is earnestly desirous that it shall succeed and indicated that every power and legitimate influence at the disposal of the American government would be exerted to make it succeed. Though the constitutionalists have not yet agreed to take part in the mediation, one high administration official held out hopes of their ultimate participation, saying a misunderstanding which might be remedied in a short time was largely responsible for their failure to be represented at Niagara Falls.

The president laid before the commissioners the entire Mexican problem as he saw it.

TO PROBE FRANK CASE.

Georgia Judge Instructs Jury to Inquire Into Evidence.

Atlanta. — Inquiry into methods used in obtaining evidence in connection with the extraordinary motion for a new trial for Leo M. Frank was directed here by Judge Ben Hill in instructing the Fullton county grand jury.

The course followed by "certain detectives" in the case of the factory superintendent who is under sentence of death for the murder of Mary Phagan, the 14-year-old factory girl, were severely criticized by Judge Hill. He characterized the work of these "famous sleuths" as an obstruction to the administration of justice.

"I doubt the wisdom of allowing detectives from another State, whether they be noted, famous, or infamous, to come here and criticize our officers and our courts. We have no room here for such men—men who come posing as seeking the truth, when they are only seeking notoriety and money," said the judge.

The court told the grand jury that various witnesses in the case had repudiated the testimony given them at the trial of Frank and some later had made counter repudiations. A thorough investigation was ordered.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Wrandall, it appears, had led a gay life and neglected his wife. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Mrs. Sara Wrandall and Hetty attend the funeral of Challis Wrandall at the home of his parents. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, makes himself useful to Sara and becomes greatly interested in Hetty.

Sara and Hetty did not stay long in town. The newspapers announced the return of Challis Wrandall's widow and reporters sought her out for interviews. The old interest was revived and columns were printed about the murder at Burton's inn, with sharp editorial comments on the failure of the police to clear up the mystery.

"I shall ask Leslie down for the week-end," said Sara, the third day after their arrival in the country. The house was huge and lonely, and time hung rather heavily despite the glorious uplift of spring.

Hetty looked up quickly from her book. A look of dismay flickered in her eyes for an instant and then gave way to the calmness that had come to dwell in their depths of late. Her lips parted in the sudden impulse to cry out against the plan, but she checked the words. For a moment her dark, questioning eyes studied the face of her benefactress; then, as if nothing had been revealed to her, she allowed her gaze to drift pensively out toward the sunset sea.

They were sitting on the broad verandah overlooking the sound. The dusk of evening was beginning to steal over the earth. She laid her book aside.

"Will you telephone in to him after dinner, Hetty?" went on Sara, after a long period of silence.

Again Hetty started. This time a look of actual pain flashed in her eyes.

"Would you a note by post be more certain to find him in the—" she began hurriedly.

"I dislike writing notes," said Sara calmly. "Of course, dear, if you feel that you'd rather not telephone him, I can—"

"I dare say I am finicky, Sara," apologized Hetty in quick contrition. "Of course he is your brother. I should remem—"

"My brother-in-law, dear," said Sara, a trifle too literally.

"He will come often to your house," went on Hetty rapidly. "I must make the best of it."

"He is your friend, Hetty. He admires you."

"I cannot see him through your eyes, Sara."

"But he is charming and agreeable, you'll admit," persisted the other.

"He is very kind, and he is devoted to you. I should like him for that."

"You have no cause for disliking him."

"I do not dislike him. I—I am—Oh, you always have been so thoughtful, so considerate, Sara, I can't understand your failing to see how hard it is for me to—to—well, to endure his open-hearted friendship."

Sara was silent for a moment. "You draw a pretty fine line, Hetty," she said gently.

Hetty flushed. "You mean that there is little to choose between wife and brother? That isn't quite fair. You know everything, he knows nothing. I wear a mask for him; you have seen into the very heart of me. It isn't the same."

Sara came over and stood beside the girl's chair. After a moment of indecision she laid her hand on Hetty's shoulder. The girl looked up, the ever-recurring question in her eyes.

"We haven't spoken of—of these things in many months, Hetty."

"Not since Mrs. Wrandall and Vivian came to Nice. I was upset—dreadfully upset then, Sara. I don't know how I managed to get through with it."

"But you managed it," pronounced Sara. Her fingers seemed to tighten suddenly on the girl's shoulder. "I think we were quite wonderful, both of us. It wasn't easy for me."

"Why did we come back to New York, Sara?" burst out Hetty, clasping her friend's hand as if suddenly spurred by terror. "We were happy over there. And free!"

"Listen, my dear," said Sara, a hard note growing in her voice: "this is my home. I do not love it, but I can see no reason for abandoning it. That is why we came back to New York."

Hetty pressed her friend's hand to her lips. "Forgive me," she cried impulsively. "I shouldn't have complained. It was detestable."

"Besides," went on Sara evenly, "you were quite free to remain on the other side. I left it to you."

"You gave me a week to decide," said Hetty in a hurried manner of speaking. "I—I took but twenty-four hours—less than that. Over night, you remember. I love you, Sara. I could not leave you. All that night I could feel you pulling at my heart strings, pulling me closer, and holding me. You were in your room, I in mine, and yet all the time you seemed to be bending over me in the darkness, urging me to stay with you and love you and be loved by you. It couldn't have been a dream."

"It was not a dream," said Sara, with a queer smile.

"You do love me?" tensely.

"I do love you," was the firm answer. Sara was staring across the water, her eyes big and as black as night itself. She seemed to be looking far beyond the misty lights that bobbled with nearby schooners, far beyond the yellow mass on the opposite shore where a town lay cradled in the shadows, far into the fast darkening sky that came up like a wall out of the east.

Hetty's fingers tightened in a warmer clasp. Unconsciously perhaps, Sara's grip on the girl's shoulder tightened also; unconsciously, for her thoughts were far away. The younger woman's pensive gaze rested on the peaceful waters below, taking in the slow approach of the fog that was soon to envelop the land. Neither spoke for many minutes: inscrutable thinkers, each a prey to thoughts that leaped backward to the beginning and took up the puzzle at its inception.

"I wonder—" began Hetty, her eyes narrowing with the intensity of thought. She did not complete the sentence.

Sara answered the unspoken question. "It will never be different from what it is now, unless you make it so."

Hetty started. "How could you have known what I was thinking?" she cried in wonder.

"It is what you are always thinking, my dear. You are always asking yourself when will I turn against you."

"Sara!"

"Your own intelligence should supply the answer to all the questions you are asking of yourself. It is too late for me to turn against you." She abruptly removed her hand from Hetty's shoulder and walked to the edge of the veranda. For the first time, the English girl was conscious of pain. She drew her arm up and cringed. She pulled the light scarf about her bare shoulders.

The butler appeared in the doorway. "The telephone, if you please, Miss Castleton. Mr. Leslie Wrandall is calling."

The girl stared. "For me, Watson?"

"Yes, miss."

Hetty had risen, visibly agitated.

"What shall I say to him, Sara?" she cried.

"Apparently it is he who has something to say to you," said the other, still smiling. "Wait and see what it is. Please don't neglect to say that we'd like to have him over Sunday."

"A box of flowers has just come up from the station for you, miss," said Watson.

Hetty was very white as she passed into the house. Mrs. Wrandall resumed her contemplation of the fog-screened sound.

"Shall I fetch you a wrap, ma'am?" asked Watson, hesitating.

"I am coming in, Watson. Open the box of flowers for Miss Castleton. Is there a fire in the library?"

"Yes, Mrs. Wrandall."

"Mr. Leslie will be out on Saturday. Tell Mrs. Conkling."

"The evening train, ma'am?"

"No. The eleven-thirty. He will be here for luncheon."

When Hetty hurried into the library a few minutes later, her manner was that of one considerably disturbed by something that has transpired almost on the moment. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes were reflectors of a no uncertain distress of mind. Mrs. Wrandall was standing before the fireplace, an exquisite figure in the slinky black evening gown which she affected in these days. Her perfectly modelled neck and shoulders gleamed like pink marble in the reflected glow of the burning logs. She wore no jewelry, but there was a single white rose in her dark hair, where it had been placed by the whimsical Hetty an hour earlier as they left the dinner table.

"He is coming out on the eleven-thirty, Sara," said the girl nervously, "unless you will send the motor in for him. The body of his car is being changed and it's in the shop. He must have been jesting when he said he would pay for the petrol—I should have said gasoline."

Sara laughed. "You will know him better, my dear," she said. "Leslie is very light-hearted."

"He suggested bringing a friend," went on Hetty hurriedly. "A Mr. Booth, the portrait painter."

"I met him in Italy. He is charming. You will like him, too, Hetty." The emphasis did not escape notice.

"It seems that he is spending a fortnight in the village, this Mr. Booth, painting spring lambs for rest and recreation, Mr. Leslie says."

"Then he is at our very gates," said Sara, looking up suddenly.

"I wonder if he can be the man I saw yesterday at the bridge," mused Hetty. "Is he tall?"

"I really can't say. He's rather vague. It was six or seven years ago."

"It was left that Mr. Wrandall is to come out on the eleven-thirty," explained Hetty. "I thought you wouldn't like sending either of the motors in."

"And Mr. Booth?"

"We are to send for him after Mr. Wrandall arrives. He is stopping at the inn, wherever that may be."

"Poor fellow!" sighed Sara, with a grimace. "I am sure he will like us immensely if he has been stopping at the inn."

Hetty stood staring down at the blazing logs for a full minute before giving expression to the thought that troubled her.

"Sara," she said, meeting her friend's eyes with a steady light in her own, "why did Mr. Wrandall ask for me instead of you? It is you he is coming to visit, not me. It is your house. Why should—"

"My dear," said Sara glibly, "I am merely his sister-in-law. It wouldn't be necessary to ask me if he should come. He knows he is welcome."

"Then why should he feel called upon to—"

"Some men like to telephone, I suppose," said the other coolly.

"I wonder if you will ever understand how I feel about—about certain things, Sara."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, his very evident interest in me," cried the girl hotly. "He sends me flowers—this is the second box this week—and he is so kind, so very friendly, Sara, that I can't bear it—I really can't."

Mrs. Wrandall stared at her. "You can't very well send him about his business," she said, "unless he becomes more than friendly. Now, can you?"

"But it seems so—so horrible, so beastly," groaned the girl.

Sara faced her squarely. "See here, Hetty," she said levelly, "we have made our bed, you and I. We must lie in it—together. If Leslie Wrandall chooses to fall in love with you, that is his affair, not ours. We must face every condition. In plain words, we must play the game."

"What could be more appalling than to have him fall in love with me?"

"The other way 'round would be more dramatic, I should say."

"Good God Sara!" cried the girl in horror. "How can you even speak of such a thing?"

"After all, why shouldn't—" began Sara, but stopped in the middle of her suggestion, with the result that it had its full effect without being uttered in so many cold-blooded words. The girl shuddered.

I wish, Sara, you would let me unburden myself completely to you," she pleaded, seizing her friend's hands. "You have forbidden me—"

Sara jerked her hands away. Her eyes flashed. "I do not want to hear it," she cried fiercely. "Never, never! Do you understand? It is your secret. I will not share it with you. I should hate you if I knew everything. As it is, I love you because you are a woman who suffered at the hand of one who made me suffer. There is nothing more to say. Don't bring up the subject again. I want to be your friend for ever, not your confidante. There is a distinction. You may be able to see how very marked it is in our case, Hetty. What one does not know, seldom hurts."

"But I want to justify myself—"

"It isn't necessary," cut in the other so peremptorily that the girl's eyes spread into a look of anger. Whereupon Sara Wrandall threw her arm about her and drew her down beside her in the chaise-lounge. "I didn't mean to be harsh," she cried. "We must not speak of the past, that's all. The future is not likely to hurt us, dear. Let us avoid the past."

"The future!" sighed the girl, staring blankly before her.

"To appreciate what it is to be," said the other, "you have but to think of what it might have been."

"I know," said Hetty, in a low voice. "And yet I sometimes wonder if—"

Sara interrupted. "You are paying me, dear, instead of the law," she said gently. "I am not a harsh creditor, am I?"

"My life belongs to you. I give it cheerfully, even gladly."

"So you have said before. Well, if it belongs to me, you might at least permit me to develop it as I would any other possession. I take it as an investment. It will probably fluctuate."

"Now you are jesting!"

"Perhaps," said Sara laconically.

The next morning Hetty set forth for her accustomed tramp over the roads that wound through the estate. Sara, the American, dawdled at home, resenting the chill spring drizzle that did not in the least discourage the Englishwoman.

She came to the bridge by the mill, long since deserted and now a thing of ruin and decay. A man in knickerbockers stood leaning against the rail, idly gazing down at the trickling stream below. The brier pipe that formed the circuit between hand and lips sent up soft blue coils to float away on the drizzle.

She passed behind him, with a single furtive, curious glance at his handsome, undisturbed profile, and in that glance recognized him as the man she had seen the day before.

When she was a dozen rods away, the tall man turned his face from the stream and sent after her the long-restrained look. There was something akin to cautiousness in that look of his, as if he were afraid that she might turn her head suddenly and catch him at it. Something began stirring in his heart, the nameless something that awakens when least expected. He felt the subtle, sweet femininity of her as she passed. It lingered with him as he looked.

She turned the bend in the road a hundred yards away. For many minutes he studied the stream below without really seeing it. Then he straightened up, knocked the ashes from his pipe, and set off slowly in her wake, although he had been walking in quite the opposite direction when he came to the bridge—and on a mission of some consequence, too.

There was the chance that he would meet her coming back.

CHAPTER VII.

A Faithful Crayon-Point.

Leslie Wrandall came out on the eleven-thirty. Hetty was at the station with the motor, a sullen resentment in her heart, but a welcoming smile on her lips. The sun shone brightly. The sound glared with the white of reflected skies.

"I thought of catching the eight o'clock," he cried enthusiastically, as he dropped his bag beside the motor in order to reach over and shake hands with her. "That would have gotten me here hours earlier. The difficulty was that I didn't think of the eight o'clock until I awoke at nine."

"And then you had the additional task of thinking about breakfast," said Hetty, but without a trace of sarcasm in her manner.

"I never think of breakfast," said he amiably. "I merely eat it. Of course, it's a task to eat it sometimes, but—well, how are you? How do you like it out here?"

He was beside her on the broad seat, his face beaming, his gay little mustache pointing upward at the ends like oblique brown exclamation points, so expansive was his smile.

"I adore it," she replied, her own smile growing in response to his. It was impossible to resist the good nature of him. She could not dislike him, even though she dreaded him deep down in her heart. Her blood was hot and cold by turns when she was with him, as her mind opened and shut to thoughts pleasant and unpleasant with something of the regularity of a fish's gills in breathing.

"When I get to heaven I mean to have a place in the country the year round," he said conclusively.

"And if you don't get to heaven?"

"I suppose I'll take a furnished flat somewhere."

Sara was waiting for them at the bottom of the terrace as they drove up. He leaped out and kissed her hand.

"Much obliged," he murmured, with a slight twist of his head in the direction of Hetty, who was giving orders to the chauffeur.

"You're quite welcome," said Sara, with a smile of understanding. "She's lovely, isn't she?"

"Enchanting!" said he, almost too loudly.

Hetty walked up the long ascent ahead of them. She did not have to look back to know that they were watching her with unfaltering interest. She could feel their gaze.

"Absolutely adorable," he added, enlarging his estimate without really being aware that he voiced it.

Sara shot a look at his rapt face, and turned her own away to hide the queer little smile that flickered briefly and died away.

Hetty, pleading a sudden headache, declined to accompany them later on in the day when they set forth in the car to "pick up" Brandon Booth at the inn. They were to bring him over, bag and baggage, to stay till Tuesday.

"He will be wild to paint her," declared Leslie when they were out of sight around the bend in the road. He had waved his hat to Hetty just before the trees shut off their view of her. She was standing at the top of the steps beside one of the tall Italian vases.

"I've never seen such eyes," he exclaimed.

"She's a darling," said Sara and changed the subject, knowing full well that he would come back to it before long.

"I'm mad about her," he said simply, and then, for some unaccountable reason, gave over being loquacious and lapsed into a state of almost lugubrious quiet.

She glanced at his face, furtively at first, as if uncertain of his mood, then with a prolonged stare that was frankly curious and amused.

"Don't lose your head, Leslie," she said softly, almost purringly.

He started. "Oh, I say, Sara, I'm not likely to—"

"Stranger things have happened," she interrupted, with a shake of her head. "I can't afford to have you making love to her and getting tired of the game, as you always do, dear boy, just as soon as you find she's in love with you. She is too dear to be hurt in that way. You mustn't—"

"Good Lord!" he cried; "what a bounder you must take me for! Why, if I thought she'd— But nonsense! Let's talk about something else. Yourself, for instance."

She leaned back with a smile on her lips, but not in her eyes; and drew a long, deep breath. He was hard hit. That was what she wanted to know.

They found Booth at the inn. He was sitting on the old-fashioned porch, surrounded by bags and boys. As he climbed into the car after the bags, the boys grinned and jingled the coins in their pockets and ventured, almost in unison, the intelligence that they would all be there if he ever came back again. Big and little, they had transported his easel and canvasses from place to place for three weeks or more and his departure was to be regarded as a financial calamity.

Leslie, perhaps in the desire to be alone with his reflections, sat forward with the chauffeur, and paid little or no heed to the unhappy person's comments on the vile condition of all village thoroughfares, New York city included.

"And you painted those wretched little boys instead of the beautiful things that nature provides for us out here, Mr. Booth?" Sara was saying to the artist beside her.

"Of course I managed to get a bit of nature, even at that," said he, with a smile. "Boys are pretty close to earth, you know. To be perfectly honest, I did it in order to get away from the eminently beautiful but unnatural things I'm required to paint at home."

"I suppose we will see you at the Wrandall place this summer."

"I'm coming out to paint Leslie's sister in June, I believe. And that reminds me, I came upon an uncommonly pretty girl not far from your place the other day—and yesterday, as well—some one I've met before, unless I'm vastly mistaken. I wonder if you know your neighbors well enough—by sight, at least—to venture a good guess as to who I mean."

She appeared thoughtful.

"Oh, there are dozens of pretty girls in the neighborhood. Can't you remember where you met—" She stopped suddenly, a swift look of apprehension in her eyes.

He failed to note the look or the broken sentence. He was searching in his coat pocket for something. Selecting a letter from the middle of a small pocket, he held it out to her.

"I sketched this from memory. She posed all too briefly for me," he said.

On the back of the envelope was a remarkably good likeness of Hetty Castleton, done broadly, sketchily, with a crayon point, evidently drawn with haste while the impression was fresh, but long after she had passed out of range of his vision.

"I know her," said Sara quietly. "It's very clever, Mr. Booth."

"There is something hauntingly familiar about it," he went on, looking at the sketch with a frown of perplexity. "I've seen her somewhere, but for the life of me I can't place her. Perhaps in a crowded street, or the theater, or a railway train—just a fleeting glimpse, you know. But in any event I got a lasting impression. Queer things like that happen, don't you think so?"

Mrs. Wrandall leaned forward and spoke to Leslie. As he turned, she handed him the envelope, without comment.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed.

"Mr. Booth is a mind reader," she explained. "He has been reading your thoughts, dear boy."

Booth understood, and grinned.

"You don't mean to say—" began the dumfounded Leslie, still staring at the sketch. "Upon my word, it's a wonderful likeness, old chap. I didn't know you'd ever met her."

"Met her?" cried Booth, an amiable conspirator. "I've never met her."

"See here, don't try anything like that on me. How could you do this if you've never seen—"

"He is a mind reader," cried Sara.

"Haven't you been thinking of her steadily for—well, we'll say ten minutes?" demanded Booth.

Leslie reddened. "Nonsense!"

"That's a mental telepathy sketch," said the artist, complacently.

"When did you do that?"

"This instant, you might say. See! Here is the crayon point. I always carry one around with me for just such—"

"All right," said Leslie blandly, at the same time putting the envelope in his own pocket; "we'll let it go at that. If you're so clever at mind pictures you can go to work and make another for yourself. I mean to keep this one."

"I say," began Booth, dismayed.

"One's thoughts are his own," said the happy possessor of the sketch. He turned his back on them.

Sara was contrite. "He will never give it up," she lamented.

"Is he really hard hit?" asked Booth in surprise.

"I wonder," mused Sara.

"Of course he's welcome to the sketch, confound him."

"Would you like to paint her?"

"Is this a commission?"

"Hardly. I know her, that's all. She is a very dear friend."

"My heart is set on painting some one else, Mrs. Wrandall."

"Oh!"

"When I know you better I'll tell you who she is."

"Could you make a sketch of this other one from memory?" she asked lightly.

"I think so. I'll show you one this evening. I have my trusty crayon about me always, as I said before."

Later in the afternoon Booth came face to face with Hetty. He was descending the stairs and met her coming up. The sun streamed in through the tall windows at the turn in the stairs, shining full in her uplifted face as she approached him from below. He could not repress the start of amazement. She was carrying a box of roses in her arms—red roses whose stems protruded far beyond the end of the pasteboard box and reeked of a fragrant dampness.

She gave him a shy, startled smile as she passed. He had stopped to make room for her on the turn. Somewhat dazed, he continued on his way down the steps, to suddenly remember with a twinge of dismay that he had not returned her polite smile, but had stared at her with most unblinking fervor. In no little shame and embarrassment he sent a swift glance over his shoulder. She was walking close to the banister rail on the floor above. As he glanced up their eyes met, for she too had turned to peer.

Leslie Wrandall was standing near the foot of the stairs. There was an eager, exalted look in his face that slowly gave way to well-assumed unconcern as his friend came upon him and grasped his arm.

Do you know who the "Con Man is? Well he's that well dressed smooth talking fellow who came along and offered you a whole lot for nearly nothing; and went away with something that he got for nothing-but talk. If you have money to invest, see your dealer about one of those time and labor-saving cultivators. —Progressive Farmer.

Mr. A. L. French says in last weeks Progressive Farmer, "I trust the time will come some day when the farmer's time will not be taken up by every traveling fakir who is going about the country trying to make a living without work. Set the dog on them. And if you feel like giving somebody something just hand it to some hard working widow, in your own community, who is working to support her children decently," with which we thoroughly agree, as it is, the farmers have all kinds of fakirs to contend with all of which are ready to condemn the last fellow as such while assuring you thst his is the best ever and that he thinks a great deal of the dear overworked and underpaid farmer. The best policy is to steer clear of all strangers. Anything that you actually need can be bought eirect or from your local merchant or your business agent, from a fruit tree to traction engines. Try it and you will be the richer.

SOME VALUABLE STATISTICS

At the recent County Seventh Grade rural school commencement held at Thorsby, Prof. W. T. Bean delivered an address on "The Educotional Outlook of Chilton County," some mention of which has heretofore been made in the columns of this paper.

But the previous discussion of his address did not afford an opportunity to bring out all the valuable things he said, and therefore we shall endeavor to give some more of the facts which he presented, in the hope that they will interest our readers, and have a tendency to stimulate our citizens to more zealous efforts in improving our school conditions.

What we want to present here is a group of statistics given out by Prof. Bean in his address. Anyone who reads them can readily see the conditions they portray. Some of them, we must admit, are rather bad, and greatly need the application of some remedy. But they are borne out by records obtained at the Superintendents office, and we present them below without any further comment:

There are 83 teachers in the county; 40 tnird grade; 5 first grade; 22 of the third grade teachers came from other counties; 5 second grade came from another county. 16 schools in the county have two teachers; 1 school has three teachers; 51 schools have one teacher. 32 per cent of the enrollment of the schools are in first grade, 5 per cent are in the seventh grade, and 1 per cent in the eighth. 16 of the two room schools passed 92 per cent of the graduates of the seventh grade examination; 51 of the one room schools passed 8 per cent of the graduates. 26 schools have patented desks; 24 nicely painted schoolhouses in the county; 15 fairly comfortable; average monthly salary of teachers, $49.50.

We read with interest an editorial in The Progressive Farmer dealing with the conditions that confront the sugar planting of Louisiana under the free trade tariff. It says that the Louisiana planter will have to compete on terms of equality with the products in tropical countries where, on account of climatic conditions, sugar may be produced at a considerably less cost per pound than can ever be the case in Louisiana. Continuing it says there is consequently much speculative anxiety concerning the future of sugar in the United Stated. We agree with the writer in the Progressive Farmer that such conditions are highly regretable, and probably the sugar planters themselves regard the situation in much the same light. But the point of the article above referred to that is most interesting to us is the way he handles the matter of overcoming these regrettable conditions. It is a fact that at this stage nothing is left to be done but make the best of conditious as they exist. Will the sugar industry be replaced by some other mode of earning a livlihood for the yast multitude which has heretofore depended upon it for their existance? "The matter of obliterating an industry, and replacing it with something entirely new and untried is the work of a generation, and the changes that are necessary will come slowly, and painfully, with many a dismal failure by the wayside," says the Progressive Farmer again

Indeed the solation of the problem is one of dire speculation, and holds an outcome of the gravest encertainty for the man who must depend upon it, and hope to find in it some way of making a living for himself and his family. But we would like to call the attention of the Progressive Farmer to one point which it failed to mention in its discussion, and a point which, in our opinion, is a salient one, viz: The whole blooming trouble taken in a word, is a result of the workings of the glorions and harmonious principles of the Democratic national platform which our southern beople fought for so zealously when they placed Woodrow in the President's chair. It is one of those phases of universal peace and prosperity which was assured every section of the country, but which has resulted in such instances as the closing of many workshops of the North and East, the laying off of thousands of workmen by the railroads, and the disbanding of heretofore fertile and valuable sugar lands, over which every instance it is grieving.

IN MEMORIAM

Some poet in writing of the suddenness with which a man ascends to the universal respect and admiration of his fellows after death, and the praise which his life draws from them, does so in the following words:

"I've noticed when a fellow dies,
no matter what he's been—
A saintly chap or one whose life was darkly steeped in sin—
His friends forget the better words they spoke but yesterday,
And now they find a multitude of pretty things to say".

The subject of this brief sketch was a man, whose likeness was present on the first page of this paper. He was not "a saintly chap," nor "one whose life was darkly steeeped in sin." He was a mere man, and therefore, like the rest of us, had faults. Since faults are to all of us a grevious thing, we should try to forget them, and eliminate their memory from our lives. We can do so only by giving more earnest attention to the good. To this man especially we owe a deep debt of gratitude, and in the hope that we may honor his memory by so doing, it is that we wish to kindly remember him to our readers.

Frank Crichton, founder of "The Banner", and for twenty-one years its sole proprietor, was an Englishman by birth, his native home being in London. He was educated in the schools of the old country, and at the age of sixteen took to the sea. At the mast he made a double circuit of the globe, deserting it in New York to take up the "art preservative of arts". He remained at his trade in New York for two years, and came to Birmingham, where he continued in that occupation. In 1893 he settled in Clanton, formed a partnership with Mr. T. H. White in publishing "The Banner," and it was there that he began the career that made him a favorite among the people of this county. Soon he acquired complete control of "The Banner," and continued its publication till the consolidation of "The Union," and "The Banner," in 1912. During the last two years of his life his health was very poor, and did not permit active work, but he held an interest in "The Union-Banner" till his death, which occurred on May 19th, 1913, one year ago.

Mr. Crichton during his lifetime, traveled to all parts of the world. There was scarcely a land under civilization but that he, at some time, visited it. During all his travels he was a close observer of things about him, and he derived great benefit from his experiences. Few men of his age knew more of the world and its inhabitants.

As a citizen he enjoyed the confidence of his fellows, and the honesty and sincerity of his heart displayed through the columns of his paper, won for him a place of esteem among the people of the entire county. At all times they gave ear to his word and respected his position. Many hearts will remember him with deepest feeling of respect and gratitude, and many who knew and associated with him will rise in unison to that familiar plan "Peace be to his a

SEED OF TROUBLE

No longer does fraternal peace and harmony dwell at the Capital at Washington. The brotherly relations that should exist between the two national legislative bodies are rent and torn asunder. The dogs of war have freightened away the dove of peace from its former place of abode. The House and the Senate do not speak as they pass. The trouble is over what the House considers a dasterdly blow struck by the Senate.

Taking advantage of a temporary shortage in the supply of canal tolls oratory, the Senate of Saturday got to work on the agricultural appropriation bill. In an enthusiastic moment of economy it voted to discontinue the practice of distributing Government seeds. It refused to authorize any appropriation for this purpose for the next year, so unless that august legislative body relents or recents, after the first of July the franked mail pouches of members of Congress will be as free from seed as the White House from asked-for adv

This action is not only a blow to the House, it is a calamnity. It is the House that gets the practical benefit from the seed distribution. The Senate considers itself too dignified to get mixed up in such tiny affairs as seeds. Besides, no Senator coul take care of a whole State in this manner. But a member of the House can and does take care of his district. So long has it been the practice of the Congressman, that now it is confidently expected of him, and garden and field have fallen into the habit of waiting the arrival of these franked packages from the member at Washington.

It is a condition, not a theory that confronts the House. How is the constituent at home to be kept in line? No amount of printed matter can take the vacant chair at the fireside. The sending of a continuous procession of Government publications will not do it. Copies of speeches of statesmen at Washington will fall on barren ground. Printed bursts of eloquence long ago lost their charm for the man at home. Those thrilling pages in which the Congressman "points with pride" or "views with alarm" are no longer things to conjure with.

But the packages of seeds were always welcome. They formed the connecting link betweeu the Congressman and his district. They proved that the constituent lived in the memory of the man who represented him at Washington. They were a source of joy to all except the mail carriers who had to deliver them. Their appearance in all parts of the land were as regular as that of the almanac seasons.

The reason given by the Senate for this outrage upon their brethern in the House is economy of Government money. But perhaps, there is something deeper and more subtle in their action. The Senators may think that enough seed is being sown by this Administration in another form. There is Mr. Bryan, sowing the seeds of peace and inspired moral teaching in the Chautauqua soil. There is Mr. Redfield constantly at work in the planting of reasons why prosperity caused by a protective tariff is a grievous thing, and that it is nobler to have bad times under a low tariff than good times under a law that protects both income and wages.

Vice-President Marshall is also a sower of words. In his oratorical expeditions he is busier than any bee ever dared to be. He is telling the people of the country how to live. His voice is ever at the disposal of his fellowman. And now Secretary Wilson has gone into the sowing business, and is on a tour to expound his ideas of just how industrial peace can be brought about. The Senate may very likely have feared that this industry of the Administration, the only industry that it has really helped, would be injured by the competition brought about the sowing of real seed. So the action may have a much broader meaning than the narrow one of the saving of money.—Philadelphia Press.

What Would Have Happened?

If steam had not been discovered and made to do the will of man?

If wild water-horses had not been harnessed with electric light and power wires?

If gasolene had not been made to form explosive sprays to drive automobiles?

If ether waves had not been utilized to carry wireless messages?

Nothing would have happened. Civilization would have remained stationary, or if it moved at all the movement would have been a snail's pace.

Instead of which millions of dollars of development has resulted. Human intercourse has been productive of happiness. Imagination has been aroused and ambition stirred to action. There is no truth in "it can't be done."

Men who have accomplished things have encountered many obstacles. They have fought down doubt, scorn, distrust, opposition. But the will to do, and the inspiration of right has carried them forward to success.

The L. & N. has accomplished much in the interest of the general public good, and will accomplish much more. Many people realize that its efforts are beneficial, just as people who used to laugh and sneer at "horseless carriages" now pay large sums for automobiles; just as people who thought the Wright Brothers were crazy now place much faith in flying machines; just as people who once scorned wireless now honor it for saving thousands of lives at sea.

We do not seek your co-operation in upbuilding and enriching the country because that is the course of least resistance. We seek it because it is the surest, the quickest way to prosperity for both you and us. In seeking it we ask you to think seriously on what would have happened if the L. & N. had not carried forward its work of development in the face of all opposition.

Having thought of that, picture to your mind's eye what will happen in the future if that work continues and is carried to success.

And it will be. We ask you to join with us and the thousands of progressive citizens who share in it.

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY.

The State of Alabama, Chilton County, Circuit Court of said County and State, Spring 1914 Term.

To the Hon. W. W. Pearson, Judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit:

We, the Grand Jury, duly empanelled and sworn at the Spring Term, 1914 of the Circuit Court of Chilton County, Alabama, beg leave to submit this our final report:

We have investigated 83 alleged violations of the law and have returned unto your honor's Court 40 indictments.

THE PROHIBITION LAW.

Many witnesses were summoned before the grand jury and examined as to violations of the prohibition law. The prevailing idea with the people in supporting the liquor traffic is highly insufficient to surpress the unlawful sale of whiskey in Chilton County. The indiscriminate summoning of witnesses, whose everready answer "I ordered it," or "I don't know," only entails much expense to the County, and resulting in but few indictments. We firmly believe that, with proper co-operation on the part of our reputable citizenship, this evil (the traffic in liquor) can, in a large manner, be eradicated. But it cannot be done by the indiscriminate summoning of witnesses before the Grand Juries. We are of the opinion that the illegal sale of whiskey is on the decrease in Chilton County. We also ask that the intelligent citizenship join us in our effort to stamp out the great evil.

COUNTY OFFICERS, BOOKS AND BONDS.

We find the books of all county officers neatly kept. In view of the fact that your honor charged that it was not necessary, we did not make a thorough examination as to exactness of the books of the County Officers. We find the bonds of all the County Officers ample in their security.

COUNTY PROPERTY

We find the jail clean, well kept and the prisoners properly cared for. At the Court House we find everything in good condition, with the exception of a few minor repairs, which the Judge of Probate has assured us will receive immediate attention. We also commend the County Commissioners and Judge of Probate for the concrete work around the Court House, which is nearing completion. We further recommend that the office of the County Superintendent of Education be equipped with better furniture.

THE COUNTY POOR.

A Committee of this Grand Jury has visited the poor house and find therein 22 inmates, all white. They are very well cared for and seem to have comfortable and clean quarters. We further recommend that the County Commissioners allow the inmates of the poor house 30 cents per head, per day for keeping.

COUNTY ROADS.

We find many of the County Roads in good condition, and practically all of them in a better condition than heretofore known We also wish to commend the Board of County Commissioners and Judge of Probate for the work they are accomplishing along the lines of road building. Why the Haynes develops more than its rated horsepower

HAYNES "SIX" 65 H. P.

The Haynes motor is built in the Haynes factory. Elwood Haynes, President of the Company—inventor, metallurgist—passes on all metals used in its construction.

The crankshaft, camshaft, cylinders, and, in fact, all vital parts are made by Haynes experts; each part is subjected to the most rigid test and inspection before being built into the car.

All moving parts on the

HAYNES

America's First Car

including the pistons, connecting rods, crankshafts and flywheel, are accurately balanced.

The scleroscope is used to test all parts that have been heat-treated, to insure the proper degree of hardness and to detect defective material.

Every magneto, every carburetor, every starting motor and lighting generator—every unit of the car—receives a careful, scrupulous test.

The transmission shafts are mounted on Timken bearings, which give a sturdy construction and reduce friction to the minimum. The axles likewise are designed to overcome friction without sacrificing strength.

The design is so well balanced that the car weighs practically the same at each wheel.

That's why the Haynes develops more than its rated horsepower.

That's why it has unusual hill-climbing ability.

That's why the Haynes has enjoyed uninterrupted success for twenty-one years.

The Haynes "Four," 48 dynamometer horsepower, 118 inch wheelbase...$1785 and $1985
The Haynes "Six," 65 dynamometer horsepower, 130 inch wheelbase...$2500 and $2700

The BACKYARD FARMER

By PROF. J. WILLARD BOLTE

(Copyright, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE RABBIT HUTCH AND THE RABBIT.

Wild rabbits live in warrens and tame rabbits live in hutches in England. Over here the wild ones live in burrows, and the tame ones in a soap box or a box stall or any other old place the small boy can rig up for them.

Every right-minded boy loves rabbits, especially white ones with red eyes and a nose that wriggles all of the time. Lots and lots of boys never know the pleasure of having some rabbits of their own to care for and play with and gloat over. A white rabbit is worth more to the average boy's happiness than a thousand dollars are to his old dad, and if you want that boy of yours to have all the pleasure that youth should bring to him, get him a pair of rabbits this spring and watch him enjoy them.

Of course, the rabbits may, and probably will, have a hard time of it. They'll go hungry part of the time and if he is not careful a cat or a terrier may get at them, but these things are part of the bunny's life and the bunny ought to be part of the boy's life as well.

Distinctly do I remember my delight over four tiny white baby rabbits that I brought home one day. It took more than moral suasion to prevent me from taking them to bed with me that night, but I was finally induced to house them in an empty stall in the barn. I fenced in the entrance with chicken wire and the tiny white things went through it like quicksilver through a tin horn. They were finally captured and blocked in with some boxes. When I went out to the barn before breakfast the next morning I found a happy looking fox terrier inside the pen with three dead bunnies. I never have cared for fox terriers to this day, but I learned then that rabbits must have a fence on top as well as around them.

A box stall makes a dandy rabbit pen. Lay some boxes on the floor with little doors cut in one end and cover the whole floor with a foot of dry straw, having holes down to the box entrances. Keep their water in a self feeding chicken fountain and tell the boy to give them all they will eat of whole corn and oats once a day. A few cabbage or lettuce leaves, a carrot or two and a handful of clover hay will keep them fat and happy.

They increase like compound interest. I started in with two one spring and sold forty-eight the next spring.

THE CITY HEN HOUSE.

The hen house for the city or suburban flock of hens must receive more attention than the one used on the farm for several reasons. In the first place, the hens are much more closely confined and the sanitary features must be very carefully considered. There are usually more hens to a given area in the house and yard, hence both must be kept cleaner than larger quarters need be, and if this work is to be done properly the house must be arranged so that the work of cleaning can be done without much inconvenience, or it will not be done.

Again, because of the close proximity of neighbors the house must not only be clean and odorless, but it must possess some degree of artistic fitness, if it is not to be an eyesore to the passerby. It should harmonize with the surrounding buildings or the house to which it belongs, both in style of architecture and color.

If possible the front of the hen house should face the south, so that it will get the full benefit of the sun's rays during the long winter months. Plenty of sunshine upon the floor will do more to keep the flock healthy while they are confined indoors, than any other one thing. The top of the south windows should be as far from the ground as the house is wide, so that the sunlight will reach to the back wall, and the bottom of the south windows should be about three feet from the ground, or high enough so that the chickens cannot look. We do not object to their looking out, as the time they waste in so doing does not interfere with their output, but this will protects them from direct wind and cold storms from the south.

The walls can best be made of two layers of boards, with a sheathing of building or tar paper between them, but an air space is not necessary. The main thing in the walls is to have them air tight, water proof, and free from harboring places for rats, lice and mites.

The roof may be either single or double pitch, but if it is to pitch toward the south be sure to have an eaves trough there to keep the front of the building dry during the spring months, and the warm days in winter, as here the fowls will congregate, long before the snow has gone from the rest of the yard. Be sure that the roof pitches enough to carry the rain water off rapidly, to prevent rotting of the roof, and do not make the mistake of so many near economical poultrymen, who build their hen house so low that at some point they cannot stand upright while cleaning it. Let me emphasize that again. Never under any circumstances let your roof drop so low at any point in the building that you have to stoop in doing any of your work because of it. Nothing is more aggravating than working in a stooping position in a hot hen house and you will find some of the work unpleasant enough even under the most desirable conditions.

We ordinarily figure that each hen needs eight feet of floor space in the house and at least fifty feet of yard space. This is automatically reduced as the size of the flock and the gross size of the house and yard increased, and your hens can get along with less, even in a small flock, if you keep everything scrupulously clean.

Never have the hen house floor of wood. It is a waste of good wood in the first place, and it harbors rats in the second. Make it of cement with half inch chicken wire or metal lath in it to keep the rats from gnawing through, if you want a solid floor, but a good raised dry dirt floor will serve every purpose. Be sure that it is higher than the surrounding ground to prevent water from running in, and change the top inch or two of dirt once a year for sanitary reasons.

In a small house a droppings platform is necessary, and a good one is a zinc or galvanized pan which is clamped onto brackets and can be removed easily for cleaning and washing. The nest boxes should be dark and they should be removable for cleaning and spraying for vermin. the roosts should be 2 by 4 timbers, and they should be removable.

BLACK CHICKENS.

White is the absence of all color and black is the combination of all colors. At least that is what the artists tell us. But it would not be advisable for you to try to create a new breed of black chickens by crossing several breeds of various colors together because you probably would fail.

Black chickens have always enjoyed more or less popularity with the fanciers, but they have never been taken up by the rank and file of poultry keepers to any great extent. This is probably due to the fact that the black varieties are quite hard to breed true to color, and there is something funereal in the color that does not appeal to the general public.

One of the earliest of the true black breeds to be recognized was the Black Java, the female progenitor of the popular Barred Plymouth Rock. This old fashioned black breed presumably came from the island of Java and enjoyed considerable popularity in the eastern states before the Civil war days, but it was almost swept out of existence by the wave of Barred Rocks that rolled over the country shortly after the creation of this breed.

Another of the early black breeds was the Black Minorca, from the island of that name. This breed is still quite widely bred and is much more popular than its white sister, but it is not destined for a very great future, in my estimation, because it has no advantages over the Leghorn, and the latter has the backing of a very much larger and more influential body of admirers. The Black Minorca will always have its place, however, and as a large bodied heavy layer of the largest white eggs produced it merits attention.

No one can tell just when and where the Black Langshan and the Black Cochin were first developed, as both came from the interior of China, where they had been bred pure by the monks for generations. The Langshan is the largest of the black breeds and was at the height of its popularity shortly after the war. Since then it has been gradually declining in numbers, although recently it has been undergoing a little boom which has revived interest in this valuable breed.

It remained for the Black Orpington to truly demonstrate that a black breed could compete with any other color and hold its own against all comers. This comparatively new breed was brought out in England by Thomas Cook, the originator of all of the Orpingtons, and it is the largest, truest, and possibly the most popular of all of this wonderfully popular family of fowls. The large, chunky body, the short, clean legs, the small comb, rapid growth and early maturity combine to make it as much a farmer's fowl as a fancier's pet, and there seems to be no reason for its ever losing ground.

Black Wyandottes can never overcome the lead of the Orpington and Black Leghorns have never been popular. The purely fancy breeds, like White Crested Black Polish, Houdans, etc., have a small field among those who breed chickens purely for the pleasure they derive from this national pastime.

One advantage of breeding black fowls for show purposes is that ostensibly it is not necessary to use the double mating system in order to secure males and females of the same shade of color, but you will find that most of the successful showmen use double mating even with solid colored varieties, like the blacks, as certain birds are much better pullet breeders than cockerel breeders, and vice versa. Double mating is also used to get the correct shape in the self colored breeds.

In breeding black fowls there are serious problems entirely aside from those of shape and size, that make the game well worth the trouble for the true poultry fan. Years of effort may do away with white and red feathers in your strain, but he who can get a dead black color without purple bars upon the surface of the plumage is indeed a past master. If you once achieve this victory let me caution you never to introduce a male bird into your flock from any outside source. When you need new blood always buy a female and use one of her cockerels the next year.

Sick Women Made Well

Reliable evidence is abundant that women are constantly being restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The many testimonial letters that we are continually publishing in the newspapers—hundreds of them—are all genuine, true and unsolicited expressions of heartfelt gratitude for the freedom from suffering that has come to these women solely through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Money could not buy nor any kind of influence obtain such recommendations; you may depend upon it that any testimonial we publish is honest and true—if you have any doubt of this write to the women whose true names and addresses are always given, and learn for yourself.

Read this one from Mrs. Waters:

CAMDEN, N.J.—"I was sick for two years with nervous spells, and my kidneys were affected. I had a doctor all the time and used a galvanic battery, but nothing did me any good. I was not able to go to bed, but spent my time on a couch or in a sleeping-chair, and soon became almost a skeleton. Finally my doctor went away for his health, and my husband heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me some. In two months I got relief and now I am like a new woman and am at my usual weight. I recommend your medicine to every one and so does my husband."—Mrs. TILLIE WATERS, 1135 Knight St., Camden, N.J.

And this one from Mrs. Haddock:

UTICA, OKLA.—"I was weak and nervous, not able to do my work and scarcely able to be on my feet. I had backache, headache, palpitation of the heart, trouble with my bowels, and inflammation. Since taking the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am better than I have been for twenty years. I think it is a wonderful medicine and I have recommended it to others."—Mrs. MARY ANN HADDOCK, Utica, Oklahoma.

Now answer this question if you can. Why should a woman continue to suffer without first giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? You know that it has saved many others—why should it fail in your case?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself if she does not try this famous medicine made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Fatal Defect.

Rev. Bascom Anthony, a presiding elder of the Methodist church in southern Georgia, tells a story of a negro pastor down his way who failed to give satisfaction to his flock. A committee from the congregation waited on him to request his resignation.

"Look here!" demanded the preacher. "Whut's de trouble wid mah preachin'? Don't I argufy?"

"You sho' does, eldah," agreed the spokesman.

"Don't I 'sputify concernin' de Scriptures?"

"You suttinly does," admitted the other.

"Den what's wrong?"

"Well,' eldah," stated the head of the committee, "hit's dis way: You argufies and you 'sputifies, but you don't show wherein!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Are Your Kidneys Weak?

You may have kidney trouble and not know it. The only signs may be occasional twinges in the small of the back, constant lameness, dizzy spells or some annoying irregularity of the kidney action.

But no sign of kidney trouble can be safely ignored. Kidney disease moves rapidly. It leads to dropsy, gravel, Bright's disease, rheumatism.

If you suspect that your kidneys are sluggish, use Doan's Kidney Pills, which have relieved thousands.

An Alabama Case

Mrs. Lulu Hancock, 1601 Ave. D, Birmingham, Ala., says: "I was in bad shape with kidney trouble and gravel. I wasted away to a mere shadow and was too sick to sit up in bed. The pains in my back were terrible. My limbs were swollen and the flesh under my eyes puffed up. The doctors said an operation was my only hope. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills helped me and five boxes cured me. The cure has lasted six years."

Works Wonders for Sick Women

STELLA-VITAE cured this woman, who had suffered for 25 years. Give it a chance to cure YOU!

WHAT STELLA-VITAE HAS DONE for one woman is well told by Mr. S. J. Hendrix, of Posey, Texas, who gratefully writes us:

"For twenty-five years I had from one to three Doctors treating my wife for female troubles, and tried various patent medicines and she only received temporary relief. We tried STELLA-VITAE and to our surprise it restored her to better health than she ever had. It did a wonderful work in her case."

STELLA-VITAE acts directly upon the female organs and functions. It tones and strenghtens the muscles and tissues, builds up and restores the whole system when run down and wasted by disease, soothes and adjusts the delicate nervous organization to that harmonious balance so necessary to perfect womanly health.

STELLA-VITAE regulates the functions peculiar to women, stops wasting and relieves dangerous suppression, banishes the terrors of those periods so dreaded by weak, nervous, run-down women.

STELLA-VITAE does not force nature, and is of remarkable benefit at all times and under all conditions. Its use during pregnancy benefits both mother and child.

We guarantee the first bottle of STELLA-VITAE to benefit you. If it don't you get your money back. If it does, your dealer is authorized to sell you six bottles for $5.

Law Condoned Negligence.

In Kelsey vs. Rebuzzini, in the supreme court of errors of Connecticut, it appeared that defendant, after notice that a division wire fence between his lot and a lot where plaintiff pastured his cattle was broken, took no steps to repair it and the following day plaintiff's heifers passed through the broken fence and reached a lot lying south of both of such lots and there cropped grass which had been poisoned in the mixing of a spray for potato vines, in consequence of which part of them died. Defendant did not know that the potatoes had been sprayed, or that any poison had been spilled on the grass and could not have anticipated that some person might have scattered poison about the grass there. It was held, assuming defendant's negligence, that it was not the proximate cause of injury.

As One Who's Been Humbled.

The head of the family drank his coffee uncomplainingly, although its strength brought tears to his eyes.

"Why, father," remonstrated his son, "how could you swallow that lye?"

"My son," replied the old gentleman, "it's not the first lie that I have had to swallow, by any means."

Retribution.

"That was retributive state of mind in which I found the surgeon."

"What was that?"

"He was considerably cut up by the criticisms of his operations."

LIVING ADVERTISEMENT
Glow of Health Speaks for Postum.

It requires no scientific training to discover whether coffee disagrees or not.

Simply stop it for a time and use Postum in place of it, then note the beneficial effects. The truth will appear.

"Six years ago I was in a very bad condition," writes a Tenn. lady. "I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and insomnia.

"I was then an inveterate coffee drinker, but it was long before I could be persuaded that it was coffee that hurt me. Finally I decided to leave it off a few days and find out the truth.

"The first morning I left off coffee I had a raging headache, so I decided I must have something to take the place of coffee." (The headache was caused by the reaction of the coffee drug—caffeine.)

"Having heard of Postum through a friend who used it, I bought a package and tried it. I did not like it at first but after I learned how to make it right, according to directions on pkg., I would not change back to coffee for anything.

"When I began to use Postum I weighed only 117 lbs. Now I weigh 170 and as I have not taken any tonic in that time I can only attribute my present good health to the use of Postum in place of coffee.

"My husband says I am a living advertisement for Postum."

Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum — must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

SPEAKS FOR NATION

Country With the President in Face of War.

Administration Must Be Upheld If the Nation Is to Maintain Its Proper Place in the Councils of the World.

"Bonner Springs, Kan.—To the Star: During the past few weeks the Star has been repeating the statement that all of the people were standing at the back of Mr. Wilson in his war measures with Mexico. I have asked a good many people what they thought of the war with Mexico and almost without exception they condemn the war in unmeasured terms. Even the most ignorant people I meet are fully alive to the fact that the property interests of a few wealthy investors in Mexican property are the only things at stake.—J. B. Lashbrook."

The Star believes the president has demonstrated that he is against war unless it should become absolutely necessary. He resisted the strongest pressure to intervene on behalf of property interests.

If the Huerta regime had been permitted to persist in studied insults to this nation, under the conditions of oppression and disorder that were existing, an appeal to arms was bound to come. It was such an outcome that the president desired to forestall.

In foreign affairs the president speaks for the nation. In the opinion of this newspaper at this crisis, as at every other crisis involving foreign relations, the vast majority of the people are behind the president in whatever policy he adopts.

That is the traditional policy of America and in the experience of more than a century the country has had no reason to regret it. Any other course would so discredit the government as to make it a negligible factor in the councils of the world.—Kansas City Star.

Roosevelt the Explorer.

Colonel Roosevelt is an admirable explorer. He has a mind never weary of new impressions and experiences. He is conscientious in his pursuit of truth and he is able to enter sympathetically into the life of "all sorts and conditions of men," to use the prayer book phrase, provided that they are not shirkers and drones in his own country or in other lands where the state of civilization affords no excuse for wasted years and powers. And always and everywhere the gift of vivid and picturesque expression which is Theodore Roosevelt's in a high degree enhances the value of his studies and experiences by enabling him to record what he wishes to preserve, in a most readable and interesting form.

Roosevelt, the explorer and "faunal naturalist," to use his own phrase, is one of the most engaging and useful of the many Roosevelts the world has learned to know and admire.

Amalgamation Not Possible.

"Amalagamation of the Progressive and Republican parties is impossible," said Charles Sumner Bird, former Progressive candidate for governor of Massachusetts.

"Is it possible that the leaders of the Progressive party would work in harmony with the men in control of the Republican party? Stand them up and judge for yourself. In one row are Barnes, Penrose, Smoot, Guggenheim and their kind. In the other are Roosevelt, Johnson, Stubbs, Lindsay, Beveridge and men of their type.

"Today we are a party of more than four million strong—a party of advance—much alive and working together with practical unanimity. We do not expect immediate results and are content to wait until victory is attained on a solid and lasting basis."

Future of Progressive Party.

To the Democrats foolishness and to the Republicans a stumbling block, the Progressive party is like the humble beginnings of a world-wide movement to which not many wise, not many noble, not many mighty were called; but springs from the soil of the common people, whose welfare and happiness it aims and endeavors to serve. Its leaders are those who have acknowledged no master but the people themselves and who pledge themselves to that service anew. To believe that such a movement can fail would be to express despair of human nature itself and to doubt the ability or the faithfulness of the people to stand by those that have stood by them.—Indianapolis Star.

Some Comfort.

Mr. Roosevelt escaped the jaguars. But the gentlemen who stole the Chicago convention will note with some satisfaction that he accumulated a number of boils.

Still Boss-Ridden Party.

The Republican party's appeal, taken in connection with its leadership reflects this year, no less than in 1912, the motives that brought the Progressive party into being and today endow it with the flourishing and permanent growth. The protestations of penitence match poorly with the evidences of unabashed bossism. In the words of one incorrigible backward looker who spoke with more enthusiasm than tact, they're standpatters and they're proud of it.—Indianapolis Star.

RATHER DEAD THAN ALIVE

Deplorable Condition of Lumpkin Lady Whose Troubles Multiplied Until Life Became Almost Unbearable

Lumpkin, Ga.—Mrs. G. W. Booth, of this place, says: "I suffered with dumb chills and fever and was very irregular. Was also nervous and weak, short of breath, couldn't do my housework without it being a burden, and then I began suffering untold misery in my left side and back. I got to where I would rather have been dead than alive.

I tried many remedies, but they failed to help me.

Finally, I purchased two bottles of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and began taking it according to directions. Cardui helped me right away. I believe it saved my life.

I cannot praise Cardui enough to my lady friends. It is certainly the medicine for suffering women and girls."

If you have any of the ailments so common to women, or if you feel the need of a good, strengthening tonic, we urge you to give Cardui a trial. It has helped thousands of women in its past 50 years of success, as is proven by the numerous enthusiastic letters of gratitude, similar to the above, which come to us every day.

Don't delay. This letter from Mrs. Booth should convince you that Cardui is worth a trial. Get a bottle from your druggist today. You'll never regret it.—Adv.

NOT A SOOTHING APOLOGY

Bobby's Well-Meant Effort Probably Made Indignant Private Soldier Madder Than Ever.

Colonel Blank had a little boy five years old, and little Bobby had often heard the men in his father's regiment spoken of as "Colonel Blank's men." So he said to one of them:

"My father owns you."

The soldier was very angry. "You little imp!" he exclaimed. "What are you talking about? Nobody owns me."

Bobby's mother heard about it, and was much distressed. Calling the little boy to her, she said:

"Bobby, you were wrong when you said your father owns his men, and I want you to tell the soldier that you are sorry for what you said."

Running to overtake the private, the little boy exclaimed breathlessly: "I'm sorroy my father owns you!"

BLOTCHES COVERED LIMBS

19 Roach St., Atlanta, Ga.—"A few months ago I had some kind of skin eruption that spread until my limbs and feet were covered with blotches and watery blisters. It looked like eczema. When the trouble reached my neck and face I was almost driven frantic. It itched and stung so intensely that I could not sleep or wear any clothing on the affected parts. After two months I commenced to use Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after two days I noticed improvement and in six days the trouble left. My skin was fair and smooth again and the eruption never returned.

"My cousin was a sufferer from pimples, known as acne, on his face and seemed to grow worse all the time. I recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment to him and now his face is smooth for the first time in three years and he owes it all to Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Walter Battle, Oct. 7, 1912.

Cause of Death.

"You say your automobile didn't touch this man, and yet he was dead when you picked him up?" shouted the prosecuting attorney.

"That's my claim," coolly retorted the prisoner. "My machine didn't touch him.

"And you were driving not over 12 miles an hour?"

"Not over 12 miles and—"

"And you saw this man start to cross the street?"

"Yes."

"Did you blow your horn?"

"I did."

"What sort of a horn is it?"

"One of those newfangled clatterboxes that create a sound that is a cross between a shriek and a dying wail."

"That explains it. You simply scared the man to death."

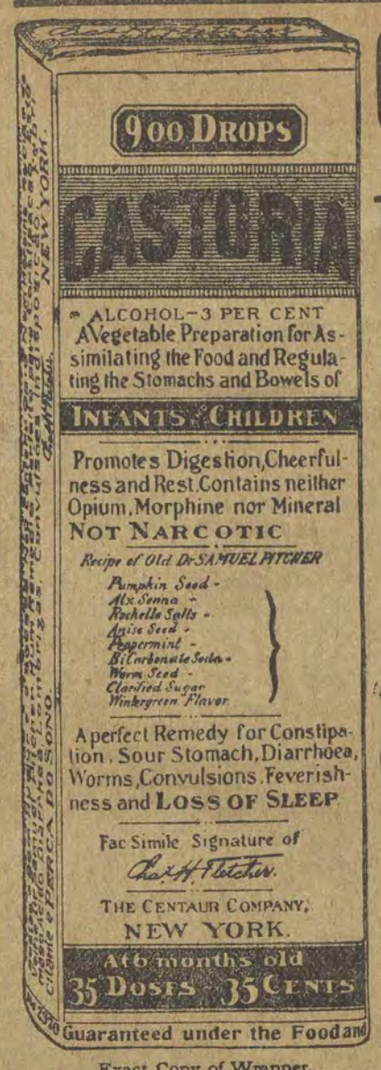
WANTED THE STAGE FILLED

Theatrical Magnate Evidently Cared More for Effect Than for Accuracy of Production.



The production of great dramas was his business. His great talent was success, and his weakness was that he always liked to "show off" when he was rehearsing a play. He was in the habit of sitting far back in the darkened theater, and whenever a stranger came in to see the rehearsal work he put himself in the foreground by jumping to his feet and bawling out the actors and actresses. When he was putting on a big production of "The Holy City" three friends of his entered the theater one afternoon to see the dress rhearsal. As soon as they had sat down the producer began to fidget in his seat. He was consumed by the old fever for prominence. He wanted the visitors to see that he was the boss of everything. There were 12 men on the stage, which was unusually large. "Who are those men on the stage?" he called out to his stage manager in a thunderous voice. "That's one of the big scenes of the play," the manager said humbly. "Those men are the 12 disciples." "Oh, well," shouted the impresario imperiously, "go out and get 12 more. That's a big stage, and we want to fill it up."

Gotham—Don't we? Why, say, a family across the street got a phonograph, and the people next door to them started their two boys taking lessons on the fiddle.

Better Soldier Than Statesman.

One hundred years ago on the forty-fifth anniversary of his birth, Lord Wellington was rewarded with the title of duke in recognition of his successes in the Peninsula campaign against the French. At the same time the house of commons voted $2,000,000 for the support of his new dignity. Within a little more than a year the famous soldier was destined to win the great victory at Waterloo and to be made the commander-in-chief of the British forces. Later in life the duke of Wellington became British prime minister, but the strong personal qualities that had helped him to success as a soldier were not the qualities that best befitted for the premiership, and the career of the duke as a statesman added little to his fame.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

As summer advances we are very likely to have a great deal of sickness in our homes, so in my chat this week I'm going to try to give a few cautions and suggestions about the treatment of such folks. I consider cheerfulness the very best thing one can carry a sick friend. Don't ever enter a sick room with a distressed look on your face nor greet a sick person with, how "awful bad" you look! This may sound absurd, but I have heard just such things said and have heard people tell of the people they have known to die of the disease from which the sick one was suffering, of course this worries the whole family, and very often causes a relapse. To whisper to someone in the room is just as bad, for the patient will know you are speaking of them, and will imagine all kinds of things. But, do not go to the other extreme and tell all your troubles in a loud voice, for the sick one and their family have troubles enough of their own, and don't carry the children along, not even to see a "new baby;" but get someone to keep them for you until you can go, and when you enter the sick room greet the sick one with a cheerful word and a smile. If possible carry them some little dainty that the doctor has told you they can eat, but never tempt them with anything they should not eat. If it happens to be the mother of small children who is sick, take the children out for a walk, or some where out of the house and amuse them until she can sleep awhile, and if help is scarse, help where you see that help is needed, for "a friend in need is a friend indeed," you know, and the cheery helpful friend is always welcome where there are sick folks.

Since the announcement of our Department I asked that the letters be sent to the Editor Home Department, Clanton, Ala., but have decided it would be advisable to have them sent directly to Mrs. F. H. Snyder, Mt. Creek, Ala. And I hope to get quite a shower next week. Several of our readers have requested me to ask "Grandma," of Free Springs who wrote those good letters to the Union a few years ago to write to our Department, and I would be very glad to get a letter from her real soon.

Editor Home Department:—I am sending my subscription for the Union-Banner for a year. I am greatly interested in your Department and it is the first department of its kind I have ever seen in a county paper, and I hope it will be a decided success. I hope all will not wait for someone else, but will write; for I know there are lots of women in Chilton who can write good helpful letters; aud as we haye such a number of subjects to write about it doesn't seem as if it would be such a difficult task. I think the problem of keeping our children on the farm would cease to be a problem if we would make the country more attractive than the city, and it seems to me this would be an easy matter if we would all go to work. If we would have a club for our young folks, to meet every Friday evening, say; and get them good books to read at their club it would give them something better to think of while they are at work than "how beautiful the city is;" and then the next thing to do is to make our homes beautiful, both inside and out. It doesn't cost so much to paint a house; and besides making it much prettier; it also makes it last longer. And window shades and sash curtains for every window in the house can be had at a very small cost; and if you don't feel able to buy rugs for all the rooms you can make pretty rag rugs in a very short while which are very fashionable at dresent, and if you can paint the floor in a harmonizing color you will be well pleased with the effect. I consider a pretty porch the most needed thing in a farm house in summer time, and this can be fitted up with an inexpensive porch set, consisting of porch swing, settee, and several chairs, with lots of pretty cushions, and a little table for magazines. Don't you agree with me that any youngster would be glad to stay in a place like this? Best wishes to all.

Mrs. J. S.

Thank you, for both, the subscription and the letter, I for one agree with you.—[Ed.]

Farmer Dropped Dead In Field.

J H. Thompson Found Lifeless on Ground Near His Plow.

Friday morning Mr. J. H. Thompson, a prominent farmer and citizen living about six miles east of here left his house to do a little plowing down in his field, and a short time later was found by his wife to be dead, and lying on the ground near his plow. It is supposed that death resulted from heart trouble, as a day or two ago he had made complaints of ill feeling that point to such affectation.

Mr. Thompson was well known in the county, and occupied a position of esteem among his fellows. He was about sixty years of age, and a member of the Masonic Lodge at this place. He leaves a wife and four sons. All his sons are marred and have families.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. P. Lowery, at Mountain Springs Church on Saturday. After the church services the remains were taken over by members of the Masonic fraternity, and interred with full honors customary for such occasion.

O. S. Davis Hurt Accidentally

On last Saturday as a result of the explosion of a bottle of soda water, Mr. O. S. Davis, proprietor of the Clanton Cafe and Bakery, sustained facial injuries that will propably result in the total loss of an eye. He was in the act of selecting a bottle of "dope" from his refrigerator when one of the bottles exploded. A piece of glass, impelled by the force of the gas in the bottle, hit him in the eye, inflicting the painful injury. He was accompained to an infirmary in Montgomery Saturday night by Dr. N. S. Johnson. The latest news reveals the fact that he is rapidly recovering, but will in all probability completely lose one of his eyes.

Easy to Misjudge Remedy You Need

In Overcoming Blood Trouble Do Not Be Fooled By Mere Claims.

Study the Game and You Will Understand Why Some Things Are Deceptive.

In treating any blood disorder the fundamental fact must be observed that the aim and object of the medicine used is to permit a hit, a home run and a sure, safe hit every time.

Now the propulsive effect of S. S. S. is to regulate the blood formation, to assist in development of tissue and to have a decided bearing upon the lymphatic influence, all of which is in the promotion of blood health. And this propulsive effect will be similar to the straight ball pitched to insure a safe hit and not the deceptive gyrations designed to fool the batter. S. S. S. is a plain, straight blood purifier. It is not a fanciful mixture to move the bowels and thus falsely play upon susceptible minds. It is not a nerve excitant to exhilarate for the moment and then die away. It contains none of those mineral drugs which dry up the tissues. In other words, it does not play to the bleachers nor to the "fans." It is just a wholesome, powerful, searching blood remedy, one ingredient of which serves the active purpose of arousing each cellular part of the tissues to select from the blood the nutriment or materials required for renewal of health.

S. S. S. is prepared from nature's own materials, not an ounce of drugs being used. And yet it is more potent, more powerful, more searching and more productive of restorative results than from the most active of all the minerals employed in medicine.

Its action by elimination of the irritating poisons that infect the blood, is one of the very important things to know.

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier falsely claimed "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 600 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

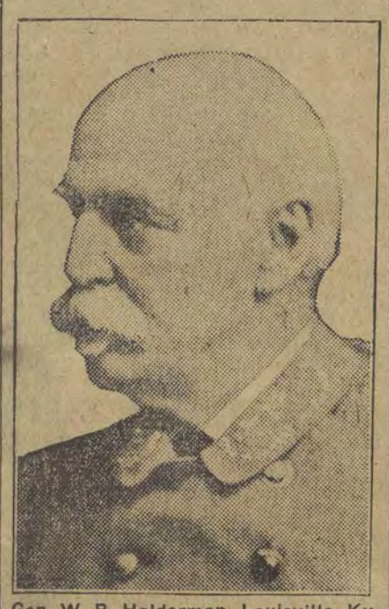
High School Board Coming.

Will be in This County Friday to Locate County High School

The High School Commission of the State of Alabama will come to Chilton County Friday for the purpose of considering the applications that are being made by the different communities for the County High School, and looking over the prospects of the school in these places. Jemison and Clanton are making a hard fight for the school, and it is probable that the visit of the Commissin on next Friday will determine which of the places shall be the fortunate one in securing this much desired institution of learning. A party of citizens of Clanton, about thirty strong, went to Montgomery Tuesday to urge their claim for the school. It was at the solicitation of this body that the Commission promised to come Friday and give the matter their consideration.



Clanton Ala., May 25, 1914

Editor Union-Banner:—please allow me a small space in your paper to express my appreciation of our county ticket nominated at the primary on April the 21st. but very much regret that I was not able to go to the election as I was sick at that time and not able to leave my room and there were a number of voters in this community that was kept away from the election on account of sickness and some was afraid of measles. It seems that near half of the voters around here was kept at home on that day but just wait until November and we will go if we can get out at all. I think we will have out a state ticket and if so we are dead sure to elect it for the Democrats has a man for Governor that they do not want or at least Comers crowd don't and we can get out as good men as there is in Alabama so let us all rally to the polls in November and show what Old Chilton can do in the way of a big majority for the Progressive party. Yours for a big majority for our ticket in Nov.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Adopted by Waxahatchie Tribe No. 9, I. O. R. M., in honor of Brother G. W. Parrish.

Whereas, the Great Spirit has been pleased to remove from our presence and associations our esteemed brother, G. W. Parrish, in accordance with the high position of love and honor which he occupied among us, we, the members of Waxahatchie Tribe No. 9, I. O. R. Union Springs

People are very well up with their farm work at this place.

It seems that they are getting the Same Old Moses hot under the collar. If this Same Old Moses is Mr. Kilgore, it seems he has a poor opinion of the intelligence of a certain class of people he refers to as "uneducated", who placed him in the sheriff's office; and at that time, if we remember correctly, the colored people could vote, and we are sure a goodly number of them voted for him.

Mr. S. N. Waldrup went up to Birmingham last week to visit the Photo Drama of Creation.

The Union-Banner well holds its own as the people's paper.

As the Primaries are all over and the people all over the county are quiet, we suggest that Miss Gibson let us read in the Union-Banner a copy of her excellent speech she read at the Oak Grove S. S. Convention.

Probably there were hundreds of good men real auxious to see Hobson and Comer elected on account of their prohibition views and we thank them for it. But now if they are consistent Democrats, they have to take their "cold crow" and vote for Henderson and Underwood. They have our sympathy.

Tribute of Respect

To The Memory of Hon. Tipton Mullins.

It is with profound sorrow that we are called to chronicle and commemorate the death of a professional brother. Tipton Mullins has answered the last summons and has passed into that inconceivable solemnity that lies farther beyond. By this sad event we are once more reminded that in the midst of life we are in death, and once again we are admonished to pause and reflect upon whom we are and whither we are going.

Tipton Mullins was born in Chilton County on the 14th, day of June 1866 and was admitted to the bar in 1899. He immediatly located at Clanton and began the practice of his profession, and by his studious habits and zealous efforts forged rapidly to the front and for several years preceeding his demise, was the leader of this bar. While devoted to his profession he found delight in serving his county and state in many ways. He was for years Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee of Chilton County and was a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee for an equal number of years. He never sought political preferment but was, upon all public questions, accurately informed and his counsel and judgment was constantly sought and applied.

1. Resolved, that in the death of Tipton Mullins the Bar of the State and its citizens have sustained a heavy loss.

2. Resolved, that in our intercourse with Tipton Mullins, we always recognized him the able lawyer, the upright citizen, the courteous citizen and the conscientious Christian and were inspired with the greatest respect and esteem for him and his character, and we will ever cherish his memory with affectionate regard.

3. Resolved, that we sympathize sincerely with the members of his family in their great bereavement.

4. Resolved, that these resolutions be presented to the Circuit Court of Chilton County and that they be spread upon the Minutes of said Court and upon the minutes of the Chancery and Probate Courts of Chilton County, that a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the widow of the deceased and to Alabama Bar Association.

Clanton School Commencement.

The Commencement exercises of the Clanton public school was held last Thursday and Friday nights, at the auditorium of the school building. The exercises consisted of various kinds of entertainment, such as music and plays, rendered by the pupils of the school. The entertainers acquitted themselves well in the sight of the good crowd of citizens which turned out to hear them. They showed signs of having received careful preperation from their teachiers in getting up the work assigned to them

On Friday night in addition to the entertainment that was rendered by the students of the schol the people were favored with that supreme pleasure that always attends the opportunity of hearing Dr. J. M. Shelbourne, President of Howard College, deliver one of his masterly addresses. His speech was delivered in his usual calm and dignified style, and carried with it an impression of seriousness that will last long in the minds of his hearers.

TAX COMMISSION CONVENES JUNE 22

WILL CONSIDER INTANGIBLE ASSESSMENTS OF PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Intangible assessments of public service corporations of Alabama will be considered at a meeting of the State tax commission on June 22. Notice of the meeting has been sent out to the various public service corporations of the State, and they will be given an opportunity to appear before the tax commission at that time and make any protest relative to the assessments which were fixed by the board last year.

It is probable that many of the corporations of the State will accept the commission's assessments, in which event no changes will be made. However, there is likely to be some objection on the part of certain corporations to their assessments, and the commission will give them a hearing at the June meeting. Under the law, intangible assessments, after having been fixed by the commission, must stand for two years.

No Need for Extra Session.

Alabama law-makers may meet in extraordinary session before the end of the present administration. Should there be a special session of the legislature, the principal business before that body would be the consideration of State-wide and local reforms. The passage of only such measures as would accrue to the best interests of the people in general.

But the Governor of Alabama has not yet decided to call a special session of the legislature. He declared that his mind was not made up on the subject; moreover, that he saw no immediate necessity for issuing a call for a special session.

"A special session of the legislature may only be called to meet an extraordinary occasion," he said. "The Constitution of the State is explicit on the subject of special sessions of the legislature, and unless an extraordinary occasion arises, I see no reason why I should call the State's lawmakers together."

The Governor admitted that the most pressing need for a special legislative session was the necessity of giving relief to Jefferson county from the iniquitous fee system. He declared that he did not consider any reform more pressing than the enactment of an anti-fee measure for Jefferson county, and gave assurance that should he call a special session he would incorporate a suggestion for such a reform in his call. The Governor continues:

"I have been urged by many prominent citizens of Birmingham and Jefferson county to call a special session of the legislature in order that an anti-fee system might be established in that county. There is no question but that Jefferson county needs this relief, and should I call a special session I should recommend the inauguration of that important reform in my message. The majority of the people of Jefferson county have already declared that they prefer the anti-fee system in that county, and since Jefferson is by far the greatest sufferer in the State as a result of that old antiquated and iniquitous plan, I should like to furnish the relief it desires."

Should the Governor call an extraordinary session of the legislature, he would probably advocate many other important reforms, chief of which would be the enactment of measures looking to many judicial changes in the State. The Governor has evinced remarkable interest in all phases of judicial reform since he assumed the office of chief executive of the State, and it was through his influence and offices that the State-wide movement looking to the reform of the judiciary was begun several years ago.

Ganey and Crumpton Retire.

James S. Ganey, president of the Fourth District Agricultural school, Sylacauga, and W. B. Crumpton, Jr., president of the Ninth District Agricultural school, Blountsville, will sever their connections with these institutions with the close of the present scholastic year and their successors were elected at the annual meeting of the boards of trustees of the nine district agricultural schools which was held in the office of Governor O'Neal.

Hale County Man Paroled.

Governor O'Neal granted a parole to Will Cook, of Hale county, who was serving a sentence in the state penitentiary on a charge of grand larceny. Coow kas paroled on the condition that his conduct in the future be good. The parole was recommended by the state board of pardons.

State Committee Meets.

The state democratic executive committee met in Montgomery May 26 and canvassed the vote of the primary held May 11.

Henderson's Majority 10,250.

Charles Henderson's majority over B. B. Comer in the race for Governor in the second primary held May 11 was 10,258, according to official returns compiled by Tyler Goodwyn chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee, and made public Comer carried thirty-five counties and Henderson carried thirty-two. Comer failed to carry a county by a majority larger than 500 while Henderson carried five counties by majorities ranging from five hundred to eight hundred. Approximately 128,000 votes were polled.

Official returns show that J. A. Wade of Alexander City defeated Dr. A. A. Persons of Bessemer for commissioner of agriculture by the small majority of 871 votes. This race was so close that it required the official count to determine the winner. Wade received 57,555 votes and Persons 56,584.

W. R. Chapman of Dothan defeated J. A. Carnley of Elba for Chancellor of the Southeastern division by 472 votes. This includes the corrected returns from Dale county, which have been filed with Chairman Goodwyn.

In the "run-off" for member of the State Democratic executive committee from the Eighth district A. G. Paterson of New Decatur defeated Judge J. B. Talley of Scottsboro by 482. Dave Goodlett of Jacksonville defeated J. A. Haynes of Columbiana for a place on the State committee from the Fourth district by a majority of 188 votes.

B. P. Crum of Montgomery, R. G. Arrington of Montgomery and W. H. Stoddard of Luverne won out for places on the State committee from the Second district. H. G. Benners, F. A. Gamble and J. W. Cook were named on the committee from the Sixth district and R. A. Mitchell and W. T. McCord won out in the Seventh district.

BECKER CONVICTED FOR SECOND TIME

JURY'S VERDICT FIRST DEGREE MURDER—THE FOREMAN SHEDS TEARS.

ONLY ONE BALLOT TAKEN

Defendant Granted Week for Any Motion Desired—New Witnesses in Second Trial Corroborate Evidence in First.

New York.—Twelve men decided for the second time that Charles Becker was the arch conspirator responsible for the Rosenthal murder, which nearly two years ago awoke New York to a realization of corruption in the police department and opened a new era of police reform.

Becker, once a police lieutenant, was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Only a pardon or interference again by the court of appeals can save him from following to the electric chair the four gunmen who shot Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, early on the morning of July 16, 1912. The jury decided that the gunmen were Becker's agents.

One ballot decided Becker's fate. It was taken almost immediately after the jurors returned from luncheon at an uptown hotel, where they went when Supreme Court Justice Samuel Seabury had finished his charge. It was unanimous for conviction. Tears streamed down the foreman's face as he announced the decision and tears stood in the eyes of several other jurors. They had agreed that the corroboration which the district attorney failed to present at the first trial to support the stories of Rose, Vallon and Webber, the three accomplices who turned informers, had been furnished by new witnesses at the second.

Becker's counsel announced that he would appeal and gained a week's stay for the preparation of his future campaign. The defendant was granted a short meeting with his wife and his brothers and then was taken back to his cell in the Tombs.

INDICTMENTS IN FRANK CASE

Bribery, Coercion and Perjury Are the Charges Made—Further Investigation by the Grand Jury.

Atlanta.—Charges of bribery, coercion and perjury made in connection with efforts to obtain a new trial for Leo M. Frank, under sentence of death for the murder of 14-year-old Mary Phagan, resulted in five indictments being returned by the Fulton county grand jury.

The Rev. C. B. Ragsdale, recently dismissed from the pastorate of a local church on account of the repudiation of an affidavit made by him in behalf of the convicted factory superintendent, was indicted for perjury, together with R. B. Barber. Arthur Thurman, a lawyer; Daniel S. Lehon, representative of a national detective agency, and Carlton C. Tedder, engaged in detective work, were charged with subornation of perjury.

Further investigation of the charges of improper influences in the noted murder case is to be made by the grand jury.

20 FOREST FIRES RAGING

Dreaded Crown Fire Breaks Out in Washington—Hundreds of Fire-Fighters Are In Field.

Olympia, Wash.—Warm weather, absence of rain and brisk winds have led to a serious forest fire situation in this state. Twenty fires are burning; practically none is listed as under control and the dreaded crown fire which kills timber as it progresses, was running through trees in Lewis county, having started at Independence. State Forester Ferris has ordered out all Western Washington county fire wardens. Hundreds of fire-fighters already are in the field for the Washington Firest Fire association, the state and federal authorities.

ROOT ARGUES FOR REPEAL

New York Senator Holds Attention of Senate For Five Hours—Says 1912 Law Violated.

Washington.—Senator Root, Republican member of the foreign relations committee, held the senate's attention throughout a five hours' speech in support of the administration to repeal the tolls exemption of the Panama canal law. As the New York senator sat down, Senator Kern, Democratic leader, led the applause from the floor and spectators in the galleries joined in.

The burden of the speech was to prove that the Hay-Paunceforte treaty provided that treatment accorded by the United States to its own citizens in the use of the Panama canal must be the same as that accorded citizens of other nations.

Senator Root declared the United States always had insisted on this broad principle of equality and insisted that the understanding of Henry White, Joseph Choate, John Hay and Theodore Roosevelt, Americans who negotiated the treaty, was that the equality mentioned in the convention was the broad equality which had marked American diplomacy.

Taking up the specific question of exemption of American coastwise vessels, the senator said the law of 1912 granting this exemption violated the equality agreement guaranteed by the treaty. This was true, he argued, because no real coastwise trade of the United States could pass through this canal 1,000 miles away; and consequently what the law did was to exempt a class of American over-sea trade of other countries.

The senator declared he was voting for repeal now because in the judgment of senators best able to judge the senate would not vote to arbitrate the dispute.

SEEKS PEACE IN COLORADO

Judge Ben Lindsey and Party of Women Plead With President—Will Try to See Rockefeller.

Washington.—Federal intervention to force an agreement between mine owners and miners in the Colorado coal fields was urged on President Wilson by Judge Ben B. Lindsey and a delegation of Colorado women. It was indicated later than the president was willing to do everything within his constitutional power to bring peace in Colorado, but that he believed the state should solve the difficulty if possible.

Judge Lindsey announced that he planned to go to New York with his party of women and make an effort to see John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and urge him to submit the differences between mine operators and strikers to arbitration.

President Wilson is understood to have told the delegation that he was deeply concerned over the Colorado situation and had no present plan of removing federal troops. He thought, however, the state could settle the strike without further federal interference.

VATERLAND ADRIFT IN RIVER

New York.—Navigation in the North river, between lower New York and Hoboken, stood still while the Vaterland, biggest ship afloat, defied all efforts to dock her and swept broadside down the stream for more than a mile.

When the liner arrived at her pier, after her maiden voyage, her great length and a strong ebb tide proved too strong a combination for the fleet of willing little tugs that urged her toward her berth.

Judge Carries Gun.

Prairie du Chein, Wis.—A judge has the right to carry a revolver when sitting on the bench, if he needs it to enforce respect for his decisions, Judge George Clementson has decided in circuit court here.

To Import Dirigible.

San Diego, Cal.—A new dirigible balloon, which will carry 15 passengers, a crew of five, three machine guns and a supply of bombs, will be imported from Austria for experimental purposes, officers of the first aero corps here say.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and dreads are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. Josie Ham, R. Gave Hecklers a Chance.

At one time the Republicans of Chicago were out and were fighting Democracy on industrial conditions and the putative helplessness of a situation which did not let the Republicans in. A parade was started off and was well on its way—nearly to the file closers—when a ward boss saw that two lighted transparencies lacked carriers. He looked around hurriedly and noticed that one of his retainers was idle. "Here," he yelled, "shoulder this and get in line." The shanghaied recruit was a gambler who busied himself in ward politics on occasions, but for the most stuck to his trade when trade was possible. As he hoisted the lighted legend, "Open up the mills and factories," there was a chorus of derisive yells from the sidewalk: "Never mind the mills. Open up the poker games."

Shakespeare and Bacon.

It has not been proven that Bacon wrote the plays known as Shakespeare's. The various attempts at such task have all turned out to be melancholy failures. It has been shown that there are many difficulties in the way of believing that the historical Shakespeare wrote the immortal dramas, but it has not been shown that anybody else wrote them. The Stratford man is still in possession of the glory of their authorship, and if he is not entitled to the honor it is impossible to say who is.

Grew Strong on Right Food.

You can't grow strong by merely exercising. You must have food—the kind you can digest and assimilate.

Unless the food you eat is digested it adds to the burden the digestive organs have naturally to carry. This often means a nervous breakdown.

"About a year ago," writes a Mass. lady, "I had quite a serious nervous breakdown caused, as I believed, by overwork and worry. I also suffered untold misery from dyspepsia.

"First I gave up my position, then I tried to find a remedy for my troubles, something that would make me well and strong, something to rest my tired stomach and build up my worn-out nerves and brain.

"I tried one kind of medicine after another, but nothing seemed to help me.

"Finally a friend suggested change of food and recommended Grape-Nuts. With little or no faith in it, I tried a package. That was eight months ago and I have never been without it since.

"Grape-Nuts did the work. It helped me grow strong and well. Grape-Nuts put new life into me, built up my whole system and made another woman of me!"

The Hollow of Her Hand

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Mrs. Sara Wrandall and Hetty attend the funeral of Challis Wrandall at the home of his parents. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, makes himself useful to Sara and becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty.

CHAPTER VII.—Continued.

"I say, Leslie, is she staying here?" cried Booth, lowering his voice to an excited half-whisper.

"Who?" demanded Wrandall vacantly. His mind appeared to be elsewhere.

"Why, that's the girl I saw on the road— Wake up! The one on the envelope, you ass. Is she the one you were telling me about in the club—the Miss What's-Her-Name who—"

"Oh, you mean Miss Castleton. She's just gone upstairs. You must have met her on the steps."

"You know I did. So that is Miss Castleton."

"Ripping, isn't she? Didn't I tell you so?"

"She's beautiful. She is a type, just as you said, old man—a really wonderful type. I saw her yesterday—and the day before."

"I've been wondering how you managed to get a likeness of her on the back of an envelope," said Leslie sarcastically. "Must have had a good long look at her, my boy. It isn't a snap-shot, you know."

Booth flushed. "It is an impression, that's all. I drew it from memory, 'pon my soul."

"She'll be immensely gratified, I'm sure."

"For heaven's sake, Les, don't be such a fool as to show her the thing," cried Booth in consternation. "She'd never understand."

"Oh, you needn't worry. She has a fine sense of humor."

Booth didn't know whether to laugh or scowl. He compromised with himself by slipping his arm through that of his friend and saying heartily:

"I wish you the best of luck, old boy."

"Thanks," said Leslie drily.

CHAPTER VIII.

In Which Hetty Is Weighed.

Booth and Leslie returned to the city on Tuesday. The artist left behind him a "memory sketch" of Sara Wrandall, done in the solitude of his room long after the rest of the house was wrapped in slumber on the first night of his stay at Southlook. It was as sketchily drawn as the one he had made of Hetty, and quite as wonderful in the matter of faithfulness, but utterly without the subtle something that made the other notable. The craftiness of the artist was there, but the touch of inspiration was lacking.

He Was as Deeply Perplexed as Ever.

Sara was delighted. She was flattered, and made no pretense of disguising the fact.

The discussion which followed the exhibition of the sketch at luncheon, was very animated. It served to excite Leslie to such a degree that he brought forth from his pocket the treasured sketch of Hetty, for the purpose of comparison.

The girl who had been genuinely enthusiastic over the picture of Sara, and who had not been by way of knowing that the first sketch existed, was covered with confusion. Embarrassment and a shy sense of gratification were succeeded almost at once by a feeling of keen annoyance. The fact that the sketch was in Leslie's possession—and evidently a thing to be cherished—took away all the pleasure she may have experienced during the first few moments of interest.

Booth caught the angry flash in her eyes, preceding the flush and unaccountable pallor that followed almost immediately. He felt guilty, and at the same time deeply annoyed with Leslie. Later on he tried to explain, but the attempt was a lamentable failure. She laughed, not unkindly, in his face.

Leslie had refused to allow the sketch to leave his hand. If she could have gained possession of it, even for an instant, the thing would have been torn to bits. But it went back into his commodious pocketbook, and she was too proud to demand it of him.

She became oddly sensitive to Booth's persistent though inoffensive scrutiny as time wore on. More than once she had caught him looking at her with a fixedness that betrayed perplexity so plainly that she could not fail to recognize an underlying motive. He was vainly striving to refresh his memory; that was clear to her. There is no mistaking that look in a person's eyes. It cannot be disguised.

He was as deeply perplexed as ever when the time came for him to depart with Leslie. He asked her point blank on the last evening of his stay if they had ever met before, and she frankly confessed to a short memory for faces. It was not unlikely, she said, that he had seen her in London or in Paris, but she had not the faintest recollection of having seen him before their meeting in the road.

Urged by Sara, she had reluctantly consented to sit to him for a portrait during the month of June. He put the request in such terms that it did not sound like a proposition. It was not surprising that he should want her for a subject; in fact, he put it in such a way that she could not but feel that she would be doing him a great and enduring favor. She imposed but one condition: The picture was never to be exhibited. He met that, with bland magnanimity, by proffering the canvas to Mrs. Wrandall, as the subject's "next best friend," to "have and to hold so long as she might live," "free gratis," "with the artist's compliments," and so on and so forth, in airy good humor.

Leslie's aid had been solicited by both Sara and the painter in the final effort to overcome the girl's objections. He was rather bored about it, but added his voice to the general clamour. With half an eye one could see that he did not relish the idea of Hetty posing for days to the handsome, agreeable painter. Moreover, it meant that Booth, who could afford to gratify his own whims, would be obliged to spend a month or more in the neighborhood, so that he could devote himself almost entirely to the consummation of this particular undertaking. Moreover, it meant that Vivian's portrait was to be temporarily disregarded.

Sara Wrandall was quick to recognize the first symptoms of jealousy on the part of her brother-in-law. The new idol of the Wrandalls was in love, selfishly, insufferably in love as things went with all the Wrandalls. They hated selfishly, and so they loved. Her husband had been their king. But their king was dead, long live the king! Leslie had put on the family crown—a little jauntily, perhaps—cocked over the eye a bit, so to speak—but it was there just the same, annoyingly plain to view.

Sara had tried to like him. He had been her friend, the only one she could claim among them all. And yet, beneath his genial allegiance, she could detect the air of condescension, the bland attitude of a superior who defends another's cause for the reason that it gratifies Nero. She experienced a thrill of malicious joy in contemplating the fall of Nero. He would bring down his house about his head, and there would be no Rome to pay the fiddler.

* * * * * * *

Brandon Booth took a small cottage on the upper road, half way between the village and the home of Sara Wrandall, and not far from the abhorred "back gate" that swung in the teeth of her connections by marriage. He set up his establishment in half a day and, being settled, betook himself off to dine with Sara and Hetty. All his household cares, like the world, rested snugly on the shoulders of an Atlas named Pat, than whom there was no more faithful servitor in all the earth, nor in the heavens, for that matter, if we are to accept his own estimate of himself. In any event, he was a treasure. Booth's house was always in order. Try as he would, he couldn't get it out of order. Pat's wife saw to that.

As he swung jauntily down the tree-lined road that led to Sara's portals, Booth was full of the joy of living.

Sara was at the bottom of the terrace, moving among the flower beds in the formal garden.

At the sound of his footsteps on the gravel, Sara looked up and instantly smiled her welcome.

"It is so nice to see you again," she said, giving him her hand.

"'My heart's in the highlands,'" he quoted, waving a vague tribute to the heavens. "And it's nice of you to see me," he added gracefully. Then he pointed up the terrace. "Isn't she a picture? 'Gad, it's lovely—the whole effect. That picture against the sky—"

He stopped short, and the sentence was never finished, although she waited for him to complete it before remarking:

"Her heart is not in the highlands."

"You mean—something's gone wrong—"

"Oh, no," she said, still smiling; "nothing like that. Her heart is in the lowlands. You would consider Washington square to be in the lowlands, wouldn't you?"

"Oh, I see," he said slowly. "You mean she's thinking of Leslie."

"Who knows? It was a venture on my part, that's all. She may be thinking of you, Mr. Booth."

"Or some chap in old England, that's more like it," he retorted. "She can't be thinking of me, you know. No one ever thinks of me when I'm out of view. Out of sight, out of mind. No; she's thinking of something a long way off—or some one, if you choose to have it that way."

She smiled upon him with half-closed, shadowy eyes, and shook her head. Then she arose.

"Let us go in. Hetty is eager to see you again."

They started up the terrace. His face clouded.

"I have had a feeling all along that she'd rather not have this portrait painted, Mrs. Wrandall. A queer sort of feeling that she doesn't just like the idea of being put on canvas."

"Nonsense," she said, without looking at him.

Hetty met them at the top of the steps. The electric porch lights had just been turned on by the butler. The girl stood in the path of the light. Booth was never to forget the loveliness of her in that moment. He carried the image with him on the long walk home through the black night. (He declined Sara's offer to send him over in the car for the very reason that he wanted the half-hour of solitude in which to concentrate all the impressions she had made on his fancy.)

The three of them stood there for a few minutes, awaiting the butler's announcement. Sara's arm was about Hetty's shoulders. He was so taken up with the picture they presented that he scarcely heard their light chatter. They were types of loveliness so full of contrast that he marveled at the power of nature to create women in the same mold and yet to model so differently.

As they entered the vestibule, a servant came up with the word that Miss Castleton was wanted at the telephone, "long distance from New York."

The girl stopped in her tracks. Booth looked at her in mild surprise, a condition which gave way an instant later to perplexity. The look of annoyance in her eyes could not be disguised or mistaken.

"Ask him to call me up later, Watson," she said quietly.

"This is the third time he has called, Miss Castleton," said the man. "You were dressing, if you please, ma'am, the first time—"

"I will come," she interrupted sharply, with a curious glance at Sara, who for some reason avoided meeting Booth's gaze.

"Tell him we shall expect him on Friday," said Mrs. Wrandall.

"By George!" thought Booth, as she left them. "I wonder if it can be Leslie. If it is—well, he wouldn't be flattered if he could have seen the look in her eyes.

Later on, he had no trouble in gathering that it was Leslie Wrandall who called, but he was very much in the dark as to the meaning of that expressive look. He only knew that she was in the telephone room for ten minutes or longer, and that all trace of emotion was gone from her face when she rejoined them with a brief apology for keeping them waiting.

He left at ten-thirty, saying good night to them on the terrace. Sara walked to the steps with him.

"Don't you think her voice is lovely?" she asked. Hetty had sung for them.

"I dare say," he responded absently. "Give you my word, though, I wasn't thinking of her voice. She is lovely."

He walked home as if in a dream. The spell was on him.

Far in the night, he started up from the easy chair in which he had been smoking and dreaming and racking his brain by turns.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed aloud. "I remember! I've got it! And tomorrow I'll prove it."

Then he went to bed, with the storm from the sea pounding about the house, and slept serenely until Pat and Mary wondered whether he meant to get up at all.

"Pat," said he at breakfast, "I want you to go to the city this morning and fetch out all of the Studios you can find about the place. The old ones are in that Italian hall seat and the late ones are in the studio. Bring all of them."

"There's a divvil of a bunch of thim," said Pat ruefully.

He was not to begin sketching the figure until the following day. After luncheon, however, he had an appointment to inspect Hetty's wardrobe, ostensibly for the purpose of picking out a gown for the picture. As a matter of fact, he had decided the point to his own satisfaction the night before. She should pose for him in the dainty white dress she had worn on that occasion.

While they were going over the extensive assortment of gowns, with Sara as the judge from whom there seemed to be no appeal, he casually inquired if she had ever posed before.

He watched her closely as he put the question. She was holding up a beautiful point lace creation for his inspection, and there was a pleading smile on her lips. It must have been her favorite gown. The smile faded away. The hand that dangled the garment before his eyes suddenly became motionless, as if paralyzed. In the next instant, she recovered herself, and, giving the lace a quick fillip that sent its odor of sachet leaping to his nostrils, responded with perfect composure.

"Isn't there a distinction between posing for an artist, and sitting for one's portrait?" she asked.

He was silent. The fact that he did not respond seemed to disturb her after a moment or two. She made the common mistake of pressing the question.

The Girl Stopped in Her Tracks.

"Why do you ask?" was her inquiry. When it was too late she wished she had not uttered the words. He had caught the somewhat anxious note in her voice.

"We always ask that, I think," he said. "It's a habit."

"Oh," she said doubtfully.

"And by the way, you haven't answered."

She was busy with the gown for a time. At last she looked him full in the face.

"That's true," she agreed; "I haven't answered, have I? No, Mr. Booth, I've never posed for a portrait. It is a new experience for me. You will have to contend with a great deal of stupidity on my part. But I shall try to be plastic."

He uttered a polite protest, and pursued the question no farther. Her answer had been so palpably evasive that it struck him as bald, even awkward.

Pat, disgruntled and irritable to the point of profanity—he was a privileged character and might have sworn if he felt like it without receiving notice—came shambling up the cottage walk late that afternoon, bearing two large, shoulder-sagging bundles. He had walked from the station—a matter of half a mile—and it was hot. His employer sat in the shady porch, viewing his approach.

The young man drew a chair up to the table and began the task of working out the puzzle that now seemed more or less near to solution. He had a pretty clear idea as to the period he wanted to investigate. To the best of his recollection, the Studios published three or four years back held the key. He selected the numbers and began to run through them. He was searching for a vaguely remembered article on one of the lesser-known English painters who had given great promise at the time it was published but who dropped completely out of notice soon afterward because of a mistaken notion of his own importance. If Booth's memory served him right, the fellow came a cropper, so to speak, in trying to ride rough shod over public opinion, and went to the dogs. He had been painting sensibly up to that time, but suddenly went in for the most violent style of impressionism. That was the end of him.

There had been reproductions of his principal canvases, with sketches and studies in charcoal. One of these pictures had made a lasting impression on Booth: The figure of a young woman in deep meditation standing in the shadow of a window casement from which she looked out upon the world apparently without a thought of it. A slender young woman in vague reds and browns, whose shadowy face was positively illuminated by a pair of wonderful blue eyes.

He came upon it at last. For a long time he sat there gazing at the face of Hetty Castleton, a look of half-wonder, half-triumph in his eyes. There could be no doubt as to the identity of the subject. The face was hers: the velvety, dreamy, soulful eyes that had haunted him for years, as he now believed. In no sense could the picture be described as a portrait. It was a study, deliberately arranged and deliberately posed for in the artist's studio. He was mystified. Why should she, the daughter of Colonel Castleton, the grand-niece of an earl, be engaged in posing for what evidently was meant to be a commercial product of this whilom artist?

Turning from a skilfully colored full page reproduction, he glanced at first casually over the dozen or more sketches and studies on the succeeding pages. Many of them represented studies of women's heads and figures, with little or no attempt to obtain a likeness. Some were half-draped, showing in a sketchy way the long graceful lines of the half-nude figure, of bare shoulders and breasts, of gauze-like fabrics that but illy concealed impressive charms. Suddenly his eyes narrowed and a sharp exclamation fell from his lips. He bent closer to the pages and studied the drawings with redoubled interest.

Then he whistled softly to himself, a token of simple amazement. The head of each of these remarkable studies suggested in outline the head and features of Hetty Castleton! She had been Hawkright's model!

* * * * * * * * *

The next morning at ten he was at Southlook, arranging his easel and canvas in the north end of the long living room, where the light from the tall French windows afforded abundant and well-distributed light for the enterprise in hand. Hetty had not yet appeared. Sara, attired in a loose morning gown, was watching him from a comfortable chair in the corner, one shapely bare arm behind her head; the free hand was gracefully employed in managing a cigarette. He was conscious of the fact that her lazy, half-alert gaze was upon him all the time, although she pretended to be entirely indifferent to the preparations. Dimly he could see the faint smile of interest on her lips.

Hetty came in, calm, serene and lovelier than ever in the clear morning light. She was wearing the simple white gown he had chosen the day before. If she was conscious of the rather intense scrutiny he bestowed upon her as she gave him her hand in greeting, she did not appear to be in the least disturbed.

"You may go away, Sara," she said firmly. "I shall be too dreadfully self-conscious if you are looking on."

Booth looked at her rather sharply. Sara indolently abandoned her comfortable chair and left them alone in the room.

"Shall we try a few effects, Miss Castleton?" he inquired, after a period of constraint that had its effect on both of them.

"I am in your hands," she said simply.

He made suggestions. She fell into the position so easily, so naturally, so effectively, that he put aside all previous doubts and blurted out:

"You have posed before, Miss Castleton."

She smiled frankly. "But not for a really truly portrait," she said. "Such as this is to be."

He hesitated an instant. "I think I recall a canvas by Maurice Hawkright," he said, and at once experienced a curious sense of perturbation. It was not unlike fear.

Instead of betraying the confusion or surprise he expected, Miss Castleton merely raised her eyebrows inquiringly.

"What has that to do with me, Mr. Booth?" she asked.

He laughed awkwardly.

"Don't you know his work?" he inquired, with a slight twist of his lip.

"I may have seen his pictures," she replied, puckering her brow as if in reflection. "Oh," she cried, with a bright smile of understanding. "I see! Yes, I have a double—a really remarkable double. Have you never seen Hetty Glynn, the actress?"

"I am sure I have not," he said, taking a long breath. It was one of relief, he remembered afterward. "If she is so like you as all that, I couldn't have forgotten her."

"She is quite unknown, I believe she went on, ignoring the implied compliment. "A chorus girl, or something like that. They say she is wonderfully like me—or was, at least, a few years ago."

He was silent for a few minutes, studying her face and figure with the critical eye of the artist. As he turned to the canvas with his crayon point, he remarked, with an unmistakable note of relief in his voice:

"That explains everything. It must have been Hetty Glynn who posed for all those things of Hawkright's."

"I dare say," said she indifferently.

CHAPTER IX.

The Ghost at the Feast.

The next day he appeared bright and early with his copy of the Studio.

"There," he said, holding it before her eyes. She took it from his hand and stared long and earnestly at the reproduction.

"Do you think it like me?" she inquired innocently.

"Amazingly like you," he declared with conviction.

She turned the page. He was watching her closely. As she looked upon the sketches of the half-nude figure a warm blush covered her face and neck. She did not speak for a full minute, and he was positive that her fingers tightened their grasp on the magazine.

"The same model," he said quietly. She nodded her head.

"Hetty Glynn, I am sure," she said, after a pause, without lifting her eyes. Her voice was low, the words not very distinct.

He drew a long breath, and she looked up quickly. What he saw in her honest blue eyes convicted her.

Sara Wrandall came into the room at that moment. Hetty hastily closed the magazine and held it behind her. Booth had intended to show the reproduction to Mrs. Wrandall, but the girl's behavior caused him to change his mind. He felt that he possessed a secret that could not be shared with Sara Wrandall, then or afterward. Moreover, he decided that he would not refer to the Hawkright pictures again unless the girl herself brought up the subject. All this flashed through his mind as he stepped forward to greet the newcomer.

When he turned again to Hetty, the magazine had disappeared. He never saw it afterward, and, what is more to the point, he never asked her to produce it.

He thought hard over the situation. The obvious solution came to him: She had been at one time reduced to the necessity of posing, a circumstance evidently known to but few and least of all to Sara Wrandall, from whom the girl plainly meant to keep the truth. This conviction distressed him, but not in the way that might have been expected. He had no scruples about sharing the secret or in keeping it inviolate; his real distress lay in the fear that Mrs. Wrandall might hear of all this from other and perhaps ungentle sources. As for her posing for Hawkright, it meant little or nothing to him. In his own experience, two girls of gentle birth had served as models for pictures of his own making, and he fully appreciated the exigencies that had driven them to it. One had posed in the "altogether." She was a girl of absolutely irreproachable character, who afterward married a chap he knew very well, and who was fully aware of that short phase in her life. That feature of the situation meant nothing to him. He was in no doubt concerning Hetty. She was what she appeared to be: A gentlewoman.

He admitted to himself that he was under the spell of her. It was not love, he was able to contend; but it was a mysterious appeal to something within him that had never revealed itself before. He couldn't quite explain what it was.

In his solitary hours at the cottage on the upper road, he was wont to take his friend Leslie Wrandall into consideration. As a friend, was it not his duty to go to him with his sordid little tale? Was it right to let Wrandall go on with his wooing when there existed that which might make all the difference in the world to him? He invariably brought these deliberations to a close by relaxing into a grim smile of amusement, as much as to say: "Serve him right, anyway. Trust him to sift her antecedents thoroughly. He's already done it, and he is quite satisfied with the result. Serve them all right, for that matter."

He Was Watching Her Closely.

But then there was Hetty Glynn. What of her? Hetty Glynn, real or mythical, was a disturbing factor in his deductions. If there was a real Hetty Glynn and she was Hetty Castleton's double, what then?

On the fifth day of a series of rather prolonged and tedious sittings, he was obliged to confine his work to an hour and a half in the forenoon. Mrs. Wrandall was having a few friends in for auction-bridge immediately after luncheon. She asked him to stay over and take a hand, but he declined. He did not play bridge.

It is interesting to note the change that has been made in the headlines and cartoons of the newspapers in the last few days, and equally as much change in the editorials also. Since Teddy came back they have most forgotten the war in Mexico, and turned to speculating as to what he is going to propose in matters of politics.

Read the editorial in this issne which we reproduce from the Montgomery Journal. It tells the truth about the elections that have been held in this state. But in it we see little substantiation for the claims of harmony and righteousness that have been boasted for the Democratic party in Alabama, by some local politician whose experience is not any broader than the straw hat which shields him from the sun as he daily labors for life and existence, lured on by the enchanting story of Democratic prosperity brought to him by the disciples of Woodrow who are seeking his vote.

CORRUPT PRACTICES EXPOSED

Before leaving the recent primaries entirely alone, before getting entirely away from them under cover of appealing to the mercenary sides of men, boosting business, we should stop for a moment and listen to the revelations of the methods adopted by the scheming and unscrupulouls who sought to carry their ends by fair or foul means.

It matters not upon which side the scheming political boss was, it matters not who have been guilty of the employment of illegal methods and engaged in lawless practices in the primaries, be they high or low, all should be punished if proven guilty before a jury of their peers, and they should, by the grace of our grand juries, be given an opportunity to prove their innocence.

The widespread complaints, coming from one end of the state to the other, from the Tennessee valley to the Mobile bay, clearly points to wholesale, if not unprecedented frauds in the primary. As to who were the beneficiaries in all instances remains to be seen by developments, but it is but right that public attention should be called to them, that grand juries should investigate them, and that the guilty should be brought to justice.

Our elections should be kept pure. The safety and perpetuity of our republican reform of government depends upon an incorruptible electorate and and undefiled ballot.

Referring to the primaries down in Crenshaw, the Louverne Journal, which supported Mr. Henderson, says:

"The man who buys votes makes himself inelligible to hold office. The editor of the Journal has the positive proof that votes were bought with whiskey and money in Crenshaw county."

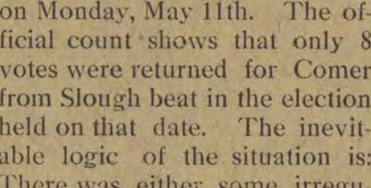
Down in Dale county there seems to have been irregularity in all save about six boxes, and there promises to be a warm contest over the result. Refering to the allegations of fraud in the other boxes the Ozark Herald says:

"Just what will be done with the vote at these other boxes has not been decided. The friends on both sides claim that there have been irregularities. Whether this is true we do not know, but we believe that the people of Dale county ought to have the man for sheriff for whom they cast a majority vote whether this be the one or the other, and that they ought to have for commissioner the one who was honestly elected. This will satisfy them and nothing short of this will."

In another county in the wiregrasss, Coffee, there is or seems to be a similar condition, at least fraud in the primaries is charged. The Enteoprise Ledger says: "We print everywhere in this issue of the Ledger a notice which was served on the county executive committee at its last meeting by W. W. Sanders, attorney for C. R. Davis, notifying the committee of a probable contest on the sheriff's race."

The editor of the Birmingham Ledger says that he witnessed at polling place in Jefferson many men voting without checking them on the list, thus enabling any man with a ticket in hand to vote and having his vote counted unchallenged. The same condition existed here and at various polling places.

Down in Houston the Eagle says that men were challenged at the polling places but their friends said to them, "go ahead and sign the affadavit; the whole matter will be forgotten after the election."



But the most remarkable revelations have been made in Butler and in Limestone. At one of the boxes in Butler there were 14 votes returned for Comer and 22 have signed affadavits that they voted for Comer at the same box.

In Limestone at one box 8 votes were returned for Comer and 30 voters have signed a statement that they all voted for Comer. Referring to the incident and the charges, the Limestone Democrat says:

"On page one of this issue will be found a statement signed by thirty citizens of Slough beat in which they solemnly aver that they each voted for B. B. Comer for governor in the primary held on Monday, May 11th. The official count shows that only 8 votes were returned for Comer from Slough beat in the election held on that date. The inevitable logic of the situation is: There was either some irregularity in the counting of the vote or at least 22 of the thirty men whose names are signed to the aforesaid paper have made false statements.

"It will be seen that if these 30 men voted for Comer it made a difference of 44 votes, as 22 would have been changed from Comer to Henderson, making a net difference of 44. If such practices were indulged in in three beats in every county in the state it could probably have changed the result in Alabama."

The New Baby is World's Wonder

Every tiny infant makes life's perspective wider and brighter. And whatever there is to enhance its arrival and to ease and comfort the expectant mother should be given attention. Among the real helpful things is an external abdominal application known as "Mother's Friend." There is scarcely a community but what has its enthusiastic admirer of this splendid embrocation. It is so well thought of by women who know that most drug stores throughout the United States carry "Mother's Friend" as one of their staple and reliable remedies. It is applied to the abdominal muscles to relieve the strain on ligaments and tendons.

Those who have used it refer to the ease and comfort experienced during the period of expectancy; they particularly refer to the absence of nausea, often so prevalent as a result of the natural expansion. In a little book are described more fully the many reasons why "Mother's Friend" has been a friend indeed to women with timely hints, suggestions and helps for ready reference. It should be in all homes. "Mother's Friend" may be had of almost any druggist, but if you fail to find it write us direct and also write for book to Bradfield Regulator Co., 403 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

A VOTER REPLIES

Editor Union-Banner:—I m again asking you for space to repl, to Same Old Moses in last week's Press. First, it seems that Moses was very anxious for everybody to go into his primary and vote. I want to ask him a question just for information. Why were you so anxious about wanting people to go into your primary, when you knew that the rules and regulations of your Democratic committee forbade them doing so? Yet you advised them to go in and violate the law. Now Moses, was it because you had promised to deliver some votes and you did not have them? Will you please answer this, and tell us if there was any other consideration? Of course you know that in the opening of your article, (or the one that had your name signed to it) you spoke of a barrel. Well, I have heard some of the Comer Democrats say that the railroads and whisky people had spent a barrel of money to beat their man Comer. So I did not know but that this was the barrel you had in mind when writing your letter.

Now Mo[illegible] you spoke of "A Voter" trying to stir up strife among the uneducated pe[illegible]. May the Lord have mercy on a man who is a Democrat, that is so ignorant that he does not know any better, or one that knows better, and has the gall and audacity to talk about the Progressives o[illegible] Republicans stirring up strife after h[illegible] has just gone through with and with[illegible]sed the strife and confusion that has [illegible]en carried on in the Democratic c[illegible]mpaigns and primaries, between Com[illegible] and the common people on the one [illegible]le, and Chas. Henderson backed by [illegible]he railroads and whisky interests on [illegible]e other. Now Moses, you spoke of my [illegible]gnorant followers. Of course I will a[illegible]mit that there are a lot of ignorant pe[illegible]le (or at least you think there are) lik[illegible] myself, and I will also tell you that wh[illegible]re there is the most ignorance, there [illegible]ou will find the most Democrats. N[illegible]w I do not mean to insinuate that all Democrats are ignorant, for we have some bright men who are Democrats, but bright men can have mistaken ideas. The above is true, and every enlightened man knows it. Now Moses, I will tell you that we ignorant people here in Chilton County have reached such a degree of intelligence and enlightenment that we are not going to be dictated to by your Democratic bosses as to how we shall vote. But we are going to think for ourselves and vote for what we think is best for us, and of course that means that we will elect the Progressive ticket as before.

Oh yes, Moses says that I made false and slanderous attacks upon him. If they were false, why didn't he show wherein they were false? But Moses knows, and so do the people of this county, that [illegible] him is true. As [illegible] I think that would be a [illegible]g to do. It seems to me that you would have to accuse or charge a man falsely to slander him, and if half of what the Democrats have told on him is true it would almost be impossible for me to charge him falsely. "Read his slanderous letter," says Moses, "and you will readily see the insults he threw at me." Oh my, Moses, be it far from me, this matter of trying to insult you. I was just thinking that if you did not get insulted at what some of the Democratic bosses did for you just a while before you declared your intentions of affilliating with their party, it seems that it would be utterly impossible for anyone to insult you. But if you took what they did for you then as an insult, and it caused you to go to the Democratic party, the Lord knows that I certainly do not want to insult you for fear that it might have a like effect on you and cause you to want to come back to the Progressives.

You seem to be the same old Moses whom the people of this county elected Sheriff about the year 1900, who afterward resigned and gave the office to the Democrat, giving as your reasons that if you had not resigned and got out, they would have put you in the penitentiary. Now Moses, will you be so kind as to tell the people what offense you had committed to cause you to be put in the penitentiary, or what reason did you have to believe that they were going to do that? I know that it is not very common for the people to be sent to the penitentiary unless they have committed some offense, and people who have not violated the law are not very uneasy about being punished.

Will you please tell the people how it happened that a certain young man who had been placed in jail for breaking into a store at Cooper while you were Sheriff escaped from the jail and got away. Of course that has been several years back, but I guess you can remember it.

Now you say that you had my picture taken with some kinky headed brethren in a convention in Birmingham. Moses, that is a mistake, for my picture was never taken in a convention in Birmingham, nor at any other convention, and you never saw me in Birmingham. But of course I know that you did not know any better, for when you and your bunch got in that convention hall and you looked around and saw yourself and those who were with you, you just thought that everybody in Chilton County, both Republicans and Democrats, were there. Will you tell us just why it was that you happened to be at that convention. Wasn't it expected that a contest would be filed against the regular elected delegation from this county in the hopes of having them unseated, and a bogus delegation seated in their places by that convention? And is it not a fact that you, with some others, went along with the hopes of getting to sit in that convention on that bogus delegation with those kinky-headed brethren? Now is this true? Now Mose, will you tell us the difference between an Alabama negro in a Republican convention, and a Colorado negro in a Democratic one? This shows what you and your Democratic leaders think about the ignorance of your blind following here in the South.

When the Democrats of the grand old Democratic state of Colorado elected a negro delegate to the national convention that nominated Woodrow Wilson for President, your papers gave the rest of the news, but of course they left that part off, and your leaders said yes, the people in the South are ignorant and we can keep them from finding this out. But up in the North we want them to know it, for in some of these states the negro is the balance of power, and we must get his vote up there in order to get in, and of course the Democrats will do anything to get in office. But let me tell you that your Democratic following in the South are not so ignorant as they have been in past, and they are catching on to your hypocritical tricks. You are not going to be able to fool them as easy in the future as you have in the past.

Now, listen Moses. You say that I raised this negro question. Don't you know that the people who read your first article will know that the above statement is false? You yourself raised the negro question with your white supremacy rot in your first article. But as you have raised it I am going to stay with you on it, and hold you to the truth, or I will expose you and your hypocritical crowd.

You say that you are ashamed of such dirty politics. I have heard other men say that same thing, and they quit the Democratic party just as quickly as they could. But you can't hardly make the people believe that you are so ashamed, because you went to the Democratic party knowing of their dirty politics. You also spoke of the hit dog "hollering." Well I do not think that being hit and "hollering" will hurt very much, for if so you would have passed to the great beyond long ago.

Yes Mose, I know that it was a very lively scrap that you all had over the Governor's nomination in your primary, and I will tell you now that you are going to have a job on your hands getting all of your hatchets buried before the November election.

Now Moses, if you will answer the questions I have asked above, then I may ask you some more.

Mr. Editor, in conclusion I want to say a few words to The Press. If you remember, the Press is the paper that took the Hon. Fred Blackmon's record with his friendly standing and relations with the railroads and corporations, and gave him such a stirring defeat on April 6th.

The Press says that I make much a do about a negro that happened to be an office holder in far away washington. Notice what he says, and how he tries to make and leave false impressions. He speaks of far away washington as if it were the state of washington. Of course he knows that would be getting some great distance from our Democrrtic President and Southern Democrats. But he failed to tell you that President wilson appointed this negro judge and the Democratic Senate confirmed it, on April 24th last.

Also the Press says that I started this negro question, which he knows that I did not do, for his great Democratic leader, "The Same Old Moses," started it. But he says that it is a very delicate question for him to discuss. To be sure, I am satisfied of that, especially while you have a Democratic President who is appointing them to office. He says we do not have to go to washington to find negros in office, but he says they were appointed during Roosevelt's administration. But he failed to tell you that the Democrats were retaining them in the offices to which they were appointed. I will ask the Press man if it were wrong for Roosevelt to appoint negroes to office, is it right for wilson to hold all of them, and in addition, appoint some more, which very thing he knows he is doing? Now Mr. Press, you know that of all the Presidents, both Democratic and Republican, who have ever appointed negroes to office, your present Democratic Presidbnt, woodrow wilson has gone further than any of his predecessors, and appointed a negro to the responsible position of City Judge in the capital of this nation.

I will ask the Press to tell its readers the difference between a kinky-headed Republican and a kinky-headed Democrat. WILL HE DO IT? And is your memory so vague that you cannot tell the people whether or not the negro vote in the Democratic primary in our sister county of Autauga nominated the present democratic sheriff of that county

Now in conclusion, I want to say to the Press that if he does not feel ashamed of himself and his crowd, it certainly comes with poor grace for him to express his shame for anyone else. As it seems you have been reading the "Yellow Jacket;" my advice to you is to continue reading it. By your doing so the scales will fall from your eyes and you will realize your ruined condition. Surely then you will crawl out from that old hypocritical worn out false negro issue cloak of your and put on a brand new progressive suit and then you can meet your fellow man with a smile, and feel good, and quit meeting him with your head hung down and looking so mean.

Respectfully,
A VOTER.

A MISTAKEN IDEA

There are some people who still resort to nauseated pills or alcoholic syrups to relieve colds, nervousness or general debility, and who know that the pure, concentrated nourishment in Scott's Emulsion is eminently better, but refrain from taking it because they fear it may add to excessive fat or obesity.

This is a mistaken idea, because Scott's Emulsion first strengthens the body before increasing flesh. Its blood-forming properties aid nature to throw off sickness by building health from its very source, and flesh is formed only by its continued use. Avoid alcoholic substitutes for SCOTT'S.

CAN A YOUNG MAN LOVE TWO GIRLS SIMULTANEOUSLY?

The brilliant black eye
May in triumph let fly
All its darts without caring who feels 'em;
But the soft eye of blue
Though it scatter wounds, too,
Is much better pleased when it heals 'em.

So much is said about a man's best girl that we cannot help wondering how many girls he is supposed to have. Does each awaken similar sentiments in his breast or is his liking carefully graded? It must be conceded that he pays each one a certain amount of attention or one flame or the other would die out for lack of sparking. If he is an athletic young fellow, fond of out - of - door sports, he has one girl for the golf links or one who doesn't balk at a five-mile walk on a blustery afternoon. He has his automobile girl, who doesn't quiver an eyelash no matter how near he reaches the danger mark in dashing along. She's the girl, too, he takes to the races. But she isn't the girl he takes to the theater, or to the restaurant afterward, ordering wine for her, exultant over the sensation she creates when she dances the tango with him the length of the spacious dining room. Then there's the pretty stenographer in his uncle's office. She is the girl he presents with books because she refuses bonbons. He waits for her on stormy evenings to take her to a car, and it is she of whom he asks advice on matters relating to her sex—whether a fellow was justified in refusing an invitation to some affair which he did not care to attend, although he half suspected it was arranged for his benefit. He considers the advisability of breaking with two or three of his pleasant companions ere they become sweethearts.

But it is so difficult that he fears he is equally in love with each and every one of them. When his dear old mother asks him to bring his best girl around for some little home gathering, he does a lot of thinking. The dear old soul would not understand the girl who doted on golf, but detested breadmaking and home duties. Nor would the girl mad over tango and cocktails appeal to her.

He concludes his automobile girl would not be looked upon with favor by his mother, who might think the lassie wouldn't bother her head to check him if he went too fast down pleasure's road. As for the stenographer, true, she hadn't fancy clothes, but she had a very sensible head on her trim little body. She wasn't what might be called a beauty, but she had a smile and a winning way that was wonderfully taking. Her dignity would please. There was no frivolity about her. Her life was serious. Being the only support of a widowed invalid mother, not only the bread earning, but the bread making, devolved upon her. Last, but by no means least, many a time he wearied of the other girls in turn, mentally vowing each call on this or that one should be his last.

He never wearied talking to the stenographer. Each time he talked with her he liked her the better. There was something about her which made her seem different from all the rest—a subtle charm which made her heart glow when he thought of her. He knew by "these signs and tokens" that she was the girl and the only one "in the bunch" whom he would care to take to his mother as his best girl.

IF A WIFE REFUSES HER SMILES.

Nor do they trust their tongues alone,
But speak a language of their own;
Can read a nod, a shrug, a look,
Far better than a printed book;
Convey a libel in a frown
And wink a reputation down.

The success of marriage depends largely upon the view each takes of being companionable after the newness of the honeymoon has worn off. The bride with a will of her own remembers the well-meant advice of some of the old aunties of the neighborhood: "You must begin as you mean to end, my dear! One or the other will be boss in the home. Some young husbands will be only too glad to give the reins into the wife's hands. There are others not so docile."

Foolish is the bride who acts on the advice of others. No two husbands are alike. The bride who expects her young husband to hand over every cent of his wages from the start may run against the first rock of disaster to her matrimonial bark. The man who is not used to having a woman run his pocketbook may demur. He is eager to do what is right by her.

After much discussion he signifies his willingness to give her the greater part of his salary, but insists firmly upon withholding a small part of it each week—assuring her that he is making good use or the money in his own way, but putting her off evasively when she insists upon knowing just what it is being used for. She accuses him of drinking or smoking on the sly, accusations which he indignantly denies.

The first cloud appears on the horizon of their married life when he discovers his bride has a temper.

He comes home after a hard day's work, to meet a wife who has no smile for him. Instead, she frowns and answers him in monosyllables. So it continues. The home he imagined was to be an earthly paradise turns out to be so dreary an abode that he had rather turn his face anywhere than there. It's a man's nature to look for sympathy wherever he can find it. He generally turns to some woman who has a cheery disposition, a pleasant greeting for him, and a kindly word, which is a sort of solace to him. He wishes he could be met with a smile such as this woman has in his home. The young wife is high spirited and will not give in. When the husband has a like disposition, matters grow from bad to worse.

He is afraid that his wife harbors a mistrust of him regarding the small amount he holds back. From the time the wife takes the stand that she will be cold to him and he will be glad to yield to her will the outside influence strengthens; proves a powerful magnetic foe to the wife's happiness.

Husbands and wives should make up their minds to have no secrets from each other. A wife should consider her husband's privilege by not insisting on having every cent in his pay envelope as long as he confides to her what good use he puts it to. He may have an aged, needy relative to whom he gives the money. It would be much cheaper for him to bring his old relative to his home and care for her there. But he considers it might not meet with her aprpoval. He does not wish to put care on her young shoulders. Unless a wife is sure her husband is spending his money foolishly, she should not begrudge him the few dollars he earns himself. A wife's smile is the sunshine of life, her frown its cloud.

UNRAVELING THE OLD LOVE TIE.

A heart filled with coldness,
Killed by dissembling,
Crushed by ingratitude,
And—this—is—Love.

When love words have been spoken and plighted vows exchanged, the belief is that the silken tie thus woven is to last; that time will never change it. There are loves and loves. Some are of the quality which endures; others are of so loose a warp that it soon frays out of its own volition.

In other words, the love which is born of a fleeting fancy soon filters out of the heart, as though it were an hour-glass.

There are men who cannot bind their affections unto any one woman for a length of time without the tie becoming irksome to them. These are the men who deliberately plan to break away. With some sweethearts this is is not so easily done. There are women whom love has so blinded that they fail to realize their lover is losing affection for them.

If he disappoints her by not coming to take her out, she makes all sorts of excuses in her heart for him. The reason he offers is a lame one, but it passes with her. He makes up his mind to break with her, surely, but slowly. He cannot make her jealous; his coldness and lack of attention to her have no effect. Even the little quarrels which he gets up she bridges over without ado.

He finds it the most difficult task of his life to unravel the old love tie; it will stretch, but never break. He wonders, as all men do, why a woman will persist in clinging to a love that has no warmth for her. Such men should have a heart-to-heart talk with a sweetheart as soon as they discover their change of attitude toward her.

It is cruel to allow her to feed her heart on hopes of marriage which he knows will never be realized. He must know the fault of the situation is entirely his own. He made love to the woman on the impulse of the moment and proposed marriage before he was sure of himself. Unraveling a love knot is tedious work. Men who are changeable of heart usually marry at last; but the girl they wed will not stand for a long, drawn-out courtship.

They must speak quickly if they hope to win her hand. They know there's no loitering in love's path: The love in this instance is unravelable material. It centers in the marriage ring. A girl should beware of the lover who makes no effort to keep his hold on her affections.

Expedition to Define Boundary.

The Turco-Persian boundary has heretofore been one of the problematical features on the map of Asia. As far back as 1843, a mixed commission attempted to define this frontier with only partial success, and since that time repeated efforts have been made by the great powers, as well as the two countries immediately concerned, to complete the task, but the boundary has remained rather a zone of debatable territory than a definite line. Finally, in November of last year, a complete understanding on the subject was reached, and a protocol was signed in Constantinople in accordance with which a commission consisting of British, Russian, Turkish and Persian delegates will undertake a survey of the boundary. This is expected to require at least eighteen months, and will doubtless be productive of interesting geographical results.—Scientific American.

SUCCESSFUL FARMING ON SMALL SCALE

Growing Castor Beans to Form Screen for Garden.

(By W. B. MERCER, Farmer and Live Stock Breeder. Copyright, 1914.)

A striking example of what can be accomplished on a small acreage well handled came under the writer's observation a few years ago.

A newcomer landed in a small town in an all-cotton section about the time cotton growing was at its lowest ebb. The farmers naturally were looking for some new crop to substitute for cotton, and tomatoes were selected. The people went wild, and all decided to put in a large acreage, the newcomer with the rest. A majority knew nothing about growing the crop from a market standpoint and less about handling it. A small crop, poorly packed, of an inferior grade and miserably handled resulted in an absolute failure involving every one in debt.

The newcomer had just bought on credit 13 acres of land, with a cabin on it, and at the end of the season he was involved for more than $3,000. What to do was a serious question. He was too poor to move and had not even the necessaries of life to begin another season on. Having a good reputation for honesty, energy and perseverance, he determined to fight it out.

A business firm offered to furnish him a limited amount with which to start again. A gardener and trucker by nature, he decided to continue this line of farming. The previous year's experience had taught him not to depend on one crop, so radishes, cabbage, beans, peas, tomatoes, cantaloupes and other crops were planted on a small scale to furnish ready cash. He also set out a strawberry patch, a fruit orchard, planted early corn, sugar cane and sweet and Irish potatoes. Everything did well that year, and the second year strawberries, cabbage, tomatoes and potatoes were selected for main crops, still growing enough vegetables to supply local demand and a little to ship when prices were good. He shipped nothing but the very best; sold culls and inferior stuff to local trade or fed it to stock. He then established a regular line of customers in the nearby towns and cities who handled his stuff at fancy prices throughout the season. When his name appeared on a package it sold for a good price, while other growers' stuff went to waste for want of buyers. In less than ten years he had paid for the land, wiped out all debts, built a comfortable home, a splendid barn, etc., and had a bank account of several thousands.

BEES ARE PROFITABLE

NOT A HAZARDOUS UNDERTAKING AS GENERALLY SUPPOSED.

Outfit of Five Hives and All Necessary Tools for Starting Can Be Bought for $11—Honey-Bearing Plants Are Essential.

(By E. KNEELAND. Copyright, 1914.)

If the amount of time required to look after bees successfully is considered, in proportion to the revenue derived, the most indifferent must regard beekeeping a very sound investment.

A beginner with bees would do well to visit some one who keeps them and spend the day learning the ins and outs of their management—how to tell the queens, workers and drones, about the opening of hives and handling of frames. But before buying any bees send for a hive and study all its parts. Usually bees are bought hive and all, but frequently the hive is not the right sort and the bees have to be transferred.

An outfit of five hives and all necessary tools for starting can be bought for about $11. A good, select, tested queen, suitable for starting with, will cost $3. Start with a one-frame nucleus in each hive, which, if properly managed, will make strong colonies by fall. These will cost $2 each.

Location is not important. The town or village dweller will find the rear of the lot the best place. The ground about the hives should be kept smooth and the grass mown. Never keep bees near the highway, or lawsuits may result from bee stings. Too much shade is as bad for bees as too little. Strike a happy medium, and if the hives are exposed to strong winds build a windbreak of some kind to protect them.

Bees are divided into two classes—workers and drones. The Italians are the most profitable and the easiest to handle, being very gentle. The Italian worker bee has a distinguishing characteristic—namely, three yellow bands. The workers make all the honey and usually work themselves to death in three months, while the drones live even a shorter time. The queen often lives four or five years, as she does very little outdoor work.

Every swarm has a queen, whose duty consists in laying eggs for hatching future workers and drones, and a healthy queen will lay during her lifetime from 900,000 to 1,200,000 eggs. Swarming is generally the result of a colony outgrowing its hive, but by using large hives this will be in a measure prevented.

Bees must be able to find plenty of honey bearing plants in order to produce honey. The basswood ranks next to alfalfa, sage and white clover as the best honey producer. Buckwheat and all kinds of flowers supply bees with honey-making material. An average of 35 pounds of honey per hive can be counted on in good seasons.

Bees are a great aid in the pollenization of the flowers.

USEFUL IN PULLING STUMPS

Rocking Member Affords Leverage of Tremendous Power—Easily Operated by Two Men.

For tree stumps that are small enough to be uprooted without blasting or burning a Missouri man has invented a powerful pulling apparatus. A rocking member has two brackets rising from it and a bar secured between them and extending at an angle to it. Gripping arms, one above the other, and with chains attached to their free ends, extend horizontally and engage the stump. When these chains are made fast the handle is pressed down and the leverage afforded by the rocking member and the peculiar construction of the device is tremendous. Two men pressing down on this handle can uproot a stump that would resist the efforts of a team of horses, or at least would require a team to pull it up.

IN ROUGH WATERS

Democratic Party's Days of Smooth Sailing Passed.

Many Questions of Policy Upon Which There Is Division Within the Ranks—Sugar Tariff Subject Is Prominent.

President Wilson is on the defensive. In this one sentence is summed up the change which has occurred within the last three or four months in the political situation.

In the first place, the tariff is not fulfilling the ante-election promises. The cost of living has not been reduced, the manufacturing business has decreased, the American markets are beginning to be flooded with foreign-made goods, and the condition of the treasury is not satisfactory. The proposed repeal of the tolls exemption law is another disturbing element. It is a question upon which the Democratic party is not united, and in the approaching campaign there will be thousands of voters who will call upon the president and his supporters to demonstrate the wisdom and justice of repeal. There is also considerable doubt as to the righteousness of invading Mexico, especially when the reason alleged for the hostile action was not the sacrifice of American lives and property nor the insult to the flag, but the necessity of preventing an importation of arms from reaching Huerta. The treaty with Colombia, which includes an apology and a gift of $25,000,000, must also be defended. Another matter which is yet to be explained is the statement that the margin of profit for the sugar trust has nearly doubled since the reduction of duty occurred on the 1st of March, the additional profit for the month of March alone being estimated at $3,000,000, while the wholesale price of sugar has not changed. In the West, where eleven beet sugar factories have already closed down, the sugar question is being agitated and is already giving the Democratic politicians considerable trouble. Some interesting facts in connection with the operation of the low sugar tariff in aiding the sugar trust will soon be brought to the attention of congress and thus the subject will be injected into the campaign.

Colonel Roosevelt's Position.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt will not run for president on a Republican ticket in 1916. He made this clear when he declared at Para, Brazil, that although he had not yet considered being a candidate in that year, if he did decide to run it would be on a Progressive ticket.

"I can't swallow the Republican bosses," he said.

Colonel Roosevelt intends to take an active part in the fall campaign, but he will not run for any office in New York state. His activity in politics will be resumed after the wedding of Kermit Roosevelt in Spain. In the meantime the colonel will recuperate from the effects of his journey of exploration in Brazil.

Bull Moose Party in Missouri.

The Bull Moose activity is general over Missouri and is particularly marked in many Ozark counties, along the western boundary and in the river counties in the northern central part of the state. Despite the indifference of some of the state leaders the Progressives have managed to strengthen their organization in many places and in St. Louis have effected an entire reorganization in the last year.

The whispered hope of Missouri Republicans that the Bull Moose would be found back in the old ranks by 1914 remains a hope, and that is about all.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Leaderless Party.

A survey of the field with regard to a new leadership of the Republican party necessarily springing from the younger element since the veterans are all on the passive list, will tone down the confidence arising from the discovery that the defection of 1912 was flowing back to the reservation.

The "old guard" is not averse to abdicating the leadership to younger hands and supposedly more virile minds, for the law of succession is inexorable—youth must be served, as always. Yet all is not well. The vacuum does not fill automatically, as in the past.

Will Have National Ticket.

George W. Perkins, national chairman of the Progressive party, declared that the party would place a presidential ticket in the field in 1916. He made this statement after reading the dispatch from Para, Brazil, quoting Col. Theodore Roosevelt as refusing to consider a nomination by the Republicans, and saying that if he became a candidate it would be only on the Progressive ticket.

Beginning to Wake Up.

Republicans who have put faith in the reports printed in untrustworthy newspapers that the Progressive party was disintegrating are coming to the conclusion that they have been intentionally and needlessly fooled.

Hard to Forget.

Sereno Payne's description of the Bull Moose party as a bumblebee is apt. It will be recalled that Mr. Payne's party was severely stung.—Rochester Herald.

Flooding and Cramping!

STELLA-VITAE STOPPED IT!

This has a world of meaning to every woman who suffers as Mrs. J. S. Blair, of Enterprise, Okla., suffered and there are many thousands such.

Mrs. Blair tells the story of her suffering and cure much better than we can tell it. We quote her own words:

"I had been flooding, cramping and vomiting for five months and taking medicine from as good a doctor as the country affords, but he did me no good. I got tired of doctor's medicine and sent to the drug store for a woman's medicine and the druggist sent me STELLA-VITAE.

"One bottle stopped everything and I felt like a different woman. I have used six bottles already and will continue to use and praise STELLA-VITAE whenever I need a woman's medicine."

What STELLA-VITAE did for Mrs. Blair it will do for you. We guarantee the first bottle to benefit you. Your money back if it don't. You cannot afford to not try it—when you have all to gain and not a penny to lose.

Go to your dealer today and begin trying STELLA-VITAE, trying to become well. We lose the price if you are not benefited. In many years of guaranteeing STELLA-VITAE less than one bottle out of every thousand has failed to benefit.

Your chances of being benefited are a thousand to one!

"Sure," was the reply, "what would you call it?"

"In my country," said the stranger from across the border, "we would call it a seven-day pitched battle!"

Queen Poor Conversationalist.

Queen Mary is a poor conversationalist. On some one being brought up to her it is said she will begin to talk with remarkable felicity, setting the other at ease and delighting him. Then, all of a sudden, she suddenly ceases, an acute silence supervenes and the other does not know whether to break the pause or slip away. The fact is the queen talks well by dint of concentration; this does not always last until the end of the conversation, and once the thread is broken she grows abstracted, thinking of something else.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ECONOMICAL USE OF MEAT IN THE HOME.

In these days of the high cost of provisions, when the price of meat especially is soaring, it behooves the housewife to consider well all possible methods of economizing in her use of this costly foodstuff. Perhaps she will approve of the advice of the vegetarian, and banish meat entirely from her table. Whether this is a wise course to pursue, however, is to be questioned, for the concensus of opinion among the majority of those who have given special attention to the subject is that flesh foods are a wholesome and normal part of the diet.

The value of a meat as a food depends chiefly on the presence of two classes of nutrients, protein, which is essential for the construction and repair of the body, and fat, which, together with the protein, yields energy for muscular power and for keeping up the temperature of the body. The mineral matter which it contains is also of much importance, though small in quantity. It is possible to obtain all of the necessary protein and energy from other materials, but for many reasons it is doubtful if such a proceeding would be either desirable or wise for the average person. Exactly how much meat should be eaten is a difficult matter to determine; probably if the housekeeper serves one meat dish a day, supplemented by other materials supplying protein, such as milk, eggs, and beans, there will be little danger of getting too much meat or too little protein. If the diet has a normal amount of fruit, vegetables, and other foods, as it should, mineral matter and other important constituents will be supplied also. It is but natural that the vigorous out-of-door man should require a larger amount of meat than the one who leads a sedentary life, just as he would also require more bread, butter and other foods.

The first opportunity to economize occurs in the marketing. To secure the best results each housekeeper should familiarize herself with the various kinds and cuts of meats, and do her buying in person. Different kinds and cuts of meat vary greatly in price. Sometimes the cheaper cuts contain a larger proportion of refuse than the actual cost of the edible portion. Aside from this the advantage of the more expensive cuts lies in tenderness and flavor rather than in nutritive value. Recent experiments have shown that there is very little difference between the various cuts and kinds of meat, so far as either the amount of protein, or the thoroughness and ease of digestion is concerned. Therefore, those who wish to use the cheaper cuts need not feel that in so doing their families will be less well nourished than by the more expensive meats.

Carefully following the market and taking advantage of any opportunity that may offer also helps to reduce the outlay for meat. A consideration of the taste of the members of the family will go a long way toward saving waste. Economy is also furthered by a careful serving at the table, where each person should be given no more than he wishes or ordinarily eats. There can be no doubt that too much meat is consumed in many homes. A more healthful and economical diet may be secured by serving fish, milk, eggs, cheese, etc., in place of an excess of meat.

In rural communities co-operative slaughter houses and storage houses are often useful not only in reducing the cost of meat, but in making fresh meat available in summer. If the size of her family or her storage facilities warrant, the housekeeper may find it advantageous to buy the whole carcass of a small animal, such as a pig or a lamb, or a large section of beef, thus securing better prices.

It is in the actual preparation of the meat that the housewife accomplishes her greatest saving. If nothing better can be done with the bones and trimmings, she can always use them to good advantage in the soup kettle, and she may employ the fat for cooking, in place of the more expensive butter and lard. A double boiler is the best utensil to use in trying out small portions of fat. There is no danger of burning the fat and the odor is much less noticeable than if it is heated in a dish set directly over the fire. A good method to follow is to pour boiling water over the fat, to boil thoroughly, and then to set it away to cool. The cold fat may be removed in a solid cake and any impurities clinging to it may be scraped off, as they will be found at the bottom of the layer. By repeating this process two or three times a cake of clean, white fat may be obtained. A slight burned taste or similar objectionable flavors often can be removed from fat by means of potatoes. After melting the fat, put into it thick slices of raw potato; heat gradually. When the fat ceases to bubble and the potatoes are brown, strain through a cloth placed in a wire strainer. When rendering the drippings of fat meat, add a small onion (do not cut it), a few leaves of summer savory and thyme, a teaspoonful of salt, and a little pepper. This is enough for a pint of fat. Keep the drippings covered and in a cool place.

By consulting Farmers' Bulletins 391 and 526, which she may obtain by writing to the United States department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., the housewife will learn many new methods of using "leftover" meats and smaller amounts of meat than are necessary when the meat alone is served. Dumplings and meat pies are useful in extending the flavor of meat, and borders of rice, hominy, or mashed potatoes are examples of the same principles. By serving some preparation of flour, rice, hominy, or other food rich in starch, a dish in which the meat flavor is extended through a large amount of material is secured. A good dish for eking out a small quantity of meat is a ragout of mutton made with farina balls, according to the following recipe: The measurements given in all the recipes call for a level spoonful or a level cupful, as the case may be.)

Ragout of Mutton.—One and a half pounds neck of mutton cut into small pieces, one tablespoonful butter, one tablespoonful flour, one onion, one carrot, one-half can peas, two cups hot water, one teaspoonful salt, one-quarter teaspoonful pepper, one bay leaf, sprig parsley, one clove.

Farina Balls.—One-quarter cup farina, one cup milk, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, one-eighth teaspoonful pepper, onion juice, yolk of one egg.

Put butter in frying pan. When melted add flour and brown. Add carrot and onion, cut in dice. Remove vegetables and add meat, searing well. To meat and vegetables add hot water and seasonings. Put in a suitable kettle, cover and simmer two hours. Add peas ten minutes before serving in a dish with farina balls made as follows:

Cook farina and milk in double boiler one hour. Add seasoning and well-beaten yolk. Stir well and cool. When cold roll into balls. Dip in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Rice may be used in a similar way.

PEONY IS POPULAR FAVORITE

It Is Hardy, Easy of Culture and Lends Itself Well to Beautifying of Home.

Among all our herbaceous plants there is perhaps not one that stands higher in popular favor than the peony. And it richly deserves its popularity because of its great hardiness, its ease of culture, its magnificent range of rich and delicate colors, its wonderful profusion of bloom and its tenacity of life.

The writer knows many specimens of the old variety cultivated extensively by our grandmothers, officinalis rubra plena, that have been growing in the same place in the old gardens for more than half a century and without exception those that have received good care are as vigorous and healthy today as any young plants, and year after year they give a crop of glorious fine flowers. Many of these old plants have grown to be clumps five and six feet across and one can often count hundreds of blossoms and buds in various stages of development on each plant.

Such plants as these are what are needed to make the attractions of a garden permanent. There is no other hardy herbaceous plant which can be used with such fine effect in the border.

Scattered here and there among shrubbery it produces a most satisfactory show of color at a time when most shrubs are not in bloom.

Probably, however, it is most strikingly effective when planted in large beds. If it can be given a background of evergreens, its rich colors show up to great advantage. Shrubbery of any kind as a background brings its colors into strong relief and one should always plant if possible with that aim in view. If partially shaded all the better. The culture of the peony is simple in the extreme. It does best in a rather stiff loam, preferring it to a lighter soil, because it likes to feel the earth firm about its roots.

While it prefers such a soil, it will do very well indeed in a sandy loam, or almost any soil, provided it is rich in the elements of plant development. To grow good peonies one must make good use of fertilizers, preferably old, well rotted cow manure. Unless this is done you cannot expect a vigorous growth of stalks and foliage and generous crops of large richly colored flowers.

It is hardly possible to use too much manure about it, if it is old enough to be black and crumbles easily under the application of the hoe. It should be dug into the soil about the roots of the plants, taking care, however, not to dig close or deep enough to disturb them.

There is no plant that resents a disturbance of its roots more. Dig into a clumb to secure a "toe" for a neighbor and very often the parent plant will refuse to bloom the following season. So hardy is the peony that it is not necessary to give it winter protection at the extreme north if its roots are put deep into the ground. If given shallow planting the frost will often leave them badly unless covered with coarse manure or mulch of some kind.

The roots ought to be at least six inches beneath the surface. While winter protection is not necessary, it is advisable because it prevents taxing the vitality of the plant excessively in its efforts to withstand a severe winter.

FAILS TO SECURE RECOGNITION

Lady's Own Friends Assert Could Not Recognize Her When Brought Face to Face.

Arritts, Va.—Mrs. D. J. Bowen, of this town, makes the following statement: "For 20 years I suffered with womanly troubles, and although I tried different treatments, I did not get any relief.

I was unable to look after any of my work, and my friends thought I could not get well.

Finally, I began to take Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I hadn't taken one-third of the first bottle, before I could notice its good effects.

Now I can do all my work, feel like I'm not more than 16 years old, but am really 49. My own friends say I look so well, they don't recognize me when we meet in the road.

My daughter is using Cardui, and she says it is a fine medicine. I also have a number of lady friends taking it, since they found out how it helped me.

Whenever I feel a little fatigued after a day's extra hard work, I just take a dose of Cardui and am all right.

I can't say too much for Cardui."

Thousands of women who now suffer from womanly troubles, could be relieved and benefited, by following Mrs. Bowen's example.

Are you of this number?

If so, try Cardui today. It cannot harm you, and is almost sure to do you good.

MIGHT BE THE DESIRED ONE

Masher Not Entirely Out of It, if He Would Accept the Situation as It Was.

He was one of those insufferable young pests who patronize restaurants trying to flirt with stenographers and telephone girls who drop in about noon for lunch. Approaching a young woman who was sitting alone, he lifted his hat and said suavely:

"I beg your pardon, miss."

"Well?" interrogated the girl calmly.

"Why, er—you see, it is this way. I made an engagement with a young lady whom I have never seen to meet me here. Now, are you waiting for me?"

The girl smiled queerly.

"I might be waiting for you," she said:

"Ah! Indeed," responded the masher, delightedly.

"Yes. You see, I ordered lobster and it hasn't come yet."

DISFIGURED WITH PIMPLES

R. F. D. No. 2, Box 46, Matthews, Ga.—"For three years or more I was troubled with pimples and blackheads. At first my face would itch and burn and then the pimples would break out. They looked almost as if I had measles, causing great disfigurement. They would make my face very red and sore. Then they festered and came to a head and large boils would come on my chin and nose.

"I also had dandruff which caused my scalp to itch and burn. It itched and burned so that I had to scratch it until it was irritated. The dandruff scaled off and showed plainly in my hair. It also caused my hair to break off and become very thin. I used several remedies which did not cure and gave but little relief. After I received a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I began using them according to directions. I secured two cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, which cured me perfectly." (Signed) Miss Willie M. Walker, July 31, 1912.

Novelist's Romance.

Mr. S. R. Crockett, the Scottish novelist, whose death is announced, was fond of relating among his intimates how he met his best of wives. It was his day of early struggle. He had written for a London daily review of one of George Milner's books. Pleased with the review, which was unsigned, Mr. Milner communicated with the writer of it and invited him eventually to visit his home in Manchester. In time the invitation was accepted. The future novelist of fame fell in love with Miss Milner, and a marriage of perfect happiness was the result.

GOOD FOR POLAR EXPLORERS

Frenchman's Invention of Much Benefit to Those Who Track Waste Places of the Earth.

Count Bertrand de Lessups, son of the famous Frenchman of Suez canal fame, has constructed an air-propelled machine which is capable of attaining a speed of from fifteen to sixty miles an hour over the snow, according to the condition of the frozen roads. The shoe-shaped chassis is attached to broad, flat metal runners, and vibration is reduced to a minimum by the addition of strong springs. The propeller behind the pilot if well guarded by a metal screen as a protection against any one approaching it closely. When snow falls wheels are placed on the propecting pins, which lift the ski from the ground, and the car will then attain a speed of nearly one hundred miles an hour. Some such machine as this is to be taken into the Antarctic regions by Shackleton with his forthcoming expedition. Abroad this form of amusement is called aeroskiing.

RESINOL WILL SURELY STOP THAT ITCHING

Limit of Courtesy.

Japan's new prime minister, Count Okuma, has a wooden leg. It replaces a limb which was blown off by the bomb of a political assassin. In connection with that outrage, a story is told which goes far to support the claim that is made for Okuma that he is the best-mannered man in Japan. After the explosion, which had killed his servants and horses, besides shattering his leg, he was lying in his office in an agony of pain, yet he was able to say smilingly to a foreign statesman who was taking leave of him, "Excuse me, sir, for my impoliteness in not seeing you to the door."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Sizing Up Louis.

There recently came to a fashionable shoe shop in Chicago a daughter of a man whose wealth has been acquired within very recent years. The young woman was disposed to patronize the clerk, and rejected a number of "classy" slippers he produced for her approval. Finally she said.

"I think, perhaps, I shall take these two pairs. But Louis XV heels are too high for me. Give me a size lower or, stay—perhaps Louis XIII will be high enough."—Harper's.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITORS CHAT.

The question "Is the world growing worse?," and a list of new evils with which we have to contend, brought to my mind an old evil, which to me seems as bad or worse than the new ones discussed. This evil is tattling and I am confident everyone who reads this can recall at least one friend lost by the aid of a tattler, and have seen the same repeated in other lives, or have been at some place when old Mrs. Tattler and her twin sister, old Mrs. Gossip were present. Just didn't they make things unpleasant? Mrs. Gossip told all the little unpleasant things she had heard about everybody in the community, except those present, and you felt that as soon as you were ont of hearing she would tell something on you, some little thing that you thought nothing of perhaps at the time you did it, that you are sure would sound very different when told by her. And just didn't old Mrs. Tattler keep up a clatter?, relating every little critical remark she could think of, of any poor thoughtless person, concerning something they had done in her presence? I'm sure you were afraid to go home before she did for fear she might know something you had said that you meant no harm by saying, which you feel, if told by her, with all the little extras that only a tattler can add, would hurt someone. And, Oh! how you wish you had not said it. Well just let me whisper something to you right here, my friend. Next time anyone comes to you telling something someone has said or done, you just keep quiet until they have finished, then say something good about them, and if possible tell something good they have said about the speaker and see how quick she "changes her tune". It is the good things in this world that need relating and passing on. If you know something bad about someone, suppose you just keep that to yourself, and hunt something good to say about them. There will be enough said about their wrong-doing. The condition of life would be surprisingly and agreeably changed, if everyone would give and tell and think of the good things of life. Now let us hear from you; we want all the letters our department will hold

---

Dear Editor: I intended taking a county paper but had not decided which one until I saw The Home Department, when I decided in favor of The Union-Banner, and am enclosing my subscription, I think every county paper should have a Home Department for no one needs help worse than the country women. We have so many things to do that we ought to pass on the goodways of doing things. How many have tried the gasoline iron I find it a great help for besides saving time of changing irons you can iron out in the porch or some other cool place ironing is not half the bug bear it used to be. By standing on an old quilt or anything soft your feet will not get so tired while ironing. Loose Caps worn while cooking and sweeping will help keep your hair soft and glossy. Dip your broom in water before sweeping and see if it doesnt keep the dust down better than sprinkling. If desired I will send my way of canning fruot without acids I hardly ever lose a jar.

Mrs. O. L. K.

[Thank you, please send directions for canning fruit and vegetables, am sure they will be appreeiated. Also if anyone can send receipts for pickles and perserves we will be glad to have them for canning time will soon be here Ed.]

Editor Home Department: — Please allow me space in your Home Department for another chat letter. I have been a constant reader of the Union ever since it was first published, and could not afford to be without it. And since the kind Ebitor has donated a page for the Home Department I appreciate The Union-Banner much more. I beg all the ladies who read The Union-Banner to take part in contributing to the Home Department; and send in their letters and let us fill our page to overflowing.

Never mind your penmanship, your orthography, your etymology, your syntax or your prosody just write your letters, send them in aud the publisher will put them in shape for the printing press lets get buisy and make our Home Department a grand success wishing The Union-Banner and its 1,500 subscribers much success I am yours respectfully.

Mrs. A. C. Kicker.

Thank you. I hope your advice will be taken by all.

Woman Finally Recovers From Nervous Breakdown

Impoverished nerves destroy many people before their time. Often before a sufferer realizes what the trouble is, he is on the verge of a complete nervous breakdown. It is of the utmost importance to keep your nervous system in good condition, as the nerves are the source of all bodily power. Mrs. Rosa Bonner, 825 N. 18th St., Birmingham, Ala., says:

"I have been suffering with nervous prostration for nine or ten years. Have tried many of the best doctors in Birmingham, but they all failed to reach my case. I would feel as if I was smothering; finally I went into convulsions. My little girl saw advertised in the papers and I at once began to take it. I continued to take it for some time and now I am well."

If you are troubled with loss of appetite, poor digestion, weakness, inability to sleep; if you are in a general run down condition and unable to bear your part of the daily grind of life, you need something to strengthen your nerves. You may not realize what is the matter with you, but that is no reason why you should delay treatment.

has proven its value in nervous disorders for thirty years, and merits a trial, no matter how many other remedies have failed to help you.

Sold by all druggists. If first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned.

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

Popped Corn a Good Food.

A government bulletin says that popped corn is superior to many breakfast foods now on the market. Sometimes it is eaten with milk and sugar. In many farm houses popcorn is considered a necessary adjunct to Christmas festivities, and the ears of the little Tom Thumb variety are particularly popular for Christmas tree decorations.

STOMACH SUFFERERS

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy Is Recommended and Praised by Thousands Who Have Been Restored

"I was a sick man for about three months caused from Gall Stones of the Liver and was told by three of our most prominent physicians that I would have to submit to an operation to get relief, but heard of your Wonderful Stomach Remedy and secured a full treatment and took it according to directions and passed hundreds of Gall Stones. Since taking your medicine I work regularly and don't feel any ill effects. I am praising your Remedy to all my friends. I think it's worthy of the highest praise. B. L. DOOLEY, Roanoke, Va."

Sufferers of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments are not asked to take Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy for weeks and months before they feel benefited. Just try one dose—which should make you feel better in health, convince you that you will soon be well and strong, free you from pain and suffering and give you a sound and healthy Stomach, as it has done in thousands of other cases. Wherever it is taken you will hear nothing but the highest praise. Go to your druggist—ask him about the great results it has been accomplishing in cases of people he knows or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for a free book on Stomach Ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored.

The Onward March

Progress is an irresistible force.

Men of imagination, of ambition, of aggressiveness have populated the world since the beginning of history.

Each succeeding generation was conspicuous for its accomplishments, and left inspiration for succeeding generations.

The present generation is living in the age of what would have been impossibilities, miracles, a century ago.

And yet much, very much more than has been accomplished, remains to be accomplished.

It will be accomplished, because progress is an irresistible force, ever on the onward march.

Material accomplishment is not the only accomplishment. Men's minds are undergoing development. Less prejudice, less superstition, less hatred exists than ever in the world's history.

The L. & N. speaks of these things because it is trying to accomplish things. It has met, and is constantly meeting with, opposition. Much of that opposition is honest opposition. Men desirous of accomplishing the same results oppose us because they differ with our methods.

To such men, honest men, we say that ours is a big system. Our standard of excellence in freight and passenger service must be maintained. That in itself is a big task.

But we are not content to stop there. We want low grades, shorter routes, even better facilities, a better development of our territory.

We want these things which will be of most benefit to the community at large because we have dreams of the future. We know the territory is wonderfully productive of everything desired by men, and we want it to produce.

These things, the carrying out of our plans, cost money. We must earn money.

The L. & N. solicits your good will, your freight and passenger patronage, your co-operation in its effort to keep abreast with the onward march of progress.

Deatsville Man Is Electrocuted

Jeff M. Ivey Meets with Death from Live Wire in Louisville, Ky.

Cincinnati, O., May 31.—According to private dispatches received here late today, Jeff M. Ivy of Deatsville, Ala., a lineman met a terrible death today by electrocution at Louisville, Ky., where he and five other linemen of the American Telegraph and Telephone Company were engaged in line repair, when Ivey came in contact with a heavily charged "feed wire" of the Louisville Gas and Electric Company and was immediately encircled and roasted to death by the death-dealing wire.

Ivey was working up on a telephone pole on Fulton St. west of Campbell, when the accident occurred, and his associates were unable to aid him, so dangerous was the nature of the accident. Ivey's relatives at Deatsville, Ala. near Montgomery, were notified and are expected to claim his body tonight.

Good Roads Days To be Observed

Several weeks ago Secretary Rountree sent a request to the probate judges and county commissioners in the sixty-seven counties in the state asking them in the name of the Alabama Good Roads Association to observe August 14-15, as Good roads days, and requested them to pass a resolution calling upon the people to observe these days and giving instructions to road officials to work the roads on those days. Already over thirty probate judges and county commissioners have written that Good Roads days will be observed in their respective counties, and that they had worked up considerable interest. It is to be hoped that every county in the state will observe these days and that at least 100,000 people will work the roads throughout the state. The newspapers, county city and road officials are being urged to take active steps to make Good Roads days a great success.

First Year of Baptist School

Closed Successfully last Week---One Graduate

The first year in the history of the Unity-Chilton Baptist High School located at Thorsby, was brought to a successful close last week with a series of interesting commencement exercises. Two nights of entertainment were given the friends of the institution. The first consisted of concerts and musical entertainment. The second night of the exercises was taken up by an address of Dr. W. B. Crumpton, and the awarding of diplomas to graduates of the school by the Principal. Dr. Crumpton's speech was of that kind which he only is able to deliver, being filled with masterful touches of experience in his own career, and sounding a call for greater and better education in the lines of Christian endeavor, and the perpetuation of the life and usefullness of Godly institutions.

This being the first year of the school, the graduating class was not very large, there being but one—H. Greeley Williams—to receive diploma at the hands of Prof. Henson, the Principal.

The good work of the institution is to be continued in future, and with the strong faculty that has been chosen to guide its destinies, and the support of the denomination to propell it, we bespeak for it a period of unparalleled success and usefulness in the near future.

Young Man Died Of Appendicitis

On Tuesday, May 29, Mr. James Price, age 21 years, the son of L. H. Price of Liberty Lill Community, died in Birmingham, where he had been carried for an operation for Appendicitis. After the operation he lived for two weeks. But the formation of an abscess on the lungs along with the weakness from the operation resulted in his death. The deceased young man leaves an invalid wife and one child to suffer his loss.

Jackson Chapel

Health of this community is good at the present. There will be preaching at this place next Sunday at 11:00 o'clock. There will be an old time singing in the afternoon. We hope to see a large crowd out.

Prof. Oden will sing here on the second Sunday afternoon in June. We expect to see a large crown then prepared for much good singing.

Mineral Springs

Health of this community is not good at present. There are several cases of measles on record.

Mr. Jeff Dupriest died and was buried at Collins Chapel Saturday.

People are well up with their work considering the weather. Several farmers are busy harvesting their oats and wheat.

Large numbers are enjoying fishing parties at the river. It seems to be a favorite pastime.

YOUNG COUPLE MARRIED MONDAY.

Boy and Girl of Eighteen Years United in Matrimony.

"And they were married, and lived happy together ever afterward." Yes, they were married all right, but as to their living happy together ever afterward, that is a part of this particular romance that remains to be seen. It is a part that lies beyond the mystic vale that is penetrated only by the rugged road of experience.

Such, however is the present state of a love affair that had its beginning somewhere, and Monday afternoon resulted in the marriage of Elijah Johnson and Miss Sadie Mae Adams at the court house by Judge Deason.

It was one of those "run-away" affairs that are always so interesting, and attract such widespread attention from disinterested spectators. Sometime during Sunday the young couple succeeded in eluding their parents, and at once began a search for someone who had authority and experience (but mainly authority) to tie that curious knot of matrimony. After making a brave effort in Clanton with no success, the chase of the old man became so close that the youth with his fair maiden concluded to hie to more distant regions and embark on the great sea of wedded life without that disturbance which was sure to come if they remained here. An auto was promptly secured, and a dash made for Pratttville; but the telephone intervened, and on Monday they were returned to Clanton still unmarried.

A hasty consultation was held between the parties most directly concerned in the matter, and after a firm declaration of the lad that he intended to marry the girl some day in spite of them all, and her prompt affirmation that she too was of the same mind as her hero, those who had been trying to prevent the match yielded to what seemed as inevitable as eternity, and the romance was transformed from its former feast of blissful anticipation to a visble reality, as they stood side by side and heard His Honor solemnly pronounce the words, "husband and wife."

PROGRESSIVES WILL FIGHT TO A FINISH

Party Leaders, It is Said, Decide Against Amalgamation With Old Republican Party

Oyster Bay, N. Y. May 28.—The program of the Progressive party in the campaign this fall, as outlined thus far, is understood to be as follows:

1. No amalgamation with the Republican party, as such.

2. Fusion tickets in cases in which candidates accept the policies of the Progressive party are nominated, where the naming of two candidates of this discription would split the liberal vote.

3. Insistence on policies rather than party names, and an endeavor to consolidate in every State the voters who approve of the principles of the Progressive party.

4. In New York State the probable endorsement of the Republican candidate for Governor, provided he is a man personally acceptable to the Progressives and is willing to approve their platform unequivocally.

While Colonel Roosevelt declined to commit himself publicly tonight to this program it was learned from an excellent source that Progressive leaders virtually had decided to adopt tentatively the foregoing plan of action.

Colonel Roosevelt tonight met a party of New York State Progressives and the New York situation was gone over at length. The efforts of the party are to be directed toward putting into power in as many States as possible men who favor the platform of the party, and whether they are Progressives or members of another party, will be a secondary consideration.

This it is learned, was in part the ground gone over at Washington Tuesday. Before Colonel Roosevelt's return from South America two plans were talked of-amalgamation with the Republican party or an uncompromising fight with a straight Progressive ticket in every State. Colonel Roosevelt, however, is believed to have opposed both suggestions, and to have carried his point.

I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the aches and pains are all gone and I feel like a new woman. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS LYON, Terre Hill, Pa.

It is true that nature and a woman's work nas produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known. From the roots and herbs of the field, Lydia E. Pinkham, forty years ago, gave to womankind a remedy for their peculiar ills which has proved more efficacious than any other combination of drugs ever compounded, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is recognized from coast to coast as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health—many of them openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and in some cases that it has saved them from surgical operations.

NEW COURSES OF STUDY COMPLETED

COMMISSION APPOINTED BY AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL BOARDS WORKS OUT NEW SYSTEM

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

Montgomery.

New courses of study for the nine agricultural schools of the State were worked out by a special commission appointed for this purpose at the recent meeting of the State Agricultural School Boards. The new courses were completed and have been forwarded to text book publishing companies in order that the book companies may submit lists of their books to the State Superintedent of Education before June 15.

On June 15 a commission will meet to select uniform text books for the nine agricultural schools. The courses of study at all the schools will be the same under the new ruling.

Members of the commission who met were were Prof. J. F. Duggar and J. B. Hobdy, Auburn; J. S. Thomas, University; J. T. McKee, Evergreen; H. O. Sargent, Hamilton, and W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education.

Chancellor Espey Resigns.

Chancellor Thomas M. Espy of the Southeastern Chancery Division, resigned. His resignation was sent to Governor O'Neal and was announced by the Governor. It is probable that W. R. Chapman of Dothan, Democratic nominee for Chancellor, will be appointed as Chancellor Espy's successor.

No reason for Mr. Espy's resignation was made public, but it is understood that he has been in bad health recently and desires to get a rest from his official labors. Mr. Espy is from Dothan and prior to his appointment as Chancellor practiced law in that city. He was named as successor to Chancellor Lucien D. Gardner, who was appointed as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court to succeed Justice Anderson, when the latter was elevated to the position of Chief Justice, when Justice Dowdell resigned.

Governor O'Neal declared that he has not yet selected a successor to Mr. Espy, but it is likely that he will announce the appointment of Mr. Chapman this week. In the recent Democratic primary, Mr. Chapman won out over J. A. Carnley of Elba, by the narrow margin of about 500 votes.

Whoever receives the appointment of Chancellor will serve until the next term begins some time next spring. This will be about eight months service. The Chancellor of the Southeastern Division receives a salary of $3,200 annually.

Allgood Demonstration Agent.

M. F. Allgood, recently nominated as Democratic candidate for State Auditor, was appointed farm demonstration agent for Limestone county. The appointment was made by Capt. R. F. Kolb, Commissioner of Agriculture. Mr. Allgood will serve as demonstration agent until his term as State Auditor begins next year.

In the recent primary Mr. Allgood defeated Judge W. F. Wilkinson, of Prattville. He is from Blount County but this makes no difference as far as the job of demonstration agent is concerned, as a man can be of one county and serve as the agent in any other county.

Illegal Collections Charged.

Charging John Lewis, Sheriff of Marshall County, with illegally collecting money on account of feed bills and fees from the State, Attorney General Brickell entered suit against the official and his bondsmen for $1,700 for breach of bond. T. L. Farrow, W. G. Henry, S. C. Copehart, M. M. Baker and H. D. Walls are named defendants with the sheriff.

Troy Seeks Rehearing of Case.

Daniel Troy, special counsel for the State, has filed an application for a rehearing in "the special counsel fee case," recently decided by the Supreme Court. In its decision the Supreme Court held that the law permitting the Governor to employ special counsel in certain litigation was unconstitutional.

About $40,000 in special counsel fees is involved in the case. Mr. Troy filed his application and expects a ruling on the case before the Summer adjournment of the court.

To Appeal Tax Cases.

The State Tax Commission will appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision rendered recently by the Bibb Circuit Court in the case wherein the Tax Commission sought to collect taxes on the leasehold interests of coal companies in Bibb County coal lands.

Records in the case have been examined during the week by the officials of the Tax Commission. Henry C. White has charge of the work of preparing the records for submission to the Supreme Court.

Many Seek Minor Legislative Jobs.

Active fights over minor legislative positions in the legislature of 1915 have already started, it is shown by letters and messages received by various members of the next legislature. One of the hardest fights will be that for clerk of the House which will be waged by W. F. Herbert, Demopolis, and John Adams, of Ozark. Mr. Herbert was clerk of the House in 1911 and assistant clerk in 1907. Mr. Adams was assistant clerk in 1911 and is now going after the clerkship.

For assistant clerk in 1915 there is only one outspoken candidate, this being Walter F. Miller, of Tuscumbia, editor of the Colbert County Reporter. Several others have declared their intention of offering for this position, but no one except Mr. Miller has made and active effort to obtain it.

J. A. Kyle, of Scottsboro, who has served as secretary of the Senate since the Legislature of 1903, is a candidate again for that position.

Other positions to be filled are those of Engrossing Clerk, Enrolling Clerk and Reading Clerk of each branch of the Legislature. Two doorkeepers and several assistant doorkeepers are to be named as well as a horde of committee clerks.

Practice Diversification.

Fifty farmers in sixteen automobiles made a tour of Sumter and Pickens counties for the purpose of inspecting agricultural conditions since the coming of the boll weevil to that territory and are optimistic over thees conditions, according to a report filed yesterday with Capt. R. F. Kolb, Commissioner of Agriculture, by W. H. Storey, farm demonstration agent of Pickens county.

Mr. Storey made the trip with the farmers and in his report he declares that there is much more attention being paid by farmers to stock raising than has been paid in the past.

Following is the report of Mr. Storey:

"In response to your request, I submit the following report relative to the boll weevil condition at this time. I heard no reports o fthe appearance of the weevils in the fields. It is very probable, however, that they are now living on the buds of the earliest cotton. In a trip of more than 50 miles in sections of Sumter and Pickens counties in Alabama and Noxubee and Lowndes County, Mississippi, it was very noticeable that the area planted to cotton had been prepared well and this will tend to hasten the maturity of the crop.

"A considerable acreage has been planted to oats and the crop promises to be good. The corn acreage is large and the condition of the crop is promising. The alfalfa is good and one cutting has been saved. The weather has been fine and the hay harvested is of good quality and will command a fair price. There is an increasing interest in live stock. This section is naturally a stock and hay section. Mr. N. A. Negley, Bureau of Animal Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, made the trip and recommended the introduction of more pure bred sires and the raising of more live stock. There is some interest int he building of silos.

"One car of hogs was shipped from Cochrane last year and a fair profit realized. About 300 hogs were inoculated at Cochrane by Mr. F. D. Stevens, Mr. E. W. Baldwin, Mr. H. Hanson and myself, April 21-24. The percentage of deaths was low and the results promise to be satisfactory. We hope to be able to control the cholera by serum treatment and expect several cars of hogs to be shipped this year.

"About fifty farmers in sixteen automobiles made the trip. These farmers were well pleased and others who were unable to make the trip at this time wish to make a similar trip. After a date has been selected I shall be glad to notify you and have you present to give instructions to the farmers and stock raisers."

Clanton and Jemison Want School.

The state high school commission made a visit to Clanton and Jemison for the purpose of inspecting sites offered by those places for the Chilton county high school. The new county high school will open next session, and the work of constructing the building will begin just as soon as the site has been selected.

Both Clanton and Jemison are making urgent application for the high school, and both places have sent delegations to Montgomery to represent their interests.

Business for Bar Association.

When the State Bar Association meets here in annual session July 10 and 11 there will come up for consideration a large number of important recommendations affecting the legal profession of the State. It is reported that Chief Justice John C. Anderson of the cupreme court will present to the association a number of important recommendations affecting judicial procedure in the State, though the subject matter of the recommendation has not yet been made public.

Regulars Ordered to Encampment.

Major General Scully has been advised by the Department of the East that a company of the Twenty-ninth Infantry of regulars, stationed at Governors Island, have been ordered to Montgomery for the maneuvers of the Alabama brigade of militia the latter part of July. General Scully expects more regulars to be ordered here. The Business Men's League is all exciting itself in an effort to have the war department comply with the erquest of General Scully.

934 BURIED BENEATH WAVES

Go Down With Steamship Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River.

Rimouski, Que., May 30.—Nine hundred and thirty-four persons lost their lives when the great Canadian Pacific twin screw liner Empress of Ireland was rammed amidships in a thick fog off Father Point in the St. Lawrence and sunk by the Norwegian collier Storstad.

Four hundred and three survivors were picked up from floating wreckage and two lifeboats.

And only 12 of the saved are women.

Gathered piecemeal from survivors the horror of this wreck grows with the telling.

The doomed ones had little time even to pray. They were engulfed by the onrushing waters that swallowed the big ship inside of 19 minutes from the time she was struck.

The wireless operators on the Empress, sticking to their posts to the last, had time only to send a few "S. O. S." calls for help when the rising waters silence their instruments. That silence told the rescuers miles away more potently than a bugle that doom had overtaken the ship.

Only six hours before this fateful collision the passengers sang as a good-night hymn "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," played by the Salvation army band on board.

The members of that band and most of the 165 Salvationists were among the lost.

Survivors Tell of Fog.

It was foggy, according to survivors, when the Empress of Ireland, a steel-hulled, steel-bulkheaded ship of more than 8,000 tons, left Montreal at 4:30 in the afternoon in command of H. G. Kendall of the Royal Naval reserve, one of the most skilled of transatlantic navigators.

Forest fires also obscured the atmosphere and the big ship in charge of a pilot, proceeded slowly on her way to sea. At midnight the pilot aid left near Father Point, shouting a merry "Bon Voyage" as he went down their ladder to his waiting boat.

The darkness at this time was intense and the ship under the slowest speed possible with steerageway held her course. Her decks were deserted. The passengers had all sought their berths with no thought of impending death.

Out of the darkness, on the port side, soon after 2:30 in the morning there loomed the little Norwegian collier, not half the size of the Empress, but fated to be her destroyer.

Not until the collier was almost abeam of the big liner was the danger known on either ship. The fog had blotted out the lights as well as the port and starboard lights of both ships.

Quick orders trumpeted on both vessels were heard. But they came all too late.

Strikes Ship Amidship.

The steel-pointed prow of the Storstad struck the liner amidships and then forged aft, ripping and tearing its way through the Empress of Ireland.

Clear to the stern of the Empress of Ireland was this great steel shaving cut from her side, from the top of the hull far below the water line. Into that rent the water poured with force of a Niagara.

The bow of the Storstad smashed its way through berths on that side of the ship, killing passengers sleeping in their berths and grinding bodies to pieces.

Reaching the stern of the big liner, the Storstad staggered off in the darkness, her bow crumpled by the impact. Her commander was ready a few minutes later, when he found his ship would float, to aid the crippled and sinking Empress, but he was too late to save the majority of those on board.

Carried to Bottom.

The Empress of Ireland recoiled almost on her starboard beam ends from the blow of the collier and passengers were flung from their berths against the walls of their staterooms.

Many were stunned and before they had time to recover were carried to the bottom with the ship.

The vast torrents pouring into the great gash on the port side, aft, filled the corridors and flooded every stateroom abaft the midship section inside of four minutes.

There was never a chance for the helpless ones in the after cabins and stateroom of the liner. With her port side laid open for half its length from the midship section to the stern, a seive had more chance to float than the Empress of Ireland, and the trapped passengers in that after section were doomed from the moment the Storstad struck.

Reeling from the blow the ship began to settle almost immediately as the water rushed into the big rent.

From the forward cabin, however, men and women in night attire stumbled along the corridors and up the companion way to the promenade deck—the deck below, the one on which the boats rested.

Swarm to Deck.

Up they swarmed on deck in their night clothing to find the ship heeling away to port and the deck slanting at a degree that made it almost impossible to stand even clinging to railings.

Men and women, shrieking, praying, crying for aid that was fated to arrive too late, fell over one another in that last struggle for life on board the doomed Empress of Ireland.

Frenzied mothers leaped overboard with their babies in their arms. Others knelt on deck and tried to pray in the few moments left to them. Some were flung overboard by the heeling of the sinking ship and some broke their legs or arms in trying to reach the lifeboats.

Above the din of the struggle on the great promenade deck could be heard Captain Kendall shouting commands for the launching of the lifeboats. Several were launched in the 19 minutes that the ship floated.

There was no time to observe the rule "Women first" in this disaster, for those nearest the boats scrambled to places in them.

But even as they were being launched, while the wireless still was calling "S. O. S." there came a terrific explosion that almost rent the ship in twain.

Ship's Boilers Explode.

It was the explosion of the boilers struck by the cold water. A geyser of water shot upward from the midship section, mingled with fragments of wreckage, that showered down upon the passengers still clinging to the rails forward and upon those struggling in the water.

The explosion destroyed the last hope of the ship's floating until succor could arrive, for the shock had smashed the forward steel bulkhead walls that had up to then shut out the torrents invading the after part. The water rushed forward and the Empress of Ireland went swiftly to her doom, carrying down with her hundreds of passengers who stood on her slanting deck, their arms stretched upward and their last cries choked in the engulfing waters.

Intense darkness covered the waters when the Empress of Ireland made that final plunge, but the fog lifted a few minutes later and then came the first faint streaks of dawn.

It lighted waters strewed with wreckage and struggling passengers, who strove to keep afloat.

The crippled Storstad, which had wrought this tragedy of the waters, had lifeboats out picking up as many survivors as possible.

The gray dawn revealed the government steamers Lady Evelyn and Eureka near the scene of the disaster and hastening to aid.

Some of those in the water tride to swim to the Eureka as she neared the point where the Empress had gone down. One woman, wearing only an undervest, swam to the Lady Evelyn, and was helped on board, but died of exhaustion soon afterwards.

The Work of Rescue.

The work of rescue still was going on when the sun arose in a cloudless sky.

Men and women were clinging to spars and bits of broken planks. Many of the survivors were injured. Some had broken legs, others fractured arms, and still others had been injured internally in that last mad rush to get away from the sinking liner.

Women clinging with one hand to little ones, while with the other they tried to keep clutch on pieces of wreckage, were picked up by the lifeboats and carried on board the rescuing vessels.

Captain Kendall, dazed and unable to give any coherent account of the loss of his ship, was found clinging to a broken spar.

The Empress of Ireland was a twin screw steamer of 8,208 tons burden. She was 458 feet long and equipped with modern apparatus not only for wireless work but for submarine signalling. The liner was built in 1906 and three years later set a record on a run from Quebec to Liverpool.

The steamer was one of the most popular vessels in the service of the Canadian Pacific railway and always carried a large number of passengers. She has plied for several years between St. John and Quebec and Liverpool.

CHILD SAVED BY SWIMMER; MOTHER AND SISTER LOST

Quebec, May 29.—One of the most pathetic sights was the entry into the Chateau Frontenac of eight-year-old Florence Barber of Cumberland, England, and formerly of London, Ont., who has lost her mother and sister. Less than a year ago her father was killed in London, Ont., and the family was on its way to England.

The little girl was picked up in the river by Robert Crellin of Toronto, who jumped overboard and was swimming when he saw the child floating. She was wrapped in a blanket and to that she owes her life, because the blanket floated with her until Crellin grabbed her. She flung her arms around his neck and, choking, he managed to get hold of a piece of wood, upon which he placed the girl.

He swam for some distance and when he saw a small boat some distance away he swam to it, pushing the girl ahead of him. The two were picked up and taken by boat to Rimouski.

Good Cause for Alarm

Deaths from kidney diseases have increased 72% in twenty years. People overdo nowadays in so many ways that the constant filtering of poisoned blood weakens the kidneys.

Beware of fatal Bright's disease. When backache or urinary ills suggest weak kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills, drink water freely and reduce the diet. Avoid coffee, tea and liquor.

Doan's Kidney Pills command confidence, for no other remedy is so widely used or so generally successful.

An Alabama Case

"Doan's Kidney Pills did more to relieve the pains in my back and strengthen my kidneys than any other medicine I ever tried," says J. C. Biles, retired farmer, Fayetteville Road, Athens, Ala. "I am never without a supply in the house and whenever I use them, I am benefited. I have advised many of my friends and acquaintances to give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial; I know they are all right."

CONFIDENCE GAINING STRENGTH

Continuous Warm Weather Has Beneficial Effect on Commercial Lines.

New York. — Dun's review of trade says:

A period of continuous warm weather has had a beneficial effect upon practically all commercial lines and is tending to offset the earlier handicap of a backward spring.

The movement of seasonable goods, both at wholesale and retail, shows encouraging increase and most reports indicate that confidence is gaining strength. Low merchandise stocks at distributing centers, cheap money and the favorable crop outlook are chief factors operating to create more cheerful sentiment regarding the future.

As yet the usual statistical comparisons do not deflect the current business improvement, gross earnings of railroads making returns for three weeks of May 7.4 per cent. less than last year, while bank clearings this week were 5.8 per cent. smaller.

Failures this week numbered 332 in the United States, against 223 last year and 32 in Canada, compared with 34.

INCREASE APPROPRIATION.

Senate Committee Completes Work on Rivers and Harbors Bill.

Washington. — Work on the rivers and harbors bill was completed by the Senate commerce committee and the measure will be reported this week, carrying appropriations aggregating $53,500,000. This is an increase of about $10,000,000 over the total of the House bill and of $1,094,000 over last year's total.

The Senate committee cut out several small amounts in the House bill and reduced others, but added many new ones. The new appropriations proposed include $50,000 for the intercoastal waterway between Pensacola and Mobile; $100,000 intercoastal waterway from Mississippi river to Bayou Teche; $125,000, Red River; $400,000 San Juan harbor, Porto Rico.

The committee increased the following House items: Black Warrior river (Alabama), to $750,000; Ouichita river, Arkansas, to $664,000; Chesapeake and Delaware canal, to $2,225,000; Tennessee river to $930,000; Mississippi river to $8,000,000; Delaware river to $2,000,000.

NEWS BREVITIES.

New Orleans. — The navy tug Patuxent arrived at quarantine from Vera Cruz with 31 American refugees from Mexico aboard.

Jackson, Miss. — Louella Stevens, arrested in connection with the sudden death here of Leslie Humphries, chief of police of Jackson, was released later in the day and her father, H. C. Stevens, placed in jail as a material witness. He was detained only a few hours.

WIRE SPARKS.

Washington. — The American Library Association concluded its annual meeting here by electing officers. H. C. Wellman, Springfield, Mass., was named as president.

Washington — Heated debate in the Senate over the construction of one of two new battleships at a government navy yard prevented the passage of the naval appropriation bill.

RINGWORM ITCHED TERRIBLY

1545 Aisquith St., Baltimore, Md.—"My children were afflicted with what they called ringworm of the scalp contracted from a house-cat they were playing with. The ringworm formed on their scalps about the size of a silver dollar and their hair fell out, leaving a round scale or crust on their scalps. Their hair fell out in round spots. There was terrible itching, and they scratched till the blood came. They were very fretful and could not sleep at night, and they were very cross.

"They were treated for several months with no improvement whatsoever. I was told they would never have any hair and would always be bald. Then I began using Cuticura Soap in connection with Cuticura Ointment and the first week I could see the wonderful remedies were doing all they were claimed to do and in six weeks' time they were entirely cured. They all have a beautiful growth of hair." (Signed) Mrs. Sadie Pollock, Jan. 1, 1913.

FORCED TO EAT CRUSHED ICE

And Was Not Even Allowed Privilege of Sitting Up, but Finally Wins Out.

Kaplan, La.—Mrs. Casamear Burkhart, of this town, gives out following for publication: "I feel that I owe my life to Cardui, the woman's tonic. I was married last April, and was in fairly good health. Shortly after marriage my health began to fail, and for three long months I was threatened with serious sickness.

I passed most of my time in bed, with a nurse at my bedside. At last, I was told an operation was necessary. I was so weak I could retain nothing on my stomach but crushed ice, and was not even allowed to sit up in bed.

A friend of mine advised me to use Cardui, the woman's tonic, and they got a bottle for me, as a last resort.

After taking Cardui for one week, I was able to be up in my room. After continual use for two months, I was in perfect health, and could do all of my work without tiring.

I take an occasional dose of Cardui and Black-Draught now, to keep my system in good condition.

Several of my friends are using Cardui with good results. I am never without it in the house."

There's a bottle of Cardui waiting for you at your nearest druggists'. Get it and begin taking today. You will never regret it.—Adv.

Dove on Gun of Death Ship.

While the Montana was steaming slowly northward through the fog a white dove, the omen of peace, blown apparently from the Virginia shore, alighted on a ten-inch gun on the deck of the cruiser. More than 100 bluejackets on the Montana, their terms having expired, are glad to be home. A little yellow swallow, blown to sea near Cuba, remained on one of the cruisers all the way to Vera Cruz and is still on the deck of the warship.—New York Correspondence Philadelphia Times.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

One correspondent writes that farmers in his neighborhood are busy harvesting their oats and wheat. That sounds good to us. Great statesmen and tariff experts may give weeks and months of time trying to figure out how to reduce the cost of living; but none of their exploitations will have the effectiveness that would be produced if all the farmers would raise their biscuit at home. It can be done right here in Alabama, and in Chilton county.

Miss Harlan, the county nurse, has submitted her report to the Chilton County Health Committee for the two months of April and May, whice is as foliows:

Number of schools visited, 13; number of pupils examined, 284; number of pupils instructed, 559; number of parents visited, 30; number of patients visited, 22; number of lectures to adults, 15.

Now that the work has been outlined thoroughly, a report will be published each month, showing the different school districts visited, and the work accomplished in all.

As announced last week, the State High School Commission came to Clanton last Friday to look into the claims that have been set before them for the location of the Chilton County High School here. They were shown the three sites that have been offerred for the location, and were ofterward greeted by a large crowd of enthusiastic citizens at the court honse. Shortly before noon they left Clanton for Jemison to give consideration to the claims of that town for the school. They were entertained hospitably by the citizens, and served to dinner. The decision as to the location of the school will be made the latter part of this week.

In these times when some are busy with their farms, and some have "struck off" and gone fishing to claim a few days of rest and idleness, and others are doing various things, we would like for them all to remember that November is coming, and we want each and every voter as he goes along from now till then to keep the fact in mind. At the same time we invite you who might not have voted on April 6th, to investigate the ticket which the Progressive party in Chilton county will have in that election to be voted on, and see for yourselves that it is composed of men who could not be excelled in any particular, for holding down the jobs for which they have asked.

Judge Reynolds attended the State Progressive Confence of the executive committee which was held in Birmingham on Monday, and hands us the following resolution which was adopted by the members present at that meeting:

Resolved that all qualified voters in Alabama, without regard to past party affiliations and who are opposed to corrupt methods either in primaries or general elections, and who believe in popular government, are invited and requested to meet in conference with the Progressive State Executive Committee when it is called to meet in the city of Birmingham, Alabama on the 23 day of June, 1914.

Resolved further, that the chairman of the Progressive Executive Committee be requested to embrace this invitation in his call for the meeting of the committee.

It is hoped that our county will send a good number of voters to this meeting, and show up the claims which we have for being one of the strongest Progressive counties in the state.

GENERAL DULNESS

As a matter of fact "general dulness" overshadows most of the textile mills of this country. The defenders of the new Tariff boldly take up the figures showing the increased deliveries from foreign products of almost every manufactured commodity and endeavor to minimize the industrial significance of the figures, bnt the meaning is plain. The aim of the Democratic Congress was to reduce the efficiency of the Protective principles of the Tariff. There is no doubt whatever that the new Tariff accomplishes this purpose. And there is no doubt either that it is operating in a way to draw American wage earners out of employment and to decrease the pay of those employed in mills that are struggling to stand up against foreign competition.—Baltimore American.

ROAD PROGRESS IN CHILTON.

To the man who has been constantly familiar with road conditions in Chilton county, the advancement that has been made in improving our highways in recent years is indeed very marked.

From a system, all parts of which were neglected and unknown to any kind of mechanical construction, more than a short handled spade and a scooter plow, we have come into possession of several main roads which are graded and shaped according to modern road building, by the use of competent maehinery for the purpose. From Clanton to Lock 12 there is a splendid road in every respect. It has been straightened and graded according to a civil engineer's survey. By the use of the large road machines recently purchased by the county, the roads from Clanton to Thorsby and Jemison and Maplesville and Billingsley, have been put into shape where traveling is no longer the dreaded thing it was a few years ago. Besides these main routes, the minor ones have been touched by the better enthusiasm, and in them may be seen improvements that have benefitted and increased their usefullness wonderfully.

The credit for these improved conditions is due to the enterprise and good spirit of our citizens and county officers. They were not brought about by outside agencies, at the expense of enormous sums of money, while our citizens sat idly by and looked on. The call was issued by local men who saw the need, and was taken up by the responsive citizens, and things were made to materialize short off.

But we should not sit down on the supposition that our work is finished, and we have but to enjoy the fruits of our past labors. Such an idea might apply to a man who has worked hard and long to lay np a large fortune, that in later days he may take life easy, but it will not apply to the building of good roads. The heavy rains of winter, and the excessive traffic over roads will soon make ugly, rough places at the weak points, and soon we have a miserable road again, if the bad places are not looked after and improved as they begin to form.

After seeing the advantages that our present improved conditions afford over the bad roads we once had, no citizen can fail to be eager and zealous for even more improvement and better roads. Let us be on the lookout for any movement that will help to make our highways better, and at the first chance fall in behind it with all the force that we are able to give.

WHAT FOOLS THOSE AMERICANS ARE!

When asked, "What has been the effect of recent Tariff legislation?" Mr. Henry B. Joy, president of the Packard Automobile Company, of Detroit, is quoted by the New York Evening Journal as saying:

"The bottom foundation of our present business depression is the Wilson Tariff legislation," was the reply, delivered in slow and measured tones.

"Why Wilson has given to European countries, without any reciprocal return, something they would have been willig to give their legs and arms in reciprocal conditions to secure."

There is no room for "reciprocity" in Free-Trade. When you give the foreigners all they want without asking for it, and without rendering any equivalent, they take it, laugh in their sleeves, and say, "What fools those Americans are!" All Europe is getting something for nothing. Canada, among others, is profiting immensley by Tariff reductions and freelistings which open new markets for her surplus products, and is not required to make a solitary Tariff concession in favor of American surplus products. So with Argentine corn and beef, Australian wool and mutton, and no end of other foreign competing products, no wonder American business is depressed.—American Economist.

Obituary

Died at her residence near Macedonia on May 27th, after a brief illness, Mrs. Mary J. Nix, widow of the late James Nix. Her early life was spent near Union Grove, her father, Mr. J. L. Waldrup was one of the pioneers of that section. She was a good woman, kind and neighborly. Her pastor, Mr. Honeycutt in conducting the funeral service paid a glowing tribute to her memory, saying that in her earlier life "She sought and found the Holy way, that He believed, not that He knew, she would be among the blessed and holy of the first resurrection, having escaped the second death." She raised a family of good children, what a monument to her memory. Only a few years ago the Union contained the death notice of her father, then her son, next her husband, now her own. Thus people pass away. "The dead know not anything;" so we regard Mrs. Nix as sleeping in death, resting, waiting for the resurrection. All classes die, but the wheels of nature are not disturbed, so we are drawing nearer to the time when there will be no more death.

"There is a time, we know not when,
A place we know not where,
That shapes the destinies of men,
For glory or despair."

Mrs. Nix's remains were laid away in Macedonia cemetery. The floral offerings were abundant.

HAPPY MOTHERHOOD

The happiness of motherhood is too often checked because the mother's strength is not equal to her cares, while her unselfish devotion neglects her own health.

It is a duty of husband or friend to see that she gets the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion, which is not a drug or stimulant but nature's concentrated oil-food tonic to enrich and enliven the blood, strengthen the nerves and aid the appetite. Physicians everywhere prescribe Scott's Emulsion for overworked, nervous, tired women; it builds up and holds up their strength.

Singing At Oak Grove

Last Sunday was a great day at Oak Grove. An all day singing. The people came in great numbers. Oak Grove is proverbial for large crowds. The singing was fine. The attention given was good. We noted particularly some of the young men from the western part of the county how attentive they were. Rev. Mr. Reynolds delivered a short talk on the power of music—one of the best we ever heard. The good people of Oak Grove sure did treat the visitors nicely. There were nine or more directors present. Mr. John Lowery was chairman. It was a day that will long be remembered with pleasure.

Love's Reward

Some years ago before I had the experience I now have, I thought it proper to oppose the things that did not suit me; and to reply to everything that was said about me, especially that which was not true. But one day as I was living at the home of an old lady, who was my best friend after my mother died, I was worrying about something a naughty boy had said about me; I was anxious to get to tell him what I thought of him, snd what he had said about me. While I was takling a great deal about the matter my cousin came near where I was and said, "My dear, you should not say so much about anyone as you are saying." In reply to her I said, "Yes, I know I am saying too much, but he hasn't treated me right, and I must have it out with him." "No," she said, "he hasn't treated you nice, but it was ignorance that caused him to mistreat you in that which he has said, and you must not reply to a fool, for people will think there are two fools instead of one. You must treat him nice and learn to love him." So I, as all other boys, did not want to be called a fool, and did not ever say anything to him at all.

I have found that lesson to be of great importance to my life; for I find that there are some foolish men as well as boys. Therefore I cannot yet afford to reply to everything that has been said against me. While it is certainly not pleasant to have to contend with such trifles, especially by those who ought to have a higher inspiration of life, and who ought to be in hearty co-operation with us for the common good man. Those of us who do think rightly have to regret that such things occur, but they do occur, and will continue to do so as long as we have ignorant men.

We have not time to take up trifling matters, and while away our lives with little and mean things. We are in this life as an insect of a few hours, and our days are soon ended. God has put us here to look up to higher things in life. With our short period of existence, snppose we start at a very early age, devote all our childhood days to playing marbles, toys, etc., and never give any time to books and industries which are essential to usefullness and worth in this world, where would we end? And let the men who are so much resposnible for the nobler things of this life—the moral welfare of our great country—devote their time to such little things as prejudice, fickleness, and foolish tatling, which so often exist in communities, to what do you suppose our churches, Sunday schools, and all other thigs of inspiration will come? We would drift back into the dark ages of civilization. This is the only reasonable thing we could do. Therefore, we cannot afford to trifle.

We should love everybody. God, who created us, loves us, and makes us new creatures; makes us love; and if we do not love, we have not the love of God in our hearts. Without this love we cannot win the friendship of men in this life, nor the souls of men for the life eternal. But to love is to win in this world, and to be rewarded in the world to come. May God help us to love and not hate; to speak well and not evil of one another.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Mrs. Sara Wrandall and Hetty attend the funeral of Challis Wrandall at the home of his parents. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, makes himself useful to Sara and becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much.

CHAPTER IX.—Continued.

Leslie was coming out on an evening train. Booth, in commenting on this, again remarked a sharp change in Hetty's manner. They had been conversing somewhat bouyantly up to the moment he mentioned Leslie's impending visit. In a flash her manner changed. A quick but unmistakable frown succeeded her smiles, and for some reason she suddenly relapsed into a state of reserve that was little short of sullen. He was puzzled, as he had been before.

The day was hot. Sara volunteered to take him home in the motor. An errand in the village was the excuse she gave for riding over with him. Heretofore she had sent him over alone with the chauffeur.

She looked very handsome, very tempting, as she came down to the car.

"By Jove," he said to himself, "she is wonderful!"

He handed her into the car with the grace of a courtier, and she smiled upon him serenely, as a princess might have smiled in the days when knighthood was in flower.

When she sat him down at his little garden gate, he put the question that had been seething in his mind all the way down the shady stretch they had traversed.

"Have you ever seen Hetty Glynn, the English actress?"

Sara was always prepared. She knew the question would come when least expected.

"Oh, yes," she replied, with interest. "Have you noticed the resemblance? They are as like as two peas in a pod. Isn't it extraordinary?"

He was a bit staggered. "I have never seen Hetty Glynn," he replied.

"Oh? You have seen photographs of her?" she inquired casually.

"What has become of her?" he asked, ignoring her question. "Is she still on the stage?"

"Heaven knows," she replied lightly. "Miss Castleton and I were speaking of her last night. We were together the last time I saw her. Who knows?

"It's All Tommy-Rot," He Growled.

She may have married into the nobility by this time. She was a very poor actress, but the loveliest thing in the world—excepting our Hetty, of course."

If he could have seen the troubled look in her eyes as she was whirled off to the village, he might not have gone about the cottage with such a blithesome air. He was happier than he had been in days, and all because of Hetty Glynn!

Leslie Wrandall did not arrive by the evening train. He telephoned late in the afternoon, not to Hetty but to Sara, to say that he was unavoidably detained and would not leave New York until the next morning. Something in his voice, in his manner of speaking, disturbed her. She went to bed that night with two sources of uneasiness threatening her peace of mind. She sensed peril.

The motor met him at the station and Sara was waiting for him in the cool, awning-covered verandah as he drove up. There was a sullen, dissatisfied look in his face. She was stretched out comfortably, lazily, in a great chaise-lounge, her black little slippers peeping out at him with perfect abandonment.

"Hello," he said shortly. She gave him her hand. "Sorry I couldn't get out last night." He shook her hand rather ungraciously.

"We missed you," she said. "Pull up a chair. I was never so lazy as now. Dear me, I am afraid I'll get stout and gross."

"Spring fever," he announced. He was plainly out of sorts. "I'll stand, if you don't mind. Beastly tiresome, sitting in a hot, stuffy train."

He took a couple of turns across the porch, his eyes shifting in the eager, annoyed manner of one who seeks for something that, in the correct order of things, ought to be plainly visible.

"Please sit down, Leslie. You make me nervous, tramping about like that. We can't go in for half an hour or more."

"Can't go in?" he demanded, stopping before her. He began to pull at his little moustache.

"No. Hetty's posing. They won't permit even me to disturb them."

He glared. With a final, almost dramatic twist he gave over jerking at his moustache, and grabbed up a chair, which he put down beside her with a vehemance that spoke plainer than words.

"I say," he began, scowling in the direction of the doorway, "how long is he going to be at this silly job?"

"Silly job? Why, it is to be a masterpiece," she cried.

"I asked you how long?"

"Oh, how can I tell? Weeks, perhaps. One can't prod a genius."

"It's all tommy-rot," he growled. "I suppose I'd better take the next train back to town."

"Don't you like talking with me?" she inquired, with a pout.

"Of course I do," he made haste to say. "But do you mean to say they won't let anybody in where— Oh, I say! This is rich!"

"Spectators upset the muse, or words to that effect."

He stared gloomily at his cigarette case for a moment. Then he carefully selected a cigarette and tapped it on the back of his hand.

"See here, Sara, I'm going to get this off my chest," he said bluntly. "I've been thinking it over all week. I don't like this portrait painting nonsense."

"Dear me! Didn't you suggest it?" she inquired innocently, but all the time her heart was beating violent time to the song of triumph.

He was jealous. It was what she wanted, what she had hoped for all along. Her purpose now was to encourage the ugly flame that tortured him, to fan it into fury, to make it unendurable. She knew him well; His supreme egoism could not withstand an attack upon its complacency. Like all the Wrandalls, he had the habit of thinking too well of himself. He possessed a clearly-defined sense of humor, but it did not begin to include self-sacrifice among its endowments. He had never been able to laugh at himself for the excellent reason that some things were truly sacred to him.

She realized this, and promptly laughed at him. He stiffened.

"Don't snicker, Sara," he growled. He took time to light his cigarette, and at the same time to consider his answer to her question. "In a way, yes. I suggested a tort of portrait, of course. A sketchy thing, something like that, you know. But not an all-summer operation."

"But she doesn't mind," explained Sara. "In fact, she is enjoying it. She and Mr. Booth get on famously together."

"She likes him, eh?"

"Certainly. Why shouldn't she like him? He is adorable."

He threw his cigarette over the railing. "Comes here every day, I suppose?"

"My dear Leslie, he is to do me as soon as he has finished with her. I don't like your manner."

"Oh," he said in a dull sort of wonder. No one had ever cut him short in just that way before. "What's up, Sara? Have I done anything out of the way?"

"You are very touchy, it seems to me."

"I'm sore about this confounded portrait monopoly."

"I'm sorry, Leslie. I suppose you will have to give in, however. We are three to one against you—Hetty, Mr. Booth and I."

"I see," he said, rather blankly. Then he drew his chair closer. "See here, Sara, you know I'm terribly keen about her. I think about her, I dream about her, I— oh, well, here it is in a nutshell: I'm in love with her. Now do you understand?"

"I don't see how you could help being in love with her," she said calmly. "I believe it is a habit men have where she is concerned."

"You're not surprised?" he cried, himself surprised.

"Not in the least."

"I mean to ask her to marry me," he announced with finality. This was intended to bowl her over completely.

She looked at him for an instant, and then shook her head. "I'd like to be able to wish you good luck."

He stared. "You don't mean to say she'd be fool enough—" he began incredulously, but caught himself up in time. "Of course, I'd have to take my chances," he concluded, with more humility than she had ever seen him display. "Do you know of any one else?"

"No," she said seriously. "She doesn't confide in me to that extent, I fear. I've never asked."

"Do you think there was any one back there in England?" He put it in the past tense, so to speak, as if there could be no question about the present.

"Oh, I dare say."

He was regaining his complacency. "That's neither here nor there," he declared. The thing I want you to do, Sara, is to rush this confounded portrait. I don't like the idea, not a little bit."

"I don't blame you for being afraid of the attractive Mr. Booth," she said, with a significant lifting of her eyebrows.

"I'm going to have it over with before I go up to town, my dear girl," he announced, in a matter-of-fact way. "I've given the whole situation a deuce of a lot of thought, and I've made up my mind to do it. I'm not the sort, you know, to delay matters once my mind's made up. By Jove, Sara, you ought to be pleased. I'm not such a rotten catch, if I do say it who shouldn't."

She was perfectly still for a long time, so still that she did not appear to be breathing. Her eyes grew darker, more mysterious. If he had taken the pains to notice, he would have seen that her fingers were rigid.

"I am pleased," she said, very gently.

She could have shrieked the words. How she hated all these smug Wrandalls!

"I came to the decision yesterday," he went on, tapping the arm of the chair with his finger tips, as if timing his words with care and precision. "Spoke to dad about it at lunch. I was coming out on the five o'clock, as I'd planned, but he seemed to think I'd better talk it over with the mater first. Not that she would be likely to kick up a row, you know, but—well, for policy's sake. See what I mean? Decent thing to do, you know. She never quite got over the way you and Chal stole a march on her. God knows I'm not like Chal."

Her eyes narrowed again. "No," she said, "you are not like your brother."

"Chal was all right, mind you, in what he did," he added hastily, noting the look. "I would do the same, 'pon my soul I would, if there were any senseless objections raised in my case. But, of couse, it was right for me to talk it over with her, just the same. So I stayed in and gave them all the chance to say what they thought of me—and, incidentally, of Hetty. Quite the decent thing, don't you think? A fellow's mother is his mother, after all. See what I mean?"

"She is quite satisfied, then, that you are not throwing yourself away on Miss Castleton," said Sara, with a deep breath, which he mistook for a sigh.

"Oh, trust mother to nose into things. She knows Miss Castleton's pedigree from the ground up. There's Debrett, you see. What's more, you can't fool her in a pinch. She knows blood when she sees it. Father hasn't the same sense of proportion, however. He says you never can tell."

Sara was startled. "What do you mean?"

"Oh, it's nothing to speak of; only a way he has of grinding mother once in a while. He uses you as an example to prove that you never can tell, and mother has to admit that he's right. You have upset every one of her pet theories. She sees it now, but —whew! She couldn't see it in the old days, could she?"

"I fear not," said she in a low voice. Her eyes smouldered. "It is quite natural that she should not want you to make the mistake your brother made."

"Oh, please don't put it that way, Sara. You make me feel like a confounded prig, because that's what it comes to, with them, don't you know. And yet my attitude has always been clear to them where you're concerned. I was strong for you from the beginning. All that silly rot about—"

"Please, please!" she burst out, quivering all over.

"I beg your pardon," he stammered. "You—you know how I mean it, dear girl."

"Please leave me out of it, Leslie," she said, collecting herself. After a moment she went on calmly: "And so you are going to marry my poor little Hetty, and they are all pleased with the arrangement."

"If she'll have me," he said with a wink, as if to say there wasn't any use doubting it. "They're tickled to death."

"Vivian?"

"Viv's a snob. She says Hetty's much too good for me, blood and bone. What business, says she, has a Wrandall aspiring to the descendant of Henry the Eighth!"

"What!"

"The Murgatroyds go back to old Henry, straight as a plummet. 'Gad, what Vivvy doesn't know about British aristocracy isn't worth knowing. She looked it up the time they tried to convince her she ought to marry the duke. But she's fond of Hetty. She says she's a darling. She's right: Hetty is too good for me."

Sara swished her gown about and rose gracefully from the chaise-longue. Extending her hand to him she said, and he was never to forget the deep thrill in her voice:

"Well, I wish you good luck, Leslie. Don't take no for an answer."

"Lord, if she should say no," he gasped, confronted by the possibility of such stupidity on Hetty's part. "You don't think she will?"

Her answer was a smile of doubt, the effect of which was to destroy his tranquility for hours.

"It is time for luncheon. I suppose

He Blinked in Astonishment.

we'll have to interrupt them. Perhaps it is just as well, for your sake," she said tauntingly.

He grinned, but it was a sickly effort.

"You're the one to spoil anything of that sort," he said, with some asperity.

"I?"

"Certainly," he said with so much meaning in the word that she flushed.

Hetty and Booth came into view at that instant. The painter was laying a soft, filmy scarf over the girl's bare shoulders as he followed close behind her.

"Hello!" he cried, catching sight of Wrandall. "Train late, old chap? We've been expecting you for the last hour. How are you?"

He came up with a frank, genuine smile of pleasure on his lips, his hand extended. Leslie rose to the occasion. His self-esteem was larger than his grievance. He shook Booth's hand heartily, almost exuberantly.

"Didn't want to disturb you, Brandy," he cried, cheerily. "Besides, Sara wouldn't let me." He then passed on to Hetty, who had lagged behind. Bending low over her hand, he said something commonplace in a very low tone, at the same time looking slyly out of the corner of his eye to see if Booth was taking it all in. Finding that his friend was regarding him rather fixedly, he obeyed a sudden impulse and raised the girl's slim hand to his lips. As suddenly he released her fingers and straightened up with a look of surprise in his eyes; he had distinctly heard the agitated catch in her throat. She was staring at her hand in a stupefied sort of way, holding it rigid before her eyes for a moment before thrusting it behind her back as if it were a thing to be shielded from all scrutiny save her own.

"You must not kiss it again, Mr. Wrandall," she said in a low, intense voice. Then she passed him by and hurried up the stairs, without so much as a glance over her shoulder.

He blinked in astonishment. All of a sudden there swept over him the unique sensation of shyness—most unique in him. He had never been ashamed before in all his life. Now he was curiously conscious of having overstepped the bounds, and for the first time to be shown his place by a girl. This to him, who had no scruples about boundary lines.

All through luncheon he was volatile and gay. There was a bright spot in his cheek, however, that betrayed him to Sara, who already suspected the temper of his thoughts. He talked aeroplaning without cessation, directing most of his conversation to Booth, yet thrilled with pleasure each time Hetty laughed at his sallies. He was beginning to feel like a half-baked schoolboy in her presence, a most deplorable state of affairs he had to admit.

"If you hate the trains so much, and your automobile is out of whack, why don't you try volplaning down from the Metropolitan tower?" demanded Booth in response to his lugubrious wail against the beastly luck of having to go about in railway coaches with a lot of red-eyed, nose-blowing people who hadn't got used to their spring underwear yet.

"Sinister suggestion, I must say," he exclaimed. "You must be eager to see my life blood scattered all over creation. But, speaking of volplaning, I've had three lessons this week. Next week Bronson says I'll be flying like a gull. 'Gad, it's wonderful. I've had two tumbles, that's all—little ones, of course—net result a barked knee and a peeled elbow."

"Watch out you're not flying like an angel before you get through with it, Les," cautioned the painter. "I see that a well-known society leader in Chicago was killed yesterday."

"Oh, I love the danger there is in it," said Wrandall carelessly. "That's what gives zest to the sport."

"I love it, too," said Hetty, her eyes agleam. "The glorious feel of the wind as you rush through it! And yet one seems to be standing perfectly still in the air when one is half a mile high and going fifty miles an hour. Oh, it is wonderful, Mr. Wrandall."

"I'll take you out in a week or two, Miss Castleton, if you'll trust yourself with me."

"I will go," she announced promptly.

Booth frowned. "Better wait a bit," he counseled. "Risky business, Miss Castleton, flying about with fledgelings."

"Oh, come now!" expostulated Wrandall with some heat. "Don't be a wet blanket, old man."

"I was merely suggesting she'd better wait till you've got used to your wings."

"Jimmy Van Wickle took his wife with him the third time up," said Leslie, as if that were the last word in aeroplaning.

"It's common report that she keeps Jimmy level, no matter where she's got him," retorted Booth.

"I dare say Miss Castleton can hold me level," said Leslie, with a profound bow to her. "Can't you, Miss Castleton?"

She smiled. "Oh, as for that, Mr. Wrandall, I think we can all trust you to cling pretty closely to your own level."

"Rather ambiguous, that," he remarked dubiously.

"She means you never get below it, Leslie," said Booth, enjoying himself.

"That's the one great principle in aeroplaning," said Wrandall, quick to recover. "Vivian says I'll break my neck some day, but admits it will be a heroic way of doing it. Much nobler than pitching out of an automobile or catapulting over a horse's head in Central park." He paused for effect before venturing his next conclusion. "It must be ineffably sublime, being squashed—or is it squshed?—after a drop of a mile or so, isn't it?"

He looked to see Miss Castleton wince, and was somewhat dashed to find that she was looking out of the window, quite oblivious to the peril he was in figuratively for her special consideration.

Booth was acutely reminded that the term "prig" as applied to Leslie was a misnomer; he hated the thought of the other word, which reflectively he rhymed with "pad."

It occurred to him early in the course of this one-sided discussion that the hostess was making no effort to take part in it, whether from lack of interest or because of its frivolous nature he was, of course unable to determine. Later, he was struck by the curious pallor of her face, and the lack-luster expression of her eyes. She seldom removed her gaze from Wrandall's face, and yet there persisted in the observer's mind the rather uncanny impression that she did not hear a word her brother-in-law was saying. He, in turn, took to watching her covertly. At no time did her expression change. For reasons of his own, he did not attempt to draw her into the conversation, fascinated as he was by the study of that beautiful, emotionless face. Once he had the queer sensation of feeling, rather than seeing, a haunted look in her eyes, but he put it down to fancy on his part.

And Leslie babbled on in blissful ignorance of, not to say disregard for, this strange ghost at the feast, for, to Booth's mind, the ghost of Challis Wrandall was there.

Turning to Miss Castleton with a significant look in his eyes, meant to to call her attention to Mrs. Wrandall, he was amazed to find that every vestige of color had gone from the girl's face. She was listening to Wrandall and replying in monosyllables, but that she was aware of the other woman's abstraction was not for an instant to be doubted. Suddenly, after a quick glance at Sara's face, she looked squarely into Booth's eyes, and he saw in hers an expression of actual concern, if not alarm.

Leslie was in the middle of a sentence when Sara laughed aloud, without excuse or reason. The next instant she was looking from one to the other in a dazed sort of way, as if coming out of a dream.

Wrandall turned scarlet. There had been nothing in his remarks to call for a laugh, he was quite sure of that. Flushing slightly, she murmured something about having thought of an amusing story, and begged him to go on, she wouldn't be rude again.

He had little zest for continuing the subject and sullenly disposed of it in a word or two.

"What the devil was there to laugh at, Brandy?" he demanded of his friend after the women had left them together on the porch a few minutes later. Hetty had gone upstairs with Mrs. Wrandall, her arm clasped tightly about the older woman's waist.

"I dare say she was thinking about you falling a mile or two," said Booth pleasantly.

But he was perplexed.

CHAPTER X.

Man Proposes.

The young men cooled their heels for an hour before word was brought down to them that Mrs. Wrandall begged to be excused for the afternoon on account of a severe headache. Miss Castleton was with her, but would be down later on. Meanwhile they were to make themselves at home, and so on and so forth.

Booth took his departure, leaving Leslie in sole possession of the porch. He was restless, nervous, excited; half-afraid to stay there and face Hetty with the proposal he was determined to make, and wholly afraid to forsake the porch and run the risk of missing her altogether if she came down as signified. Several things disturbed him. One was Hetty's deplorable failure to hang on his words as he had fondly expected her to do; and then there was that very disquieting laugh of Sara's. A hundred times over he repeated to himself that sickening question: "What the devil was there to laugh at?" and no answer suggested itself. He was decidedly cross about it.

Another hour passed. His heels were quite cool by this time, but his blood was boiling. This was a deuce of a way to treat a fellow who had gone to the trouble to come all the way out in a stuffy train, by Jove, it was! With considerable asperity he rang for a servant and commanded him to fetch a time table, and to be quick about it, as there might be a train leaving before he could get back if it took him as long to find it as it took other people to remember their obligations! His sarcasm failed to impress Murray, who said he thought there was a schedule in Mrs. Wrandall's room, and he'd get it as soon as the way was clear, if Mr. Wrandall didn't mind waiting.

"If I minded waiting," snapped Leslie, "I wouldn't be here now."

As the footman was leaving, Sara's automobile whirled up to the porte-cochere.

"Who is going out, Murray?" he called in surprise.

"Miss Castleton, sir. For the air, sir."

"The deuce you say!" gasped the harassed Mr. Wrandall. It was a pretty kettle of fish!

Hetty appeared a few minutes later, attired for motoring.

"Oh, there you are," she said, espying him. "I am going for a spin. Want to come along?"

He swallowed hard. The ends of his mustache described a pair of absolutely horizontal exclamation points. "If you don't mind being encumbered," he remarked sourly.

"I don't in the least mind," said she sweetly.

"Where are you going?" he asked without much enthusiasm. He wasn't to be caught appearing eager, not he. Besides, it wasn't anything to be flippant about.

"Yonder," she said, with a liberal sweep of her arm, taking in the whole

"What the Devil Was There to Laugh at, Brandy?"

landscape. "And be home in time to dress for dinner," she added, as if to relieve his mind.

"Good Lord!" he groaned, "do we have to eat again?"

"We have to dress for it, at least," she replied.

"I'll go," he exclaimed, and ambled off to secure a cap and coat.

"Sara has planned for a run to Lenox tomorrow if it doesn't rain," she informed him on his return.

"Oh," he said, staring. "Booth gets a day off on the portrait, then."

"Being Sunday," she smiled. "We knock off on Sundays and bank holidays. But, after all, he doesn't really get a holiday. He is to go with us, poor fellow."

ECONOMICAL MEAT DISHES.

Meat pies are ordinarily baked in a fairly deep dish, the sides of which may or may not be lined with dough. The cooked meat, cut into small pieces, is put into the dish, sometimes with small pieces of vegetables, a gravy is poured over the meat, the dish is covered with a layer of dough, and then baked. Most commonly the dough is like that used for soda or cream of tartar biscuit, but sometimes shortened pastry dough, such as is made for pies, is used. This is especially the case in the fancy individual dishes usually called patties. Occasionally the pie is covered with a potato crust, in which case the meat is put directly into the dish without lining the latter. Any kind of meat, or several kinds in combination, may be used for pies.

If pies are made from raw meat and vegetables longer cooking is needed than otherwise, and in such cases it is well to cover the dish with a plate, cook until the pie is nearly done, then remove the plate, add the crust, and return to the oven until the crust is lightly brown. Many cooks insist on piercing holes in the top crust of a meat pie directly it is taken from the oven.

Twelve o'clock pie is made with shoulder of mutton, boiled with carrot and onion, then cut up, mixed with potatoes separately boiled and cut up, and put into a baking dish. The crust is made by mixing smoothly mashed potatoes to which a tablespoonful of shortening has been added, with enough flour and water to make them roll out easily. A pie made of a pound of meat will require five or six small boiled potatoes, a cupful of mashed potatoes, and eight or ten tablespoonfuls of flour, and should be baked about 20 minutes in a hot oven. Salt, pepper, and other seasoning, as onion and carrot, may be added to taste. A teaspoonful of baking powder makes the crust lighter.

Almost any kind of chopped meat may be used in meat turnovers, and if the quantity on hand is small it may be mixed with potato or cooked rice. This filling should be seasoned to taste with salt and pepper, onion, or whatever is relished, and laid on pieces of short biscuit dough rolled thin and cut into circles about the size of an ordinary saucer. The edges of the dough should be moistened with white of egg, the dough then folded over the meat, and its edges pinched closely together. If desired, the tops of the turnovers may be brushed over with yolk of egg before they are placed in the oven. About half an hour's baking in a hot oven is required. Serving with a brown sauce increases the flavor and moistens the crust.

Turkish pilaf, a dish very common in the Orient and well-known in the United States, is made as follows:

One-half cup of rice, three-fourths of a cup of tomatoes stewed and strained, one cup stock or broth, three tablespoonfuls of butter.

Cook the rice and tomatoes with the stock in a double boiler until the rice is tender, removing the cover after the rice is cooked if there is too much liquid. Add the butter and stir it in with a fork to prevent the rice from being broken. A little catsup or chili sauce with water enough to make three-quarters of a cup may be substituted for the tomatoes. This may be served as a border with meat, or served separately in the place of a vegetable, or may make the main dish at a meal, as it is savory and reasonably nutritious.

Dry beans are very rich in protein, and when beans are served with meat the dish is almost as rich in protein as if it consisted entirely of meat.

Haricot of mutton is made with two tablespoonfuls of chopped onions, two tablespoonfuls of butter or drippings, two cups of water, and salt and pepper, and one and a half pounds of lean mutton or lamb cut into two-inch pieces, as follows:

Fry the onions in the butter, add the meat, and brown; cover with water and cook until the meat is tender. Serve with a border of lima beans, seasoned with salt, pepper, butter, and a little chopped parsley. Fresh, canned, dried, or evaporated lima beans may be used in making this dish.

For roast pork with cowpeas, a leg of young pork should be selected. With a sharp knife make a deep cut in the knuckle and fill the opening with sage, pepper, salt, and chopped onion. When the roast is half done scar the skin but do not cut deeper than the outer rind. When the meat is nearly cooked pour off the excess of fat and add a quart of white cowpeas which have been previously parboiled or "hulled" and cook slowly until quite done and the meat is brown. Apple sauce may be served with this dish.

Inexpensive meat salads may be concocted by the accomplished cook, although in such cases as chicken salad made from white meat alone, these salads are not economical. Occasionally eggs are combined with meat, making very nutritious dishes. Whether this is an economy or not, of course, depends on the comparative cost of eggs and meat.

To make ham and poached eggs with cream sauce, place a piece of thinly sliced boiled ham on a round of buttered toast, a poached egg on the ham, and cover with a highly seasoned cream or Hollandaise sauce. A slice of tongue may be used instead of the ham. If preferred, a well-seasoned and rather thick tomato sauce or curry sauce may be used.

Another popular way to extend the flavor of meat over a large amount of food is by the use of stuffing or forcemeat. As it is impossible to introduce much stuffing into some pieces of meat, even if the meat is cut to make a pocket for it, it is often well to prepare more than can be put into the meat, and to cook the remainder in the pan beside the meat. Some cooks cover the extra stuffing with buttered paper while it is cooking and baste it at intervals.

Mock duck is made by placing on a round steak a stuffing of bread crumb well seasoned with chopped onions, butter, chopped suet or dripping, salt, pepper, and a little sage, if the flavor is relished. The steak is then rolled around the stuffing and tied with a string in several places. If the steak seems tough, the roll is steamed or stewed until tender before roasting in the oven until brown. Or it may be cooked in a casserole or other covered dish, in which case a cupful or more of water or soup-stock should be poured around the meat. Mock duck is excellent served with currant or other acid jelly.

A popular dish known as veal or beef birds or by a variety of special names is made by taking small pieces of meat, each just large enough for an individual serving, and preparing them in the same way as the mock duck is prepared.

Sometimes variety is introduced by seasoning the stuffing with chopped olives or tomato. Many cooks prepare their "birds" by browning in a little fat, then adding a little water, covering closely and simmering until tender.

LEARN THE ART OF RESTING

Household Cares Made Easier by Proper Relaxation of Muscle and Mind.

Every woman ought to know how to rest, yet many do not. Some of us think we never have time to rest. From the time our early morning duties call us from our beds until sheer exhaustion drives us back again at a late hour, the day has been spent in labor, without a minute's rest.

Our labor, too, is a continual round of the same duties, day after day, but if a little pleasure trip, or a neighborly visit is indulged in occasionally, the work will seem lighter, and we can return to it with renewed energy.

Then we should learn to rest a little in the midst of our busy times. Nothing is lost and much gained by the tired, nervous mother who will go into a cool, darkened room, lie down, close her eyes and sleep, if possible—although if not, the few moments of relaxation will do great good.

And when I say relaxation, I mean exactly that; she must learn to let go the tension, relaxing every muscle.

Don't let the mind dwell on the work that may be waiting; instead, think of the pleasantest things you can imagine. Build air castles.

Such imagining will surely set you on the way to its attainment, and be helpful in more than one way.

It is of no use to tell you to "think of nothing," as so many advise; it is impossible to create a mental vacuum.

But you can fill your mind with cheery, happy thoughts, and ten minutes of rest in this way is worth more than ten times ten minutes spent worrying over the work that is awaiting you.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Sweet milk will remove ink stains.

A handful of salt in a pan of starch will prevent the latter sticking to the irons; salt also keeps cotton garments from catching fire readily.

When boiling a piece of tough meat or an old fowl, add a little vinegar, a tablespoonful, to the water. It will help make the meat tender and the taste cannot be detected.

To make a cake turn out easily from the pan, place it on a towel wrung from cold water, bringing the cloth up around the sides of the pan, and allow to remain a few minutes.

How many have tried sand paper for cleaning cooking utensils or granite ware? Just cut the sandpaper into small squares and keep them in a convenient place. You'll find it a good friend.

If you have matting that is soiled and worn, instead of ripping it up and throwing it away, just give it a good coat of paint. It will last as long as new matting, and can be washed as easily as a floor of hard wood.

Put sheets through the wringer crosswise; that is, by the selvage, instead of the hem. They will iron more easily, and are less likely to break. Hang them on the line by the hems instead of having the middle come along the line.

To Clean Linoleum.

To make linoleum look like new, just try mopping it with skimmed milk instead of water; separator milk is fine for the purpose.

GOVERNMENT PROBE OF SHIP DISASTER

ROYAL COMMISSION APPOINTED TO FIX RESPONSIBILITY OF CATASTROPHE.

HEARINGS WILL BEGIN JUNE 9

Preliminary Investigation Already Begun—Evidence Being Assembled for Commissioners.

Montreal.—Now that the first burst of excitement an grief over the sinking of the Canadian Pacific liner, Empress of Ireland, has partially spent itself, the public generally is settling down to await the result of the government inquiry to fix the responsibility for the disaster that resulted in the loss of nearly 1000 lives. A royal commission of three was appointed to investigate the ramming and sending to the bottom of the St. Lawrence river of the Empress of Ireland by the collier Storstad.

The members of the tribunal are Sir Adolph Routhier, judge of the court of admiralty of Quebec, and the Hon. Ezekiel McLeod, chief justice and judge of the admiralty court of New Brunswick, appointed by the Canadian government, and George L. Vaux, of the legal staff of the British board of trade. Mr. Vaux sailed from England to be present at the hearings, which will begin June 9. Pending the convening of the commission of the inquiry, Captain Lindsay, dominion wreck commissioner, will continue the preliminary investigation begun by taking testimony and assembling evidence for the commissioners.

The second step in the legal battle arising out of the sinking of the Empress of Ireland will be taken when attorneys for the owners of the Storstad will offer a bond of $240,000 and ask that the collier be released from arrest. The $240,000, which is based on the tonnage of the collier, represents, according to the contention of counsel, the maximum liability of the Storstad for the damage accruing to the Canadian Pacific railway. The depositing of the bond will be in no wise an acknowledgement of responsibility by the owners of the Storstad for the disaster. It will simply be a formality usually followed in such cases. The bond will remain in the possession of the court until the merits of the controversy between the two steamship companies are legally settled.

Until the arrival of Mr. Vaux a decision as to whether the inquiry is to be held in Quebec or Montreal will not be made. It is probable that a representative of the British admiralty will make the fourth member of the commission.

Quebec.—Identification of the dead recovered from the scene of the wreck of the Canadian Pacific steamer, Empress of Ireland, is proceeding more orderly than was expected.

Nearly 100 of the 188 bodies brought here by the tender Lady Gray have been identified. This is in addition to the 18 bodies identified and claimed at Rimouski.

Some of the identifications include persons of prominence whose lives were lost in the collision between the Empress of Ireland and the collier Storstad. They are Sir Henry Seton-Karr, the big game hunter; Dr. E. A. Barlow, a leading geologist of Canada, and Mrs. W. Leonard Palmer, wife of a London newspaper man. Nearly a score of Salvation Army members have also been identified.

The funeral ship, Lady Grey, escorted by the British warship, Essex, arrived in Quebec Sunday early, and soon thereafter blankets from the Essex were used as stretchers in carrying the bodies ashore. The bodies were placed on long tables draped in black and white in the funeral shed which had been prepared for their reception.

CALIFORNIA VOLCANO IN ACTION.

Outbreak is First Recorded in State in Seventy Years.

Redding, Cal.—Mount Lassen, a latent volcano of the Cascade range, erupted for 18 hours, throwing out smoke, steam, rocks and volcanic ash. The mountain is now again quiet. A nexpedition will go to the peake to see if a new crater has been found.

The outbreak is the first recorded in California in seventy years, and the first of any importance in 200 years, although the Lassen volcanic region is at the western edge of a lava field reaching as far east as Montana and containing many craters.

VERDICT OF ACQUITTAL.

Four Officers of the Naval Stores Company Found Not Guilty.

Savannah, Ga.—The four officers of the suspended American Naval Stores company, charged with violation of the federal anti-trust laws, were found not guilty in the United States district court here. The defendants, E. S. Nash, S. P. Shotter and J. F. C. Meyers o fthis city, and Carl Moeller of Jacksonville, Fla., were accused of a conspiracy to monopolize the naval stores trade.

UNION NOT POSSIBLE

Progressives and Republicans Too Far Apart.

Have Many Beliefs In Common, But Differences Are Too Sharp to Make Serious a Thought of Uniting Just Now.

Republicans and Progressives alike are opposed to the actual Democratic tariff, and although they differ as between the two parties and as between the localities which they represent regarding the degree of protection desired, yet it is conceivable that Republicans and Progressives could unite in a demand for more protection than is afforded by the Underwood law, to be secured only after investigation and report by a competent and non-partisan tariff commission. Doubtless the two parties could unite in a hearty condemnation of the Democratic civil service record, alike in its diplomatic and domestic appointments. Doubtless they could unite in reprobation of its Mexican and Philippine policies. But could they unite on the economic and political reforms which were widely agitated in the last campaign? Could Mr. Taft's followers, horrified at the suggested recall of judges and of judicial decisions, find common ground with the advocates of these profanations of the judiciary. To be sure the recall of decisions has been approved by a Republican convention in Oklahoma, and has been incorporated in the new constitution of Colorado. The recall now is applicable to the judiciary in Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington. But is it conceivable that Mr. Taft and his horrified following would ever consent to an approval either of the recall of judges or of decisions? There would be a difference of opinion over the Progressives' purpose to make easier the amendment of the national Constitution, almost as sharp as that over the principle of the recall, and this would be true of the whole Progressive program for democratizing governments, state as well as national, whether through the extension of primaries or through the adoption of the initiative and referendum, although Progressives, generally, are prepared to adopt measures to protect the use of the initiative as suggested by the experience of some states in which the initiative has been abused.—Medill McCormick, in the North American Review.

Standstill Not Enough.

Now and then some apologist for the present administration directs attention to the fact that in several lines of business there is no falling off from the very satisfactory record of last year. It is shown that 1914 is keeping up with 1913 and from that the conclusion is deduced that things are going well enough and there is no reason to find fault.

The trouble with such arguments is that they ignore the natural growth of the country. They assume that the increase in population does not call for expansion in trade and industry, and not at the same rate per cent but one as much higher as is indicated by the usual difference between the development of manufactures and commerce and the gain in the number of inhabitants. If the normal rate of increase in a great industry is ten per cent annually it is foolish to tell the men who live by that business to rest content because it is only standing still.

A stationary position is never enough to satisfy this country. It is not what America demands. It is out of harmony with the history of the nation and its present needs. No administration can retain its power if it is unable to point to anything better than a standstill in the basic industries of the American people.

Lack Requisite Assurances.

"We hope we shall see at an early day what we know is closest to his heart—a reunited Republican party again in charge of the government, both national and state, and again restoring the competent and honest administration, the public confidence and the general prosperity which have heretofore attended and blessed its rule."—W. D. Guthrie at the dinner of the Union League club in honor of ex-Senator Depew.

But could the Republican party be reunited on the assurance that, if in control of the government, it would give the kind of administration that caused its downfall?

When Politics Calls.

Colonel Roosevelt told the newspaper men at Para, Brazil, that he intended to take an active part in the coming fall campaign. It is only when the colonel is hunting lions in Africa or exploring unknown rivers in Brazil that he fails to take an active part in the great political issues that are before the country.

Democrats Only Hoping.

The fact that the president and his party are now on the defensive is fully appreciated by the Democratic leaders in the capital. Some months must elapse before November comes, and, in the meantime, the new tariff law may prove a blessing to the country. The Democratic leaders, therefore, are in an attitude of watchful waiting. They know that conditions just now are not encouraging, but they hope and believe that something will happen to restore them and their party to popular favor.

A Century Ago.

One hundred years ago Dr. Thomas Fanshawe Middleton was consecrated first bishop of Calcutta. The consecration took place in London, and soon afterward the new bishop sailed for India. In Calcutta, he laid the foundation for the Bishops' college in 1820, and established a consistory court in that city. While zealously engaged in his duties he was attacked with a fever, of which he died in 1822. For more than a century the efforts to spread the Christian faith in India have continued. Numerically the Christian population in the great eastern empire is still insignificant, amounting to only about one per cent of the population, but it is generally admitted to have an influence out of all proportion to its numbers.

Dr. Eliot on Education.

Dr. Eliot says: "The practise of England and America is literally centuries behind the precept of the best thinkers upon education." Is it not humiliating that an American is forced to make such an admission concerning our most vital American institution?

What can be done? How can this wasteful school system be speedily remedied so that it fills its real function and sends out into the world boys and girls developed according to their individual talents as far as those talents permit? It is a big question, but in my next article, I propose to outline a rational, practical system of public education which will serve those ends.—Pictorial Review.

HER MOTHER-IN-LAW
Proved a Wise, Good Friend.

A young woman out in Ia. found a wise, good friend in her mother-in-law, jokes notwithstanding. She writes:

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach, complexion was blotchy and yellow. After meals I often suffered sharp pains and would have to lie down. My mother often told me it was the coffee I drank at meals. But when I'd quit coffee I'd have a severe headache.

"While visiting my mother-in-law I remarked that she always made such good coffee, and asked her to tell me how. She laughed and told me it was easy to make good 'coffee' when you use Postum.

"I began to use Postum as soon as I got home, and now we have the same good 'coffee' (Postum) every day, and I have no more trouble. Indigestion is a thing of the past, and my complexion has cleared up beautifully.

"My grandmother suffered a great deal with her stomach. Her doctor told her to leave off coffee. She then took tea but that was just as bad.

"She finally was induced to try Postum which she has used for over a year. She traveled during the winter over the greater part of Iowa, visiting, something she had not been able to do for years. She says she owes her present good health to Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

Are you doing all you can to improve the community in which you live? If not will you allow me to suggest a few ways of improving not only your community but yourself. Improving yourself is really the first step any way; and the quickest way I knew to do this is to read. Read the news papers and magazines that you may be able to enter any discussion that may arise about current events, and read women's magazines to learn what women are doing all over the world. I would advise you to take all the good women's magazines you can afford; any way, selecting those which are suited to you both in price and contents. They should contain departments that will help you in your housekeeping, homebuilding and in rearing your children; and good stories and the prevailing fashions. These when read should be put where you can get them quickly if you wish to refer to them; don't give them to the children to cut or tear up. But do not spend all your spare time reading if you would be helpful, but arrange your work so you can have an afternoon in which to visit or attend your mothers club, if you have one, and if you have not one, you have the opportunity to do your community a great deal of good by organizing one. You won't need any rules or directions for this; just get all the mothers to meet at the school house or at your's and agree to meet each week. Carry your work along and discuss anything you please, except the faults or mistakes of your neighbors, or anyone else. And if any of the members cannot read well, take along your magazines and get some one who is a good reader to read the stories and interesting articles aloud and I am sure you will spend a profitable as well as enjoyable afternoon. If you have a Sunday chool in your community, go every time you can; if possible have it in the afternoon for the mothers can go oftener then, but if you can not have it in the afternoon put your dinner on while cooking breakfast and you can finish it and be ready to go by the time the rest of the family is; and you will not have the dread of cooking after you get home to keep you from enjoying yourself; and your presence will encourage the young folks. The greatest help you can give your community is to help it rear its future men and women right and keep them where they are.

Editor Home Department: I certainly am glad there is to be a Home Department in our paper and hope it will be a great success, for I know it will be a great help to the women of Chilton county. Mrs. J. S.' letter was fine; we agree with her. Come again.

I am going to give some good recipes for cake: Delicate cake—Two cups of white sugar, one cup of butter, two cups of flour, one cup of corn starch, one-half cup of sweet milk, white of six eggs, one tablespoonful of baking powder, flavor to taste. I find this to be a fine cake.

Can anyone give me a recipe for sponge cake as I lost my recipe. I would be glad to get it. Wishing the department a great success, I am,

Mrs. H. V. G.

Dear Editor: Will you admit a girl into your department? That letter by Mrs J. S. just expressed my views on how to keep boys and girls on the farm so well, that I want to thank her; and add that I believe that when farmers realize that boys and girls are "thoroughbred" gentlemen and gentlewomen, must have the same care they give a thoroughbred animal, they will not have much trouble keeping them at home; and our schools need so much improvement that we need a class in domestic science as bad as the city girls do, for although we live on a farm now and grow almost everything the family consumes, we might move to town some day and need to know how to buy food and how to plan meals when money is scarce and food high; even if we never do, there is no need of our not knowing how to live economically just because "mother does not". Now I do not mean to say anything to hurt mothers' and fathers' feeling for we all know they are the best people living, but I do wish they could see that times are changing and that things are needed now that were not needed twenty or thirty years ago when they were boys and girls.

Wishing the home department success, I remain, "Just a Girl."

[We want to ask the correspondents of the home department to sign their names and give the name they want signed also to their letters, so that we may know to whom we are indebted for the letters. Also remember your letter must reach us by Monday to be printed in the following issue.

Address all your letters to Home Department, Union-Banner, Clanton, Ala.]

THE UNION-BANNER

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JUNE 11, 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 9

"A VOTER" WRITES ANOTHER LETTER.

Editor Union-Banner:—I noticed in last weeks Press that "Same Old Moses" says he is done; that he will not reply to any more of my letters. He said that he felt like the fellow whom the mule kicked, but I suspect that he feels more like the fellow who got the buggy whip used on him. He would give me h—l, bnt considered the source it came from. Oh yes, Mose, I guess you did consider, and then decided it would not be best for you to answer those questions which I asked you in my last letter. Why didn't you? I suspect if you had answered them, it would have been interesting reading.

Mose, you remind me of the lawyer to whom one younger in the profession came for advice. The young follow in relating his story to the old experienced lawyer told him that his opposition had all the evidence which was strongly against his client, and that he himself believed his client was guilty; and with such a condition of affairs the young man did not know how to argue the case to the jury. So the old man told the young fellow to just jump on the other lawyers and give them hell. Moses knew that the evidence was against him, and he proceeded to try to give me h—l, as the guilty will always try to do, by calling me a coward and and a dirty politician.

Moses, you harp on the ignorance and prejudice of the uneducated people of this county. Now who is responsible for so much illiteracy among the people of the south? You know it is your Democratic party. They have caused it by not giving us better school laws. But I want to tell you that I think the people of Chilton County are the equals of any county in Alabama in matters of intelligence and enlightenment. You talk about wrigting letters to enlighten the uneducated people. You might take such letters of campaign rot as that which you have been writing and go to the barbarins and cannibals of Africa and enlighten them with it, but I am sure there is no one, especially a Republican or Progressive, in Chilton county who is so ignorant as to be enlightened any by reading such rot. However if the Democrats of the county want to put you up as the leader of their party to boss and enlighten their voters, it is all right with me; but we Progressives do not need your advice or dictation.

You also said that I seem to think you can be driven around. Now surely one could not think that of a man of your standing, as leader and boss for the Democrats. But you know there are two ways in which to make children love, mind and obey: one way is to give them kind treatment, and the other way is by using the chastising rod. I guess the Democrats (or at least Wood) thought it best to use the latter in your case, and it seems that their judgment was good in that instance.

Ha! ha! Moses says he will write no more. That is just awful. But you know if a fellow walks out upon the ice and it breaks through with his weight, he will belikely to stay there unless he gets help. That is the fix Moses is in; and there does not seem to be any help forthcoming for him. So as Mose says he will write no more, I have no more for him at present.

Mr. Editor, I notice "A County Democrat" in last week's Press come in and offers to give some advice, and the first thing he attempts to do is to mislead and make false impressions in the minds of the people. He says that all our Presidents since the Civil War have appointed niggers to office. But now listen, he says they had to appoint them. Here comes his false statement: he says that the 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States makes it compulsory on our Presidents to appoint niggers. He says it is not the will of the Presidents, but the will of the law. I want to say to "A County Democrat" that if he knows very much, he knows that statement is false, and if he will read the amendments mentioned above, he will see that they deal with the rights of citizenship, and do not have anything to do with a person's qualifications for holding office, except those who had rebelled against the government. He tries to make you believe that the Republicans passed those amendments to force Democratic Presidents to appoint negros to office, which he knows is not true, for he knows that the President has the right to appoint to office whomsoever he pleases, whether he be white or black—excepting those under the civil service—and the Democrats passed the civil service law. So you see that when our Democeatic Presidents appoint negros to office, they do it on their own free will.

Yours respectfully,
A Voter.

Alabama State Masonic Home.

Montgomery, Ala., June 8th, 1914.
Editor Union-Banner:—I wish to write you a few words regarding the excursion party from Chilton county, which visited the Home on last Sunday. About 125 in all, consisting of Masons with their wives and families and friends, from the Masonic Lodges at Cooper, Clanton, Verbena Mountain Creek made the visit, and inspected our home. Our superintendent met the party at the car line with automobiles and other conveyance, and carried them load by load to the Home, a distance of about a mile and a quarter frow the car line. After thoroughly inspecting the Home they enjoyed their splendid picnic dinner which they had prepared for the occasion.

The Home appreciated this visit, and to show it the children repeated some songs and recitations which they had prepared for some of their entertainments. The party also expressed great delignt at what they saw and heard.

After making acquaintances with each other, and pleasant conversations till about three o' clock, the visitors were carried back to the car line, from whence they went to the depot and boarded their waiting train for home.

Come again friends. we are always delighted to be remembered by friends of the Masonic fraternity.

In future I shall endevor to give a deseription of the home, and tell something of the residents, management, etc.

With good wishes to all, I bid you good bye.

Fraternally,
Dan D. Lucius.

In Memory of Wm A. Jackson

Who died at his daughter's, Mrs. Eliza Sanders, near Lomax, on May 23, 1914. He was born in Wilks county, Georgia, April 2, 1833. When about 18 years old, came to Chambers county, Alabama, and spent the most of his life. In the fall of 1901 he moved from Chambers county to Chilton county where he lived until his death. He leaves a widow and eight children. His remains were carried to New Harmony church at Lomax, and there in the presence of his wife, and children, and a large number of grand children, and a host of friends, was laid to await the resurrection.

The writer has known his life for 40 years, and knows it to be a remarkable life. He was always ready to help in time of need. Nights were never too dark, nor weather too cold to prevent him from going to his fellowman in time of need and distress. The writer was blessed with the privilege of being with him the four last days of his life, and during this time he was free from pain. He said he suffered none, but had no desire to stay here any longer, that all was well with him.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space in your paper for a few words. I have been engaged in farming in Louisiana for four years. My farm contains 130 acres of land, 65 of which is planted in oats, and the remainder in corn, peanuts, peas and cotton. Have finished laying by my corn and am now cutting oats. Have a fine crop of everything I have planted.

I think I shall pay Clanton a visit about next Christmas. I have two brothers near Clanton, W. J. and G. W. Foshee. I shall go to Hot Springs this summer for treatment. Have been there two summers before. If any of my friends from Clanton are there I hope to see them. I shall be stopping at the Cooper House.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY ALABAMA BANKERS

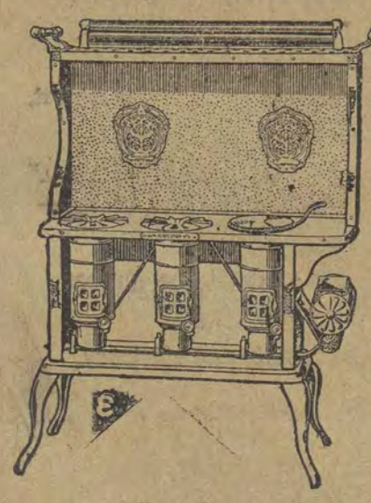
Whereas, the Alabama Bankers Association, after continued labor of several years and through their Legislative Committee, had prepared and succeeded in having passed by the last Legislature, the present law governing State; and,

Whereas, the operations of this law have been such as to command the respect and approval of not only the State banks but of the financial world, in general; and,

Whereas, this law has been administered in such a wise manner and so effectively by the Superintendent of Banks, Mr. A. E. Walker;

Resolved, by the Alabama Bankers Association, in convention assembled, at Decatur, that, by unanimous vote, we respectfully bear earnest testimony to the loyalty, intelligence and efficiency of Mr. Walker, whose administration has been so signally successful and resultful.

Resolved, further, That this Association recommends that the next Legislature will make sufficient appropriations and proper legislation for the appointmnet of two additional Examiners, and an official stenographer in the office of the Superintendent of Banks.



It is further resolved, That it is the sense of this Association that the expense account allowed by law to the present Examiners is insufficient and inadequate, and that it is recommended by this Association, that this allowance should have sufficient and competent legislation to increase the aforesaid mentioned expense allowance.

THREE EX-SHERIFFS OF MOBILE SHORT

DISCREPANCIE SARE FOUND BY EXAMINER GORMAN TOTALING $2,890.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Discrepancies amounting to $2,890 were discovered in the county accounts of J. F. Powers, F. S. Cazalas and J. S. Drago, three former sheriffs of Mobile county, by J. T. Gorman, examiner of public accounts, who submitted a report of his examinations to Governor O'Neal. The charges against the three former sheriffs arose because they collected fees fur summoning defendants' witnesses. In an opinion handed down by the Attorney General, such collections were declared illegal.

County accounts of the following officials were correct, according to the report of the examiner: Price Williams, probate judge; T. T. Palmer, sheriff; J. B. Crane, clerk of the city court; F. W. Herman, clerk of the inferior court; P. B. Dorlon, tax collector; E. D. Laurendine, tax assessor; George S. Stone, treasurer, and the members of the Mobile county board of revenue.

Reports of his examination of the State accounts of these officials were filed recently by Examiner Gorman.

Former Official Reported Short.

W. S. Pugh, former tax collector of Washington county, is short in his accounts to the amount of $5,994, according to a report filed with Governor O'Neal by J. T. Gorman, examiner of public accounts.

Mr. Gorman has turned his report over to Chief Examiner Charles E. McCall and unless Collector Pugh makes a settlement within ten days the matter will be turned over to the solicitor of the Washington circuit court for action. All of the shortages are due to Washington county.

Examiner Gorman's report covers the years 1909, 1910, 1911 and 1912. In his report the examiner declares that Tax Collector Pugh owes the county for general taxes $5,035 and for special taxes $452. Interest on these sums amounts to $610.15, bringing the total amount due the county up to $5,994.05. The collector overpadi school tax to the extent of $103, which was deucted from the amount due the county.

Pope Case Again.

For the fifth time the case of Ervin Pope, negro, is before the Supreme Court. It was submitted and the court's decision will probably be announced before July 1.

Pope's case is considered the most remarkable in the criminal annals of the State. He has been convicted and sentenced to hang five times for the murder of J. B. McClurkin, a prominent farmer of Calhoun county, who lived near Oxford. The case has been before the Supreme Court and has been reversed four times. Seven different days have been set for the hanging.

The killing of McClurkin occurred on the night of April 19, 1909. McClurkin was a miller by trade, and on that night was awakened about midnight by the noise of someone robbing his gotton gin. He got up, saddled his mule, and followed the robber's wagon tracks.

The following morning his body was found horribly mutilated in a cotton patch near the town of Oxford. He had been knocked on the head with a heavy club and his skull crushed with a large stone, which was found near the body.

The principal witness against Pope was a negro named John Body, in front of whose home the killing occurred. Body swore that on the night of the murder he was awakened by screams and blows, and that he heard a voice cry out, "Ervin, Ervin."

Delegates to Labor Conference.

The four delegates to the annual meeting of the International Association of Factory Inspectors and Labor Commissioners appointed by Governor O'Neal are from Birmingham and are Isadore Shapiro, George Huddleston, W. L. Harrison and Asa Faulkner. The meeting was held in Nashville June 8-12. Governor O'Neal appointed these delegates at the request of Governor B. W. Hooper of Tennessee. The association discussed labor conditions in factories of the United States.

Insurance on the Increase.

One of the State's most lucrative sources of revenues that is ever increasing is the insurance department whose gross receipts for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1913, were $269,112.36, according to figures compiled by Secretary of State Cyrus B. Brown for his annual report. The operating expenses for the same period were $12,718.02, leaving net receipts of $256,404.33. This is an increase of approximately $14,000 over the preceding year.

Water Power Law May Change.

At the next meeting of the Legislature an attempt, it is said, will be made to recast the Alabama laws relating to water power companies. One of the principal complaints seems to be against a provision which exempts these companies for ten years from making use of their franchises. It is argued that if a railroad fails to build within six months to two years after securing its right-of-way the same is forfeited, and that there should be no discrimination in favor of dydro-electric companies.

The exemption to water power companies, it is claimed, makes it possible for th emto monopolize the water power sites of the State and it is asserted that this is now being done. After such a company acquires a site it should be required to start activities within a reasonable time, it is maintained.

Relief for Treasury Suggested.

A way to tide the State over in its present financial difficulties has been suggested in the event that the Legislature is convened in special session by Governor O'Neal.

It is claimed that the Legislature could authorize the immediate issuance and sale of $300,000 worth of bonds which were authorized during the Jelks administration, but which bonds have never been issued or marketed. These bonds, it is said, would find ready purchasers. The Legislature also could authorize the governor to borrow and pay interest on $300,000. He is now limited to $100,000.

This combined would make over a half million dollars available and would be sufficient to relieve the tension until revenues begin coming in during the fall.

Malone Director Regional Bank.

George H. Malone, cashier of the First National Bank of Dothan, was selected by the Alabama Bankers' association as Alabama director of the Federal reserve bank at Atlanta.

Mr. Malone's election followed a long and spirited contest, which continued throughout the day. At the morning session of the bank representatives a resolution was passed prohibiting a director or officer of one of the larger banks from representing Alabama in the Federal directorship. The resolution also provided that only a representative of a bank in group 3 class, which represents a capitalization not exceeding $60,000, was eligible as a director of the Federal reserve bank. Mr. Malone's closest opponent for the directorship of the Federal reserve bank was McLane Tilton of Pell City. W. H. Merrill of Eufaula was also nominated for the office.

Will Discuss Judiciary Reform.

One of the most important questions which will come before the State Bar Association when it meets here on July 10, will be the subject of judicial reform, which has been agitated in Alabama for the past three years.

The judicial reform commission, which was appointed by the governor three years ago, will turn over to the bar association all data in its possession and the members of the bar are expected to take some action on the various recommendations and suggestions. It is more than probable that the bar association will compile the various data into the form of a report to be presented before the Legislature, with the recommendation that favorable action be taken by the State's law-makers.

The judicial commission was appointed by the governor shortly after he assumed office as chief executive. Judge John Pelham, associate member of the court of appeals, was made chairman of the commission.

Judge Pelham has collected considerable data which will be of aid to the bar association and Legislature in providing a system of judicial reform, and he will turn all these papers over to the bar association.

Employ More Field Secretaries.

Owing to the growth of Sunday school work in Alabama, which has resulted in Alabama being the strongest Sunday school State in the South, the Alabama Sunday School Association has employed two additional State field secretaries, Miss Freda Bose of Mobile and Miss Minnie Allgood of Dadeville.

The convention key word for 1914-15 of the Alabama Sunday School Association is "helping every Sunday school."

State Sells Cement Shares.

State Treasurer John Purifoy sold at public auction June 6, 500 shares of the Markley Coal Company of Mobile and the Mobile Portland Cement Company to secure an indebtedness of $140,000 which the former company owes the State for certain coal lands purchased in Jefferson and Tuscaloosa counties. The Markley Coal Company purchased the lands from the State and gave as security a mortgage on 500 shares of stock, valued at $500,000. The company defaulted in the payment of the property.

Lets Contracts for Road Work.

Contracts for the construction of several miles of State aid roads in Macon county near Tuskegee were let by the State highway department to the Nixon-Smith Construction Company, the contracts totaling $6,542. The company will improve seven miles of the road from Tuskegee to Montgomery and will construct several additional miles of new roads. This work will be done on the main line of the trunk highway running between Montgomery and Atlanta. Work will begin at once.

HOUSE PASSES 3 OF WILSON'S BILLS

CLAYTON'S BILL EXEMPTING UNIONS ADOPTED—THIRD BILL UNANIMOUS.

MAY RENEW COMPETITION

Supervision of Stock and Bonds Passes 325 to 12—No Recorded Opposition to Federal Trade Commission.

Washington.—The anti-trust legislation dictated by President Wilson passed the house of representatives by decisive votes. The three bills carrying plans for further reform of big business and in issuance of securities will be rushed to the senate.

On the Clayton general trust bill, which carried the labor and farmers' organizations' exemption clause and limitations on the power of courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes the vote was 275 to 54. A roll call on the stocks and bonds bill resulted 325 to 12. The federal trade commission bill passed without opposition.

The Clayton bill, besides the pro-labor amendments, carries legislation against the use of unfair methods by the large corporations and seeks to restore competition. It provides also against interlocking directorates among competing concerns and between corporations and their supply companies. It is believed this provision will bring to the front a number of new men now held in subordinate positions because of the enforced retirement of many men from positions on a number of directorates besides opening to individuals opportunities in the supplies contract field.

Opposition to this bill came largely on the labor exemption and the injunction and contempt sections. Several lawyer members of the house argued that other sections of the bill were vague and involved and would require judicial interpretations before they can be enforced.

Republican leaders contend that the section exempting labor unions from provisions of the anti-trust laws makes of labor a privileged class, even though the individual is held responsible to the law. They urged also that the restriction on the judges in issuance of restraining injunction in labor disputes opened the door to the commission of violence by strikers and was a blow at the powers and dignity of the courts.

THREE STATES BENEFITTED

Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi Will Each Receive Federal Funds on Account of Schools.

Washington.—Because the states of Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi make appropriations for their agricultural schools and for agricultural purposes, the department of agriculture holds that these states automatically under the Smith-Lever agricultural extension bill receive $11,000 July 1 for this and next year. The sum of approximately $37,000 will be paid for 1915-16, and thus on a fixed scale according to the rates of the rural population until 1922, when they receive approximately $180,000, and the same sum thereafter per annum, provided these state appropriations are increased in duplication of the federal appropriation annually.

The money is to be used exclusively for demonstration on the farm.

TELLS OF MARITAL WOES

Prima Dona Takes Stand in Divorce Suit—Schumann-Heink Seeks Divorce on Statutory Grounds.

Chicago.—Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink unfolded the story of her domestic woes before a jury hearing her suit for divorce from William Rapp, Jr., of New York. Rapp, she said, had been friendly to "a blonde lady in New York," whom she subsequently named as Mrs. Catharine Dean.

Two depositions were read, one from Mrs. Julia Williams, a maid formerly employed by Mrs. Dean, and one from a New York detective, who told of numerous visits to a Fifth avenue restaurant by Mrs. Dean and Rapp. According to his deposition, the detective followed Rapp many nights from his office in West Thirty-fourth street to various places where he met Mrs. Dean.

The deposition of Mrs. Williams was that Rapp had lived at the apartment of Mrs. Dean for several months in 1913.

In cross-examination, Mme. Schumann-Heink frequently expostulated with her husband's attorney.

"Let me say what I wish, please," she begged. "I do not mean to say the wrong thing."

Rapp charged in a cross-bill that his wife had been too friendly with other men. She denied the accusations. She said she never had any love for Edward McNamara, one-time policeman, who visited her in New Jersey. She declared he came for music lessons, not for love-making.

"Who was with you in Caldwell, N J.?" the attorney asked. "Wasn't there a man named McNamara?"

The question aroused Mrs. Schumann-Heink's wrath. Her eyes blazed "I never have lived with any man," she answered. "I have lived alone since my husband left."

"I hadn't asked you that," the lawyer replied.

The singer told of a consultation with Rapp at her Chicago home last July. She testified, that her husband then said he wanted a divorce.

"I didn't want a divorce, I told him," she said. "I am happy as I am with my children and my art. I told him I would never think of marrying again. Always I said I never wanted a divorce."

The singer has eight children, one adopted and seven by previous marriages. The oldest, she said, was 32 years old.

It is specifically alleged that the National Association of Plumbers has been operating in violation of the law ever since its organization in 1884.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS I. C. C.

CAN STRIKE DOWN STATE RATES THAT DISCRIMINATE AGAINST INTERSTATE RATES.

HUGHES RENDERS DECISION

Justices Pitney and Lurton Dissent. Case Arose Out of Complaint of Shreveport Merchants.

Washington. — A long step toward placing railroads under "one master instead of many" was taken by the United States supreme court in upholding the power of the interstate commerce commission to strike down State rates that discriminate against interstate commerce. In substance the court said that the Minnesota and other recent State rate cases in which the railroads lost might have been decided otherwise had the roads gone to the commission for relief instead of the courts.

The decision was announced by Justices Pitney and Lurton dissenting. The case arose out of complaint by Shreveport merchants that the Texas railroad commission had shut them out of all Texas business by compelling the railroads to reduce Texas State rates far below what the interstate commerce commission allowed the railroads running from Shreveport to Texas cities to charge.

The court first decided that Congress had power to control interstate charges over an interstate carrier to the extent necessary to prevent injurious discriminations against interstate traffic, and then held that Congress had conferred this power upon the interstate commerce commission.

"The fact that carriers are instruments of intra-commerce as well as of interstate commerce," said Justice Hughes, "does not derogate from the complete and paramount authority of Congress over the latter or preclude the Federal power from being exerted to prevent the intrastate operations of such carriers from being made a means of injury to that which has been confided to Federal care. Wherever the interstate and intrastate transactions of carriers are so related that the government of the one involves the control of the other it is Congress and not the State that is entitled to prescribe the final and dominant rule, for otherwise Congress would be denied the exercise of its constitutional authority and the State, not the nation, would be supreme within the national field.

In reviewing discriminations against interstate commerce, the court held that Congress was not bound to reduce the interstate rates below what it may deem to be a proper standard to the carrier and the public.

"Otherwise," said the opinon, "it could prevent the injury to interstate commerce only by the sacrifice of its judgment of interstate rates."

Justice Hughes, who wrote the court's decision in the State rate cases of a year ago, pointed out that the present case did not conflict with those cases. He said that in the absence of a finding by the commission of unjust discriminations, intrastate rates undoubtedly were left to be fixed by the carrier and subject to the authority of the States.

"We are not unmindful of the gravity of the question that is presented when State and Federal views conflict," the opinion concluded. "But it was recognized at the beginning that the nation could not prosper if interstate and foreign trade were governed by many masters, and where the interests of the freedom on interstate commerce are involved, the judgment of Congress and of the agencies it lawfully establishes must control."

Members of the interstate commerce commission regarded this case as one of the most important in which the body ever has been involved. The decision was written by Secretary Lane before he left the commission to become a member of the president's cabinet.

Excellent weather for the growing crop and an increase of 6.4 per cent. in the acreage planted to wheat are responsible.

Warm and dry weather of the past few weeks has injured the growth of corn, but has not affected the cotton crop, according to Reuben F. Kolb, State commissioner of agriculture, who made a statement of conditions as deducted from reports received at his office. Commissioner Kolb said the drouth had allowed cotton plants to send their roots deep into the ground in search of moisture, thus giving them more strength to withstand the drouth later than they would have had had May been a rainy month. He estimated that the cotton acreage this year is about the same as last, except in the seven or eight counties rated as Alabama's boll weevil section.

Rains of the past week gave increased hope for a good corn crop, and Commissioner Kolb said the opportunity is still open to make a fine crop. Dallas reported the first cotton bloom.

Forget-Me-Not.

"Ah, yes, there are still true and loyal souls in this sad world," murmured the solemn individual in the tortoise-shell glasses. "I used to know a dear girl—it was ten long years ago—and not a year has passed since that she hasn't written me a birthday letter. Always what she writes is about the same: 'Dear Alfred, I can't ever forget, not if I live to be a hundred, this day of all the days in the year. Let me once again wish you long life and happiness with all my heart,' etc."

"Very sweet of the girl," said the stout young man with the amazing waistcoat, "very sweet of her, indeed."

"Very," replied the solemn individual; "only, you see, she writes that dashed letter to me on a different day every year."

Getting Round It.

"The wife of a child labor millionaire once asked him in some little disgust:

"'George, suppose you'd been born in the days when everybody had to live by the sweat of his or her brow. What would you do then?"

"'I'd open a stand,' George answered, 'for the sale of handkerchiefs.'"

The great trouble with most people is that they seem to think they are just as good as we are.

CROP CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVING

FAIR PROGRESS MADE BY COTTON DURING THE PAST TWO WEEKS—PLANTS IMPROVE.

FAIR WEATHER IN THE WEST

Late Plantings Will Be Brought to Stand Where Drouth Has Been Broken—Cotton That Is Up in Good Condition.

Washington.—On the whole conditions surrounding the growing cotton crop have somewhat improved during the past two weeks, and fair progress has been made by the crop. Fair weather has come to the west and work has been resumed, while local rains have greatly relieved drouth conditions in the east.

In the west there is yet much to be desired, especially in Texas. Lowlands are badly overflowed and much acreage will be abandoned on this account. However, with the coming of fair weather the plant took on a more healthy hue, work in the fields was rushed, much cotton was chopped out and planting was pushed almost to completion. The crop west of the Mississippi averages late, but farmers are bending every effort toward doing their part to regain lost ground.

The crop east of the river that is up is almost perfect, aside from a somewhat small plant in some localities. The dry weather has allowed unlimited work in the fields, with the result that cultivation is almost perfect and fields are clean. The late planted cotton that has not come up constitutes the one deterrent factor in the crop in that section. Just what percentage of the crop this constitutes it would be hard to estimate, but aside from the Carolinas, it is not large. Where rains have fallen cotton is rapidly coming to good stands by bringing up the late plantings.

In the west a continued period of several days of fair weather would bring out the crop wonderfully.

Boll weevil in large numbers have been found in infested areas of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas.

MISS JAY GETS $20,000.00

Wins Breach of Promise Suit From Homer Rodeheaver, "Billy" Sunday's Assistant.

Chicago.—A verdict awarding $20,000 damages to Miss Georgia Jay against Homer Rodeheaver, choirmaster for "Billy" Sunday, evangelist, for breach of promise to marry was returned by a jury in the circuit court.

Miss Jay alleged that she met Rodeheaver in Iowa; that they became friends and that he proposed marriage to her and was accepted. Later she declared he refused to marry her "because marriage would interfere with his career." Taxicab rides, long strolls and discussion of future plans figured largely in the testimony of Miss Jay.

Evidence was presented showing that Rodeheaver was paid $100 a week and traveling expenses.

RECOMMEND LEVER BILL

House Committee Prefers Substitute to Smith Measure—Latter Passed Senate—May Pass Soon.

Washington.—The house committee on agriculture completed its consideration of the cotton futures bill and decided to recommend the Lever substitute, somewhat modified, for the Smith bill that passed the senate two months ago. The senate bill, it will be remembered, forbade the use of any means of communication between the states unless the contract for future delivery was made in accordance with conditions therein set down.

The Lever bill, which the committee hopes to get through the house at this session, provides a tax of one-fifth of a cent per pound unless the contract is in accordance with the strict, but not impossible conditions set forth in the bill. If the contract complies, then the tax shall not be collected.

The chief of these isuses was as to the meaning of the sixth condition, which, at the time the issue was joined, read as follows:

"All tenders of cotton under such contract shall be the full number of bales involved therein; that on the fifth business day prior to delivery the person making such tender shall give to the person receiving the same written notice of the date of delivery, and that on or prior to the date so fixed for delivery and in advance of final settlement of the contract the person making the tender shall furnish to the person receiving the same written notice or certificate, stating the grade of each individual bale to be delivered, and, by means of marks or numbers, identifying each bale with its grade."

The other issue was as to the method to be used in ascertaining the commercial differences between the grades contracted to be delivered and the grades actually tendered. The members of the committee, at the last conference, indicated a perfect willingness to make changes so as to make the ascertainment a workable proposition, but the question as to whether in making the change the lawmakers, through failure to understand all the complicated minutae of the market, have been able to accomplish what they and the cotton exchange men desire for the elimination of the abuses.

WOULD ARBITRATE DISPUTE

Washington.—Just when a vote on the Panama canal tolls exemption repeal bill seemed certain within a few days, the senate foreign relations committee surprised the senate and complicated the situation by reporting favorably a resolution designed to lead to the submission of the dispute with Great Britain to arbitration by an international tribunal. There was no discussion of the resolution, but it will be taken up before a vote is reached on the repeal bill itself, and its appearance before the senate undoubtedly will lead to further debate.

CONTINUE IN FOLLY

Proof That Bourbon Politicians Have Learned Nothing.

Nomination of Boies Penrose in Pennsylvania a Piece of Deliberate Insolence—Duty of Voters to Defeat Him.

The nomination of Boies Penrose by the Republican organization of Pennsylvania is yet another proof that the Bourbons learn nothing. It was a piece of wisdom and foresight comparable, though on a different scale of importance, with the defeat of Theodore Roosevelt at the Chicago convention. It has even less excuse, because the result of that defeat is now not prophecy but experience.

The nomination of Boies Penrose was not a vagary of the people. It was the deliberate insolence and incurable folly of men so saturated in the cynicism of Pennsylvania professional politics that they are incapable of knowing what the feeling of the American people is toward them and their kind. They certainly are careless of the effect of raising Penrose up as a Republican leader in the leading Republican state (leading in the mere weight of majorities in the past), and they hope to win by the dishonored methods of the past, with the aid of some reaction against the Democrats, the outgrowth of business recession and unemployment.

The defeat of Penrose is a duty, first of all of the rank and file of the Republican party in Pennsylvania. The decent leadership of the party should be quick to realize this and to rally real Republicanism to the support of Gifford Pinchot. For compassing the defeat of Penrose the best class of Democrats also should throw their full strength to Pinchot, for in this fight against the calloused veteran of the worst forces in national politics party labels are nothing and patriotism rises far above partisanship.

If Boies Penrose goes to the senate as the Republican senator from a great Republican domain it will be more than a spadeful of dirt on the grave of the Republican party.

Farmers and the Tariff.

The tariff issue will be insistent in this year's campaign because of the manifest inequalities inflicted by the Democratic revision on the farmers of the country.

Indiana Progressives enjoy a peculiar advantage in having for their standard bearer the author and greatest champion of logical tariff revision. That advantage comes from the failure of the Democratic measure to attain the purpose for which it was designed, and from the additional fact that it discriminates in its advantages against certain great classes, withholding from the farmer a part of his income while denying him the benefit of reductions on the products that he is compelled to buy in the open market.

The farmer cannot look to Democracy for a remedy, nor has he any hope of reformation from the Republican party, which in the years of its control continuously rejected the tariff commission principle that would have prevented extortion on the one hand and destructive foreign competition on the other.—Indianapolis Star.

Monroe Doctrine.

"As soon as any country of the new world stands on a sufficiently high footing of orderly liberty and achieved justice, of self-respecting strength, it becomes a guarantor of the Monroe doctrine."

"It is to be invoked only in the interests of all our commonwealths of the western hemisphere."

"It should be invoked by all our nations on footing of complete equality of both right and obligation."

"It is a doctrine which the United States promulgated, but as rapidly as any other American republic grows to possess the stability, the prosperity that comes with stability, the self-respecting insistence upon doing right to others and exacting right from others, just so rapidly that country becomes itself a sponsor and guarantor of the Monroe doctrine."

"If it ever becomes vitally necessary to enforce it, each would help the others."—Theodore Roosevelt.

Country Safely Progressive.

It is not now a question of a Progressive platform that can separate the masses of the voters of the two organizations, as the most moss-backed of the standpatters are aware that the country is sanely Progressive, and especially desirous of a thoroughly up-to-date American policy in its national affairs.

Colonel Roosevelt will find his following largely increased if his political activities in the next few months are devoted to progress upon constructive lines in political and business affairs.

Entangling Alliances.

It is one thing for President Wilson to "reiterate the policy outlined by Washington that the United States should refrain from entering into entangling alliances," and quite another thing for the administration to enter into entangling alliances with persons of the Villa and Carranza types. The president may be able to see a distinction with a difference between the two courses, but very few others will be able to perceive it.—Springfield Union.

MUCH GOOD IN SALAD

APPETIZING AND HEALTH-GIVING AT ALL SEASONS.

Housewife Who Is Proficient in Their Making Is a Treasure to Her Family—Three Recipes That Are Excellent.

By LIDA AMES WILLIS.

One of our readers delights in her skill in salad-making. She declares she can prepare salads that are her own—and her family's—greatest joy and satisfaction in this life, if not their salvation in the next. Another reader exhorts us to preach salads to the outer barbarian who will not adopt this higher phase of development. Virtue lies in the harmonious combination of a salad, the beauty and health-giving qualities that nature has imparted to the delicate, tender green vegetables, the oil of the olive, and other choice ingredients used.

Though salads vary with the season, happily there is no month in our year during which we may not obtain fresh materials in greens or vegetables for the production of choice salads. The American cucumber, hot-house or outdoor grown, should be eaten in all its pristine freshness, sliced into ice cold water to make it tender and crisp, but no salt added.

Dutch Salad.—The minced fish salads originated with the Dutch, who were famous for compounds of fish, cheddar cheese, and various roots and herbs. A herring salad is made with two broiled herring, skin and bones removed and meat shredded; put in a salad bowl a bleached head of endive; add to the fish and two anchovies cut up a dozen minced capers, two boiled and diced potatoes, two boiled and pickled beets cut in shreds, and some minced herbs. Pour over all a plain salad dressing; toss lightly together and serve.

French Salad.—Trim, wash and cut up a head of endive; drain perfectly dry. Rub your salad bowl with a cube or crust of bread rubbed with garlic or onion. Put in the endive and cover with a dressing made of olive oil, tarragon vinegar, salt, pepper, a little anchovy paste, pinch of celery salt, and toss lightly together and serve.

Spanish Salad.—Not to France or sunny Italy are our thanks due for the glorious tomato salad. By the law of eternal fitness it belongs to Spain, that land of vivid romance. Blend the tomato with the ripe Spanish olive, a few waferlike slices of Spanish onion, and shreds of green pepper, and cap all with a crown of golden mayonnaise, and you'll find joy in the eating thereof.

Meat Pie.

Select a couple of pounds from loin of pork, and a pound of nicely seasoned sausage links; rinse quickly and put to boil gently in sufficient water to cover it. The water should be cold to begin with, and salted. Add eight to ten potatoes which have been peeled and halved. Stew gently until all is tender, adding water if necessary; rub a little flour, butter and pepper to a paste with a little of the meat broth. Line a pudding or bake dish with a rich crust, turn in the stew with the thickening, cover with a buttered crust, leaving a hole in the center for steam to escape. Bake in a rather quick oven until crust is brown and flaky.

When You Sweep.

For sweeping a room neatly there is nothing like newspaper aid. Take a page of newspaper or other paper convenient, wet in hot water and squeeze it until it ceases to drip. Tear into pieces the size of one's hand, cast them all over the carpet, then sweep, and most of the dust in the room, if you use your broom judiciously, will be gathered into the papers. After a velvet or other heavy pile carpet is thoroughly swept, a sponging with ammonia and water will preserve its brightness wonderfully.

New Apple Sauce Pudding.

Peel and quarter six apples. Add one-half cupful sugar, pinch of salt, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon and cook till almost done. Place this apple sauce in a buttered pudding dish and pour over the following mixture: One-half cupful butter, melted, one cupful of molasses, one-half teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful soda, dissolved in a little boiling water and enough to make a thin batter. Bake one-half hour in a moderate oven. Serve with thin pudding sauce. Most delicious.

Eggless Chocolate Cake.

Cream one cupful sugar, half cupful butter, one large teaspoonful salt, one cupful milk or a little more if needed; one and a half cupfuls pastry flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, three tablespoonfuls of powdered chocolate or cocoa, one teaspoonful vanilla. Cream sugar, butter, salt, chocolate and a little milk to make it creamy, add flour, baking powder and vanilla. Butter the pan well and try cake with straw.

Bride's Cake.

Sift three-fourths cupful of powdered sugar and cream with one-fourth cupful of butter; sift twice one and one-half cupfuls of flour; at the second sifting sift with it one teaspoonful of baking powder and a pinch of salt, one-half cupful sweet milk whites of two eggs beaten to a foam Flavor with lemon. Beat the mixture from 20 minutes to half an hour.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.
UNION PUBLISHING CO.
W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

We are publishing this week official calls from Chairman, George W. Edwards, for meetings of the Republican executive committe of the county, and a mass meeting of "those voters who will agree to support the Republican nominees." We assume no responsibility for these announcements, but merely publish same at the request of Mr. Edwards.

By the mass meeting of the Republican voters which is called for June 20th, the old line Taft supporters intend to maintain the stand pat organization. They will elect delegates to the state convention, of which Chilton gets fifteen. It is not expected that they will launch a county ticket to oppose the Bull Moose and Democrats in November.

"OF SUCH IS MODERN DEMOCRACY."

"To put the whole country on the bum with a lot of new and untried legislation was a clumsy course when the end sought could have been attained by slapping a few malefactors of great wealth into prison, but to keep it plunged in doubt and depression for months and months while Congressmen quibble, shuffle, back and fill is trying.

It is comparatively easy to stand for Congressional wind jamming when we are busy with our own affairs, but when we have little or no business to attend to and know that we won't have until Congress sees fit to let us have it, and moreouer, when lots of us are entirely out of work and actually hungry, we watch the rightly named "deliberation" of that august bunch with impatience and disgust.

Ex-Mayor Hunt of Cincinnati has defined a reformer as "a man who takes a long time to get into office and a short time to get out."

If Congress don't get a move on and give us a little action President Wilson is likely to share ex-Mayor Hunt's opinion, for, great and good man as he undoubtedly is, Mr. Wilson is slowly but surely losing out with the people."—The Billboard.

In Memory

Of Mrs. Bertie Foshee, who passed from earth to heaven on June 4th. She had been sick for three months, but a murmur never passed her lips. Her sufferings were great, but she bore them patiently until God bid her to leave this world of trouble and come and dwell with him where her pain would be over. She said all that she regretted to die for was leaving her husband and little boy. She did so want to live and raise him up to manhood, but God had other work for her to do. He wanted her to be with Him among His angles to sing His praises, and today while we are weeping and mourning for her, she is happy. While it almost broke our hearts to give her up; we would not if we could call her back to this world of pain. We feel that we can not speak a word to comfort the sorrowing ones. We can only commend them to look to God—He alone can ease their aching hearts—and live so that when He calls you, you too can be ready to answer His summons, and there at the pearly gate Bertie will be waiting to welcome you home, and then what a happy meeting you will have.

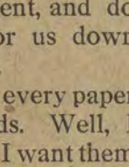
Bertie joined the church several years ago and has lived up to her promise ever since. She leaves a husband, a little boy, father and mother, three brothers and four sisters, besides a host of others to mourn her loss. But why should we weep when she is at rest, with the good and blest.

Mineral Springs

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space in your paper to saw a few words. Health of this community is improving after so long a siege of measles and pneumonia. There is but few cases at present, and best of it is, there is very few left in here for the measles to work on now.

Crops are small for this time of the year. It has been so dry that the crops made slow progress.

The Sunday School at Mineral Springs is not progressing very much at present on account of sickness here.



Well I will give my opinion as to letters that I see in the Union-Banner and Press. I think it best for both Republican and Democrat parties to lay aside the mud slinging and get right down to business, for the time has past for mud slinging to win votes; it only stirs up strife and gets some of the people to where they don't know what to do; neither do they care how they vote or talk, just so they are talking. So far as the negro is concerned I think he ought to be left entirely out of political business, for I think the Democrats have had just as much for the negro to do as the Republicans ever did. I heard a Democrat of Sylacauga say that he went to the north and saw the negroes and whites sit down to the table and eat together. Well if he saw all of that I saw the same thing done in our own state capital, and in the same city I heard a big Democrat say that he did not know what the Democratic party would do if it were not for the negroes. He also said that they wouldn't have anything to fight with if they didn't have the negro to tie to their whip and pop him at the Republicans. Well, after all that's no good. I don't like to hear it, for we are in a good country and the negroes don't meddle with our business. He gets what is given to him, so I think we are at poor business to be handling his name in our campaign. We have no negroes in office here, and if the President appoints one to office, what have we to do with it? The President is at the head and we are at the foot, so what can we do, or why should we raise such a high kick?

Now, Moses says that "he has worked his hands." Well, I wish he would go up and work Woodrow Wilson's hands and face; maybe that it would help him to make a better President, and do more good work for us down here in old Alabama.

I see something in every paper about the good roads. Well, I want good roads but I want them by the people and not by a "Bond Issue." I want to see the day come when our convicts can be worked on our public roads, where we can see how they are treated. I think the public roads of the county is the place for our convicts. Some say we can't work them, I see other counties work them, why not us? We are getting more able and with the convicts labor I think it will be a good help towards making roads better. When we go to Coosa county and see some of the roads over there it makes me think that we have one of the best counties in the state.

Clanton, Ala., June 9, 1914.

Editor Union-Banner:—I have noticed a number of articles in the Press signed "Same Old Moses," in which he claims that all who do not vote the Democratic ticket fail to do so through ignorance. Now, as for education, we do not think "Same Old Moses" is burdened with it, and as to his ignorance, we will let the people decide for themselves. We will admit that several of us lack education, but we charge a portion of it up to the great and grand old Democratic party which "Same Old Moses" thinks he is running, for it has been in power forty years and we are third from the bottom of the list. So it seems that those who vote the Democratic ticket are a little short too.

Let us see what "Same Old Moses" got and tried to get from this little ignorant crowd that he has had so much to say about.

He was elected Sheriff by them in 1900, and turned it over to the Democrats, giving as his reason that he feared the Democrats would have him put in the penitentiary; but he said he was the "Same Old Moses." In 1904 he ran for Tax Collector and got forty-three votes in the whole county; yet he was the "Same Old Moses." In 1906 he wanted to run for the legislature, but for some cause he failed to do so; still he said he was the "Same Old Moses." In 1908 he wanted to be postmaster at Clanton, but failed; however, he was the "Same Old Moses." In 1910 he wanted to be appointed assistant Deputy U. S Marshal, but failed; as before he said he was the "Same Old Moses." In 1912 he changed politics for some cause; but still said he was the "Same Old Moses." So in the last battle in which "Same Old Moses" was with us we lost a part of our ticket, but the first one that we had after he left us, we were successful by a large majority. This time our majority will be larger than it was two years ago.

Yours truly,
LEE VICKERS.

Constipation, if Neglected, Causes Serious Illness

Constipation, if neglected, leads to almost innumerable complications affecting the general health.

Many cases of typhoid fever, appendicitis and other severe diseases are traceable to prolonged clogging of the bowels. Regarding the effects of constipation, C. E. Ayers, 6 Sabin St., Montpelier, Vt., says: "I was afflicted with constipation and biliousness for years, and at times became so bad I would become unconscious. I have been found in that condition many times. Physicians did not seem to be able to do me any good. I would become weak and for days at a time could do no work. Not long ago I got a box of Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets, and after using them found I had never tried anything that acted in such a mild and effective manner. I believe I have at last found the remedy that suits my case."

Thousands of people are sufferers from habitual constipation and while possibly realizing something of the danger of this condition, yet neglect too long to employ proper curative measures until serious illness often results. The advice of all physicians is, "keep your bowels clean," and it's good advice.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are sold by all druggists, at 25 cents a box containing 25 doses. If not found satisfactory, your money is returned.

Grave Danger if Blood is Disordered

Little Causes Develop Worst Kind of Trouble---No Danger if Blood is Fortified.

The Blood if Purified With S. S. S. Will Resist All Germ Infection.

There are so many reasons why everyone should look to the blood for health that the action of S. S. S. as a purifier and preserver is of paramount importance. We need so much food, so much oxygen, so much water, all of which in right proportion maintain nutrition. But the liver, kidneys, lungs, skin and bowels must all work in co-operative harmony to convert the intake and expel it after it has served its purpose of regenerating the tissues and cells of the body. And this process is repeated every few seconds throughout life. Now, as it happens with most people, the body does not expel all the waste and it remains a destructive influence to produce catarrh, rheumatism, boils, eruptions and a myriad of troubles recognized as the result of poisoned blood.

Remarkable testimonials have been written that prove beyond question there is no blood disease but what can be cured by S. S. S. And in all those cases that were treated with mercury, iodides, arsenic, copper and other minerals with no permanent effect, the most astonishing recoveries have been made by S. S. S.

There is not a blood taint of any nature that can remain in a system fortified by this most wonderful remedy, for it is absolutely pure and contains only those elements that the blood naturally assimilates, and which the tissues gratefully accept. It agrees with the most delicate stomach, even in those cases where the use of strong drugs has so weakened the digestive system that medicine can not be given. Get a $1.00 bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store and thus be assured of a complete cure of any eruptive blood disease. If your case is peculiar and you desire special advice write to the Swift Specific Co., Medical Dept., Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

WHEN YOU ARE NERVOUS

you have the first symptom of a run-down system, and nervous people too often conceal their aches and pains and suffer in silence, while, if neglected, this condition often foreruns more serious trouble.

If those so afflicted would stop taking medicine containing alcohol or drugs which menace the foundations of health, and just take the pure, strengthening nourishment in Scott's Emulsion, it would create new blood to pulsate through the organs, refresh their bodies and build up the whole nervous system. It is rich, sustaining nourishment, free from wines, alcohols or drugs. Shun substitutes.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Mrs. Sara Wrandall and Hetty attend the funeral of Challis Wrandall at the home of his parents. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, makes himself useful to Sara and becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Leslie Wrandall becomes impatient and jealous over the picture painting and declares he is going to propose to Hetty at the first opportunity.

He looked as though he expected nothing. He could only sit back and wonder why the deuce Sara meant by behaving like this.

They returned at seven. Dinner was unusually merry. Sara appeared to have recovered from her indisposition; there was color in her cheeks and life in her smile. He took it to be an omen of good fortune, and was immeasurably confident. The soft, cool breezes of the starlit night blew visions of impending happiness across his lively imagination; fanned his impatience with gentle ardor; filled him with suppressed sighs of contentment, and made him willing to forego the delight of conquest that he might live the longer in serene anticipation of its thrills.

Ten o'clock came. He arose and stretched himself in a sort of ecstasy. His heart was thumping loudly, his senses swam. Walking to the verandah rail he looked out across the moonlit sound, then down at the selected nook over against the garden wall—spot to be immortalized!—and actually shivered. In ten minutes' time, or even less, she would be down there in his arms! Exquisite meditations!

He turned to her with an engaging smile, in which she might have discerned a prophecy, and asked her to come with him for a stroll along the wall. And so he cast the die.

Hetty sent a swift, appealing look at Sara's purposely averted face. Leslie observed the act, but misinterpreted its meaning.

"Oh, it is quite warm," he said quickly. "You won't need a wrap," he added, and in spite of himself his voice trembled. Of course she wouldn't need a wrap!

"I have a few notes to write," said Sara, rising. She deliberately avoided the look in Hetty's eyes. "You will find me in the library."

She stood in the doorway and watched them descend to the terrace, a sphinx-like smile on her lips. Hetty seemed very tall and erect, as one going to meet a soldier's fate.

Then Sara entered the house and sat down to wait.

A long time after a door closed stealthily in a distant part of the house—the sun-parlor door, she knew by direction.

A few minutes later an upstairs door creaked on its hinges. Some one had come in from the mellow night, and some one had been left outside.

Many minutes passed. She sat there at her father's writing table and waited for the other to come in. At last quick, heavy footfalls sounded on the tiled floor outside and then came swiftly down the hall toward the small, remote room in which she sat. She looked up as he unceremoniously burst into the room.

He came across and stood over her, an expression of utter bewilderment in his eyes. There was a ghastly smile on his lips.

"D——n it all, Sara," he said shrilly, "she—she turned me down."

He seemed incapable of comprehension.

She was unmoved. Her eyes narrowed, but that was the only sign of emotion.

"I—I can't believe—" he began querulously. "Oh, what's the use? She won't have me. 'Gad! I'm trembling like a leaf. Where's Watson? Have him get me something to drink. Never mind! I'll get it from the sideboard. I'm—I'm d——d!"

He dropped heavily into a chair at the end of the table and looked at her with glazed eyes. As she stared back at him she had the curious feeling that he had shrunk perceptibly, that his clothes hung rather limply on him. His face seemed to have lost all of its smart symmetry; there was a looseness about the mouth and chin that had never been there before. The saucy, arrogant mustache sloped dejectedly.

"I fancy you must have gone about it very badly," she said, pursing her lips.

"Badly?" he gasped. "Why—why, good heavens, Sara, I actually pleaded with her," he went on, quite pathetically. "All but got down on my knees to her. D——n me, if I can understand myself doing it either. I must have lost my head completely. Begged like a love-sick schoolboy! And she kept on saying no—no—no! And I, like a blithering ass, kept on telling her I couldn't live without her, that I'd make her happy, that she didn't know what she was saying, and— But, good Lord, she kept on saying no! Nothing but no! Do—do you think she meant to say no? Could it have been hysteria? She said it so often, over and over again, that it might have been hysteria. I never thought of that. I—"

"No, Leslie, it wasn't hysteria, you may be sure of that," she said deliberately. "She meant it, old fellow."

He sagged deeper in the chair.

"I—I can't get it through my head," he muttered.

"As I said before, you did it badly," she said. "You took too much for granted. Isn't that true?"

"God knows I didn't expect her to refuse me," he exclaimed, glaring at her. "Would I have been such a fool as to ask her if I thought there was the remotest chance of being—" The very thought of the word caused it to stick in his throat. He swallowed hard.

"You really love her?" she demanded.

"Love her?" There was a sob in his voice. "I adore her, Sara. I can't live without her. And the worst of it is, I love her now more than I did before. Oh, it's appalling! It's horrible! What am I to do, Sara? What am I to do?"

"Be a man for a little while, that's all," she said coolly.

"Don't joke with me," he groaned.

"Go to bed, and when you see her in the morning tell her that you understand. Thank her for what she has done for you. Be—"

"Thank her?" he almost shouted.

"Yes; for destroying all that is detestable in you, Leslie—your self-conceit, your arrogance, your false notions concerning yourself—in a word, your egotism."

He blinked incredulously. "Do you know what you're saying?" he gasped.

She went on as if she hadn't heard him.

"Assure her that she is to feel no compunction for what she has done, that you are content to be her loyal, devoted friend to the end of your days."

"But, hang it, Sara, I love her!"

"Don't let her suspect that you are humiliated. On the contrary, give her to understand that you are cleansed and glorified."

"What utter tommy—"

"Wait! Believe me, it is your only chance. You will have to learn some time that you can't ride roughshod among angels. Think it over, old fellow. You have had a good lesson. Profit by it."

"You mean I'm to sit down and twirl my thumbs and let some other chap snap her up under my very nose? Well, I guess not!"

"Damn It All, Sara! She—She Turned Me Down!"

"Not necessarily. If you take it manfully she may discover a new interest in you. Don't breathe a word of love to her. Go on as if nothing had happened. Don't forget that I told you in the beginning not to take no for an answer."

He drooped once more, biting his lip. "I don't see how I can ever tell mother that she refused—"

"Why tell her?" she inquired, rising.

His eyes brightened. "By Jove, I shan't," he exclaimed.

"I am going up to the poor child now," she went on. "I dare say you have frightened her almost to death. Naturally she is in great distress. I shall try to convince her that her decision does not alter her position in this house. I depend on you to do your part, Leslie. Make it easy for her to stay on with me."

He mellowed to the verge of tears.

"I can't keep on coming out here after this, as I've been doing, Sara."

"Don't be silly! Of course you can. This will blow over."

"Blow over?" he almost gasped.

"I mean the first effects. Try being a martyr for a while, Leslie. It isn't a bad plan, I can assure you. It may interest you to know that Challis proposed to me three times before I accepted him, and yet I—I loved him from the beginning."

"By Jove!" he exclaimed, coming to his feet with a new light in his eyes. The hollows in his cheeks seemed to fill out perceptibly.

"Good night!"

"I say, Sara, dear, you'll—you'll help me a bit, won't you? I mean you'll talk it over with her and—"

"My sympathy is entirely with Miss Castleton," she said from the doorway. His jaw dropped.

He was still ruminating over the callousness of the world in respect to lovers when she mounted the stairs and tapped firmly on Hetty's door.

* * * * * * * *

Hetty Castleton was standing in the middle of her room when Sara entered. From her position it was evident that she had stopped short in her nervous, excited pacing of the floor. She was very pale, but there was a dogged, set expression about her mouth.

"Come in, dear," she said, in a manner that showed she had been expecting the visit. "Have you seen him?"

Sara closed the door, and then stood with her back against it, regarding her agitated friend with serious, compassionate eyes.

"Yes. He is terribly upset. It was a blow to him, Hetty."

"I am sorry for him, Sara. He was so dreadfully in earnest. But, thank God, it is over!" She threw back her head and breathed deeply. "That horrible, horrible nightmare is ended. I suppose it had to be. But the mockery of it—think of it, Sara!—the damnable mockery of it!"

"Poor Leslie!" sighed the other. "Poor old Leslie."

Hetty's eyes filled with tears. "Oh, I am sorry for him. He didn't deserve it. God in heaven, if he really knew everything! If he knew why I could not listen to him, why I almost screamed when he held my hands in his and begged—actually begged me to— Oh, it was ghastly, Sara!"

She covered her face with her hands, and swayed as if about to fall. Sara came quickly to her side. Putting an arm about the quivering shoulders, she led the girl to the broad window seat and threw open the blinds.

"Don't speak of it, dearest—don't think of that. Sit here quietly in the air and pull yourself together. Let me talk to you. Let me tell you how deeply distressed I am, not only on your account, but his."

They were silent for a long time, the girl lying still and almost breathless against the other's shoulders. She was still wearing the delicate blue dinner gown, but in her fingers was the exquisite pearl necklace Sara had given her for Christmas. She had taken it off and had forgotten to drop it in her jewel box.

"I suppose he will go up to the city early," she said monotonously.

"Leslie is a better loser than you think, my dear," said Sara, looking out over the tops of the cedars. "He will not run away."

Hetty looked up in alarm. "You mean he will persist in—in his attentions," she cried.

"Oh, no. I don't believe you will find him to be the bugbear you imagine. He can take defeat like a man. He is devoted to you, he is devoted to me. Your decision no doubt wrecks his fondest hopes in life, but it doesn't make a weakling of him."

"I don't quite understand—"

"He is sustained by the belief that he has paid you the highest honor a man can pay to a woman. There is no reason why he should turn his back on you, as a sulky boy might do. No, my dear, I think you may count on him as your best, most loyal friend from this night on. He has just said to me that his greatest pain lies in the fear that you may not be willing to accept him as a simple, honest, unpresuming friend since—"

"Oh, Sara, if he will only be that and nothing more!" cried the girl wonderingly.

Sara smiled confidently. "I fancy you haven't much to fear in that direction, my dear. It isn't in Leslie Wrandall's make-up to court a second repulse. He is all pride. The blow it suffered tonight can't be repeated—at least, not by the same person."

"I am so sorry it had to be Leslie," murmured Hetty.

"Be nice to him, Hetty. He deserves that much of you, to say the least. I should miss him if he found it impossible to come here on account of—"

"I wouldn't have that happen for the world," cried the girl in distress. "He is your dearest friend. Send me away, Sara, if you must. Don't let anything stand in the way of your friendship for Leslie. You depend on him for so much, dear. I can't bear the thought of—"

"Hush, dearest! You are first in my love. Better for me to lose all the others and still have you."

The girl looked at her in wonder for a long time. "Oh, I know you mean it, Sara, but—but how can it be true?"

"Put yourself in my place," was all that Sara said in reply, and her companion had no means of translating the sentence.

She could only remain mute and wondering, her eyes fixed on that other mystery, the cameo face in the moon that hung high above the somber forest.

"Poor Leslie," murmured Sara, a long time afterward, a dreamy note in her voice. "I can't put him out of my thoughts. He will never get over it. I have never seen one so stricken and yet so brave. He would have been more than a husband to you, Hetty. It is in him to be a slave to the woman he loves. I know him well, poor boy."

Hetty was silent, brooding. Sara resumed her thoughtful observations.

"Why should you let what happened months ago stand in the way of—"

She got no farther than that. With an exclamation of horror, the girl sprang away from her and glowered at her with dilated eyes.

"My God, Sara!" she whispered hoarsely. "Are you mad?"

The other sighed. "I suppose you must think it of me," she said dismally. "We are made differently, you and I. If I cared for a man, nothing in all this world could stand between me and him."

Hetty was still staring. "You don't mean to say you would have me marry Challis Wrandall's brother?" she said, in a sort of stupefaction.

Sara shook her head. "I mean this: you would be justified in permitting Leslie to glorify that which his brother desecrated; your womanhood, my dear."

"My God, Sara!" again fell in a hoarse whisper from the girl's lips.

"I simply voice my point of view," explained Sara calmly. "As I said before, we look at things differently."

"I can't believe you mean what you said," cried Hetty. "Why—why, if I loved him with all my heart, soul and body I could not even think of— Oh, I shudder to think of it!"

"I love you," continued Sara, fixing her mysterious eyes on those of the girl, "and yet you took from me something more than a brother. I love you, knowing everything, and I am paying in full the debt he owes to you. Leslie, knowing nothing, is no less your debtor. All this is paradoxical, I know, my dear, but we must remember that while other people may be indebted to us, we also owe something to ourselves. We ought to take pay from ourselves. Please do not conclude that I am urging or even advising you to look with favor upon Leslie Wrandall's honorable, sincere proposal of marriage. I am merely trying to convince you that you are entitled to all that any man can give you in this world of ours—we women all are, for that matter."

"I was sure that you couldn't ask me to marry him. I couldn't believe—"

"Forget what I have said, dearest, if it grieves you," cried Sara warmly. She arose and drew the girl close to her. "Kiss me, Hetty." Their lips met. The girl's eyes were closed, but Sara's were wide open and gleaming. "It is because I love you," she said softly, but she did not complete the sentence that burned in her brain. To herself she repeated: "It is because I love you that I would scourge you with Wrandalls!"

"You are very good to me, Sara," sobbed Hetty.

"You will be nice to Leslie?"

"Yes, yes! If he will only let me be his friend."

"He asks no more than that. Now, you must go to bed."

Suddenly, without warning, she held the girl tightly in her arms. Her breathing was quick, as of one moved by some sharp sensation of terror. When Hetty, in no little wonder, opened her eyes Sara's face was turned away, and she was looking over her shoulder as if cause for alarm had come from behind.

"What is it?" cried Hetty anxiously.

She saw the look of dread in her companion's eyes, even as it began to fade.

"I don't know," muttered Sara. "Something, I can't tell what, came over me. I thought some one was stealing up behind me. How silly of me."

"Ah," said Hetty, with an odd smile, "I can understand how you felt."

"Hetty, will you take me in with you tonight?" whispered Sara nervously. "Let me sleep with you. I can't explain it, but I am afraid to be alone tonight." The girl's answer was a glad smile of acquiescence. "Come with me, then, to my bedroom while I change. I have the queerest feeling that some one is in my room. I don't want to be alone. Are you afraid?"

Hetty held back, her face blanching.

"No, I am not afraid," she cried at once, and started toward the door.

"There is some on in this room," said Sara a few moments later, when they were in the big bedroom down the hall.

"I—I wonder," murmured Hetty.

And yet neither of them looked about in search for the intruder!

Far into the night Sara sat in the window of Hetty's dressing room, her chin sunk low in her hands, staring moodily into the now opaque night, her eyes somber and unblinking, her body as motionless as death itself. The cooling wind caressed her and whispered warnings into her unheeding ears, but she sat there unprotected against its chill, her nightdress damp with the mist that crept up with sinister stealth from the sea.

CHAPTER XI.

In the Shadow of the Mill.

The next day but one was overcast. On cloudy, bleak days Hetty Castleton always felt depressed.

Leslie was to return from the wilds on the following day. Early in the morning Booth had telephoned to inquire if she did not want to go for a long walk with him before luncheon. The portrait was finished, but he could not afford to miss the morning hour with her. He said as much to her in pressing his invitation.

"Tomorrow Leslie will be here and I sha'n't see as much of you as I'd like," he explained, rather wistfully. "Three is a crowd, you know. I've got so used to having you all to myself, it's hard to break off suddenly."

"I will be ready at eleven," she said, and was instantly surprised to find that her voice rang with new life, new interest. The grayness seemed to lift from the view that stretched beyond the window; she even looked for the sun in her eagerness.

It was then that she knew why the world had been bleaker than usual, even in its cloak of gray.

A little before eleven she set out briskly to intercept him at the gates. Unknown to her, Sara sat in her window, and viewed her departure with gloomy eyes. The world also was gray for her.

They came upon each other unexpectedly at a sharp turn in the avenue. Hetty colored with a sudden rush of confusion, and had all she could do to meet his eager, happy eyes as he stood over her and proclaimed his pleasure in jerky, awkward sentences. Then they walked on together, a strange shyness attending them. She experienced the faintness of breath that comes when the heart is filled with pleasant alarms. As for Booth, his blood sang. He thrilled with the joy of being near her, of the feel of her all about him, of the delicious feminine appeal that made her so wonderful to him. He wanted to crush her in his arms, to keep her there forever, to exert all of his brute physical strength so that she might never again be herself but a part of him.

They uttered commonplaces. The spell was on them. It would lift, but for the moment they were powerless to struggle against it. At length he saw the color fade from her cheeks; her eyes were able to meet his without the look in them that all men love. Then he seemed to get his feet on the ground again, and a strange, ineffably sweet sense of calm took possession of him.

"I must paint you all over again," he said, suddenly breaking in on one of her remarks. "Just as you are today—an outdoor girl, a glorious outdoor girl in—"

"In muddy boots," she laughed, drawing her skirt away to reveal a

She Made No Response.

shapely foot in an American walking shoe.

He smiled and gave voice to a new thought. "By Jove, how much better looking our American shoes are than the kind they wear in London!"

"Sara insists on American shoes, so long as I am with her. I don't think our boots are so villainous, do you?"

"Just the same, I'm going to paint you again, boots and all. You—"

"Oh, how tired you will become of me!"

"Try me!"

"Besides, you are to do Sara at once. She has consented to sit to you. She will be wonderful, Mr. Booth, oh, how wonderful!"

There was no mistaking the sincerity of this rapt opinion.

"Stunning," was his brief comment.

She was silent for a long time, so long indeed that he turned to look at her.

"A thoroughly decent, fair minded chap is Leslie Wrandall," he pronounced, for want of something better to say. "Still, I'm bound to say, I'm sorry he is coming home tomorrow."

The red crept into her cheeks again.

"I thought you were such pals," she said nervously.

"I expect to be his best man if he ever marries," said he, whacking a stone at the roadside with his walking stick. Then he looked up at her furtively and added, with a quizzical smile: "Unless something happens."

"What could happen?"

"He might marry the girl I'm in love with, and, in that case, I'd have to be excused."

"Where shall we walk to this morning?" she asked abruptly. He had drawn closer to her in the roadway.

"Is it too far to the old stone mill? That's where I first saw you, if you remember."

"Yes, let us go there," she said, but her heart sank. She knew what was coming. Perhaps it were best to have it over with; to put it away with the things that were to always be her lost treasures. It would mean the end of their companionship, the end of a love dream. She would have to lie to him: to tell him she did not love him.

Coming to the jog in the broad macadam, they were striking off into the narrow road that led to the quaint old mill, long since abandoned in the forest glade beyond, when their attention was drawn to a motor car, which was slowing down for the turn into Sara's domain. A cloud of dust swam in the air far behind the machine.

A bare-headed man on the seat beside the driver waved his hand to them, and two women in the tonneau bowed gravely. Both Hetty and Booth flushed uncomfortably, and hesitated in their progress up the forest road.

The man was Leslie Wrandall. His mother and sister were in the back seat of the touring car.

"Why—why, it was Leslie," cried Booth, looking over his shoulder at the rapidly receding car. "Shall we turn back, Miss Castleton?"

"No," she cried instantly, with something like impatience in her voice. "And spoil our walk?" she added in the next breath, adding a nervous little laugh.

"It seems rather—" he began dubiously.

"Oh, let us have our day," she cried sharply, and led the way into the by-road.

They came, in the course of a quarter of an hour, to the bridge over the mill race. Beyond, in the mossy shades, stood a dilapidated, centurion structure known as Rangely's mill, a landmark with a history that included incidents of the Revolutionary war, when eager patriots held secret meetings inside its walls and plotted under the very noses of Tory adherents to the crown.

Pausing for a few minutes on the bridge, they leaned on the rail and looked down into the clear, mirror-like water of the race. Their own eyes looked up at them; they smiled into their own faces. And a fleecy white cloud passed over the glittering stream and swept through their faces, off to the bank, and was gone forever.

Suddenly he looked up from the water and fixed his eyes on her face. He had seen her clear blue eyes fill with tears as he gazed into them from the rail above.

"Oh, my dear!" he cried. "What is it?"

She put her handkerchief to her eyes as she quickly turned away. In another instant she was smiling up at him, a soft, pleading little smile that went straight to his heart.

"Shall we start back?" she asked, a quaver in her voice.

"No," he exclaimed. "I've got to go on with it now, Hetty. I didn't intend to, but—come, let us go up and sit on that familiar old log in the shade of the mill. You must, dear!"

She suffered him to lead her up the steep bank beyond and through the rocks and rotten timbers to the great beam that protruded from the shattered foundations of the mill. The rickety old wheel, weather-beaten and sad, rose above them and threatened to topple over if they so much as touched its flimsy supports.

He did not release her hand after drawing her up beside him.

"You must know that I love you," he said simply.

She made no response. Her hand lay limp in his. She was staring straight before her.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Perfectly Justifiable.

A somewhat laggard and procrastinating student one Sunday evening went to his instructor for aid in one of his studies, asking him if he thought it was wrong to study on Sunday. He was somewhat surprised to receive the reply, "If the Master was justified in pulling the ass out of the ditch on the Sabbath, was not the ass justifiable in trying to get himself out?"

Prepared by the

WASHINGTON, D. C.

HOW TO USE CHEAPER CUTS OF MEAT.

When the housekeeper attempts to reduce her meat bill by using the less expensive cuts, she encounters two difficulties—toughness and lack of flavor. All muscle consists of tiny tube-like fibers bound together in bundles and groups of bundles by a membrane called connective tissue. Tenderness depends on the character of these fibers and the connective tissue, which are naturally most tender in the muscle of young animals or in those muscles of older animals which have not been extensively used. The flavor of meat depends partly on the fat, which is scattered all through the tissues composing the muscle, but mainly on the "extractives," so called because they can be dissolved out or "extracted" by soaking in cold water. The quality of the extractives and the resulting flavor of the meat vary with the condition of the animal and in different parts of its body, the higher priced cuts containing more extractives, or extractives of a more pleasing flavor. The extractives have little or no nutritive value in themselves, but they are of great importance in causing the secretion of digestive juices at the proper time, in the right amount, and of the right chemical composition. It is this quality which justifies the taking of soup at the beginning of a meal, and the giving of broths, meat extracts and similar preparations to invalids and weak persons. These foods contain little nutritive material, but they do aid in digestion of other foods.

The heat of cooking dissolves the connective tissue of tough meat and in a measure makes it more tender, but heat above the boiling point or even a little lower tends to change the texture of muscle fibers. Hence tough meat must be carefully cooked in low heat long applied in order to soften the connective tissue without unduly changing the fiber. Cooking, especially in water, presents a further danger, namely, the escape into the water of the nutritious material in the meat. In cases where the liquid in which the meat is cooked is to be used, as in soups and some stews, this is less important, or it may even be an advantage, but where the meat only is to be used the fact must always be taken into consideration. Not only is the amount of nutritive material in the meat lessened, but the extractives are lost and with them more or less of the flavor the meat originally possessed. To lessen the chance of loss, cooks frequently sear the exterior of the meat either in hot fat or in boiling water before beginning long cooking, or tough meat may be pounded or chopped to break down the tissues to a certain extent, and thus permit shorter cooking.

Following are methods of cooking suet meats recommended in Farmer's Bulletin 391, United States department of agriculture:

Meat may be cooked in water in a number of ways without allowing the water to boil violently. With the ordinary kitchen range this is accomplished by cooking on the cooler part of the stove. Experience with a gas stove, particularly if it has a small burner known as a "simmerer," usually enables the cook to maintain temperatures which are high enough to sterilize the meat and make it tender without hardening the fibers. The double boiler would seem to be a neglected utensil for this purpose. Its contents can easily be kept up to a temperature of 200 degrees, Fahrenheit, and nothing will burn. Another method is by means of the fireless cooker, in which a high temperature can be maintained for a long time without putting the foods over the fire again.

Braised beef, pot roast and beef a la mode are the names given to dishes made from the less tender cuts of meat. They vary little either in composition or method of preparation. In all cases the meat is browned on the outside to increase the flavor and then cooked in a small amount of water in a closely covered kettle or other receptacle until tender. The flavor of the dish is secured by browning the meat and by the addition of the seasoning vegetables. Many recipes suggest that the vegetables be removed before serving and the liquid be thickened. As the vegetables are usually extremely well-seasoned by means of the browned fat and the extracts of the meat, it seems unfortunate not to serve them.

Of course, the kind, quality, and shape of the meat all play their part in the matter. Extra time is needed for meats with a good deal of sinew and tough fibers such as the tough steaks, shank cuts, etc.; and naturally a fillet of beef, or a steak from a prime cut, will take less time than a thick piece from the shin. Such dishes require more time and perhaps more skill in their preparation and may involve more expense for fuel than the more costly cuts, which like chops or tender steaks may be quickly cooked, but to the epicure, as well as to the average man, they are palatable when rightly prepared.

Hungarian goulash, a dish which has come to be a favorite in the United States, is made as follows:

Two pounds top round of beef, a little flour, two ounces salt pork, two cups tomatoes, one stalk celery, one onion, two bay leaves, six whole cloves, six peppercorns, one blade mace.

Cut the beef into two-inch pieces and sprinkle with flour; fry the salt pork until light brown; add the beef and cook slowly for about 35 minutes, stirring occasionally. Cover with water and simmer about two hours; season with salt and pepper or paprika.

From the vegetables and spices a sauce is made as follows: Cook in sufficient water to cover for 20 minutes; then rub through a sieve, and add to some of the stock in which the meat was cooked. Thicken with flour, using two tablespoonfuls (moistened with cold water) to each cup of liquid, and season with salt and paprika.

Serve the meat on a platter with the sauce poured over it. Potatoes, carrots, and green peppers cooked until tender, and cut into small pieces or narrow strips, are usually sprinkled over the dish when served, and noodles may be arranged in a border upon the platter.

Still another method of accomplishing prolonged cooking at low heat is by means of a closely covered baking dish. Earthenware dishes of this kind suitable for serving foods as well as for cooking are known as casseroles. For cooking purposes a baking dish covered with a plate or a bean jar covered with a saucer may be substituted. The Aladdin oven has long been popular for the purpose of preserving temperatures which are near the boiling point and yet do not reach it. It is a well insulated oven which may be heated either by a kerosene lamp or a gas jet.

To make casserole or Italian hash boil one-fourth pound of macaroni, drain and put into a buttered casserole, add a little butter and grated cheese. Push the macaroni to the sides of the dish and fill the center with chopped meat seasoned to suit the taste of the family. A little sausage gives a good flavor to this dish. Place in the oven until hot throughout and serve.

A very good modification of this is made by using raw instead of cooked meat. For this one-half pound of round steak is sufficient for a family of six. This should be cut into small pieces, browned and cooked until tender in water with the onions and other seasonings. An hour before the cooking is complete, add one-half can of tomatoes. Before serving, the meat may be mixed with the sauce, and the whole is poured over the macaroni.

The connective tissue of meat dissolves in vinegar; hence this acid is often used in preparing tough meat. To prepare sour beef, take a piece of beef from the rump or the lower round, cover with vinegar or with a half-and-half mixture of vinegar and water, add sliced onion, bay leaves, and a few mixed whole spices and salt. Allow to stand a week in winter or three or four days in summer; turn once a day and keep covered. When ready to cook, brown the meat in fat, using an enameled iron pan, strain the liquid over it and cook until tender; thicken the gravy with flour or ginger snaps (which may be broken up first), strain it, and pour over the sliced meat. Some cooks add cream.

Sour beefsteak is made by cooking round steak in water in which there is a little vinegar, or if the time is sufficient, it may be soaked for a few hours in vinegar and water and then cooked in a casserole or in some similar way.

While pounding meat serves to make it more tender by breaking down the tissues, it has the disadvantage of being likely to drive out the juices and with them the flavor. A way to escape this difficulty is to pound flour into the meat, thus catching and retaining the juice in the flour. To make farmer stew, pound flour into both sides of a round steak, using as much as the meat will take up. This may be done with a meat pounder or with the edge of a heavy plate. Fry in drippings, butter, or other fat in a Scotch bowl, or if more convenient in an ordinary iron kettle or a frying pan; then add water enough to cover it. Cover the dish very tightly so that the steam can not escape and allow the meat to simmer for two hours or until it is tender. One advantage of this dish is that ordinarily it is ready to serve when the meat is done as the gravy is already thickened. However, if a large amount of fat is used in the frying, the gravy may not be thick enough and must be blended with flour.

Cure for Chapped Hands.

To one part carbolic acid add two parts pure glycerin, diluting this mixture with its bulk in weak cider-vinegar. Rub on the hands whenever you wash them and while still wet. Rose-water, if preferred, may be used for diluting this mixture, instead of vinegar. Be sure to tell your druggist for what purpose you want the carbolic, and get the right strength.

Bread Stuffing for Fish.

Soak about half a pound of stale bread in water. When soft press out the water, add a very little chopped suet, pepper and salt, a large tablespoonful of onion minced and fried, and if liked a little minced parsley. Cook slightly and after removing from the fire add a beaten egg.

To Absorb Odors.

Keep a dish of charcoal on one of the upper shelves of the refrigerator, changing it every few days. It is an excellent absorber of odors.

The Fingerless Kind.

Lillian Russell, during a recent visit to Atlantic City, was amazed to see the number of slashed skirts that still prevailed on the Boardwalk.

"They must be last spring's left-overs," she said.

Just then a young girl in a skirt outrageously slashed at back and front, asked her companion, in passing:

"How do you like my new dress? Fits like a glove, doesn't it?"

"Fits like a mitt, she'd better say," murmured Miss Russell, with a smile.

HER EXPERIENCE GAINED ON TRIP

Found That Ladies in State Agreed With Her on One Important Question.

Mangham, La.—Mrs. Liza Barber, of this town, who has returned from a trip in West and Middle Tennessee, has the following to say: "I have been on a trip in Middle and West Tennessee where I found many ladies using Cardui, the woman's tonic. While traveling I took great pleasure in telling what it had done for me—I not only praised Cardui—but advised poor suffering women to take it. I know that Cardui cured me and I believe it will do the same for other women.

Sometime ago, I could hardly stand on my feet, and I had given up ever having good health. After using two bottles of Cardui I could tell it was helping me, and I continued taking it for awhile. I soon felt as well as I ever did, and could do all of my work.

I shall always praise this great medicine to every suffering woman. I think there is no other half so good."

Mrs. Barber would have found weak, ailing women taking Cardui almost anywhere she could have gone, because Cardui is recognized as the standard woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women back to health and strength in the past 50 years.

Why shouldn't it help you?—Adv.

Old Acquaintance.

A resourceful girl, having danced a pink party frock to ribbons, took what was left of it and made a wonderful lamp shade. The next evening she was entertaining a caller in the soft light and she said to him quite casually: "How do you like my new lamp shade?"

William regarded it for a moment critically, then he said: "The last time I saw that shade I danced with it."

My hair came out gradually and it was dry and lifeless. Dandruff fell on my coat collar till I was ashamed of it. My head had been that way all summer, itching and burning till I couldn't sleep in any peace.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

Dear Readers:—Our Home Department is not doing as well as I want it to and I cannot understand why it isn't. We ought to have several letters each week instead of only two or three. Perhaps you do not yet understand the pupose of the Home Department, so I'm going to try to explain why, what and for whom it is. The purpose of this department is to give every reader of the Union-Banner a chance to express their opinion on any subject, and it was given to us by the Editor that those who do not care for politics may have something else to read and is not limited to women, but any man, boy, or girl is welcome, and we will be glad to publish their letters telling of the best ways to plan gardens or what to feed cows and hogs to get the best results, or any other subject that will be helpful to others. Also any suggestion that you think would improve the department will be appreciated. And letters from school teachers giving their best methods of teaching would be interesting, and might help some mother with her school of little ones, or perhaps solve a problem for a fellow teacher. We cannot make this department a success without your help and I'm going to ask everyone who reads this to write us a letter. Let's see how many good things we can have in our paper next week. I noticed in a recent issue of the Union-Banner the announcement of a Chilton County Improvement Association to be held at the home of a lady in Clanton. I'm sure this will prove a great help to our county, so how about making our department a kind of county improvement association in which we can all take part, though we cannot meet, and see if we can't help our county, community and ourselves at the same time. If there is anything you wish to know about this department I will gladly answer your questions. So let us hear from you.—Editor.

Editor Home Department:—I am interested in the Home Department of our paper and feel that it may be productive of much good. So come on mothers and give us some of your experiences, it might help us all. Here are a few hints which I wish to submit, hoping they will help to make home or homes more pleasant for I feel that small things of this nature amount to so much at last; above all cultivate a kindly feeling toward other members of the household. A soft voice with a kindly and destinct tone is a power of much good. In dealing with the little ones, be gentle, and beyond everything else don't tease or annoy the little tots, it spoils them and makes them hate you. Mothers to their pain often find children a little obstinate in cases of obedience. Very often we mothers might look to ourselves for the fault. A command to do a thing is naturally a bit unpleasant to human nature. The child itself feels that it is not exactly an animal to be driven, and while I'm not denying the right of parents to enforce obedience, I do claim that there may be more successful ways of securing it than commanding. Obedience in the true sense of the term is a willing response on the part of the child. Parents have long ago learned of the suggestiveness found in children—small ones especially. "Mama needs some stove wood." "The little chickens are hungry;" are suggestions that with the normal child will hardly fail to bring about the desired result. This suggestive nature of children can be directed beautifully toward the desired end, virtue, obedience. This method I'm sure will be found to have a more wholesome effect on child nature than that of a stern command. In the case of older children this suggestive nature may not be so much in evidence, thus complicating the task of securing obedience in them. However by this age the habit of obedience should be so fixed as to give no trouble. Thus the importance of dealing wisely with young minds. However, there are I believe measures applicable more or less to older rebellions; some of which I'll mention in a later writing if anyone is interested.

Another thing which often contributes to a happy and contented home is pleasant employment for every member of the household, especially children. Nothing is more threatening to character than a habit of idleness. Next to idleness must be work here and there without system in performing the chores. A splendid way is to organize a system by which certain duties are performed by certain ones, etc.

Let the girls compete alternately in cleaning up the kitchen. So many details can be brought in, are dishes washed and dried thoroughly? Dingy about the nooks? Glassware cloudy? Arranged systematically in cupboard? etc. Older ones should praise work well done, thereby offering stimulant for effort. Besides the regular duties the girls might be provided with something like simple needle work, rug making or crocheting. Never allow a task to go unfinished—it might result in a bad habit. Try in every way to instill in the child's mind a real love for work and seek to have him find a real joy in a task well done. Mrs. E. H. T.

I'm sure some one will be interested and I will be glad to have another letter on the subject.—Editor.

Editor The Union-Banner:—Since you have been so good as to give us a department all our own, I think we should avail ourselves of the use of it; so here I come. Now in the first place let me say don't ever let your children worry other people. Keep them at home when not at school, for when they are at a neighbor's house you never know what they are doing unless you can go with them, for how can the mother know they are not troubling some good neighbor who has enough to do without caring for your children. I like for my children to have company and am perfectly willing to let them go once in a while, but I certainly will not allow them to be off some where all the time bothering my neighbors. Perhaps you will think me harsh, but I love children, but I was once worried with other peoples children, this way I thought I would worn others about it. I agree with Mrs. J. S. I think if farmers would provide more home attractions the children, both boys and girls would stay on the farm and not go to the city to look for amusement.

As my letter is getting long I will go and come again. Wishing the Home Department and its many readers much success. A Mother.

Come again and bring somebody with you.—Editor.

Electric Storm Strikes Thorsby

During the terriffic electric storm that passed over Thorsby about 6:30 p.m. Friday evening, June 12th, the residenece of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Norton was struck by lightening, and in spite of vigorous work by a volunteer "water brigade" and willing hands to take out whatever could be laid hold of quickly, the beautiful home was soon a prey to the flames. Not only was the house totally destroyed, but flowers, shrubs, vines and trees gathered from far and near and grown with much care, were included in the devastation. Mr. and Mrs. Norton lost about all their clothing, except what they had on, besides jewelry and toilet articles, in fact nearly everything on the upper floor, as they were fighting the fire until driven out by the flames.

Mr. and Mrs. Norton and their guest, Miss Elizabeth Hoopes, Matron of Thorsby Institute, were seated at the supper table when the bolt struck the chimney only a few feet from them. Judging by the destruction it caused in an instant, it was no feeble charge, and it is little less than a miracle that they were not all killed or injured.

Mr. and Mrs. Norton, and Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Schive, who live directly across the street from the Norton home, wish to express their gratitude for the splendid service rendered by neighbors and friends in saving furniture at the Norton house and the house itself at the Schive home.

During the same storm a barn at the home of widow Collins at the Cross Roads School house was struck by lightening and consumed by the fire which followed, together with a horse, a cow and a pig.

On Sunday afternoon during another electric storm, lightening struck the new store of J. R. Parnell and Son, entering the building by way of the Long Distance Telephone wires. The fire was put out before it had gained much headway.

HIGHWAY MEET BRINGS 5,000 VISITORS HERE

Citizens Extended Royal Welcome to Visitors; Governor O'Neal Chief Speaker

This city was in gala attire Friday to celebrate the Good Roads rally on behalf of the Birmingham-Montgomery Highway. Five thousand people from all of the counties, which the proposed highway will traverse were here to enjoy the festivities. They began arriving early in buggies, wagons, automobiles and by train and when the Montgomery crowd arrived the streets were thronged, the city presenting a holiday aspect.

Sixty automobiles carrying no less than 300 people came from Montgomery. The Birmingham delegation was small, less than a dozen automobiles coming from that city.

The visitors were met on the main street of Clanton by prominent citizens and escorted to the hotels to refresh themselves. The whole population of Clanton seemed anxious to do honor to the guests and wishes were anticipated and filled before spoken. The street was decorated with banners and a Montgomery band discoursed music. The people of Clanton made everyone feel welcome and their interest in the proposed highway was evident at all times.

At 11 o'clock the entire population of Clanton and all the visitors met in a grove near the Masonic Hall where seats had been arranged about the speaker's stand. The crowd numbered at least 5,000 people.

State Engineer Keller presided at the meeting and in his opening remarks he stated the purpose of the meeting and complimented the people of Clanton for their progressiveness and patriotism.

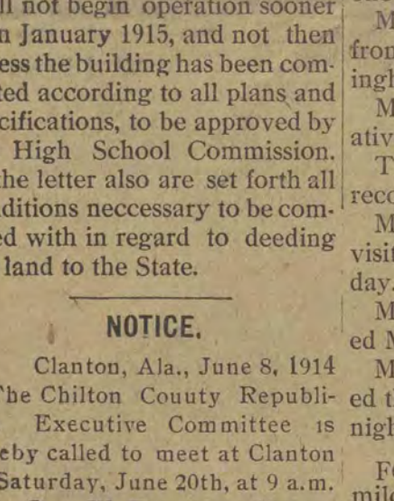
Dr. E. A. Matthews, mayor of Clanton, welcomed the visitors and tendered them the keys of the city. He assured the visitors of Clanton's support of any proposition to secure better roads and especially for a Birmingham-Montgomery highway.

Mayor Matthews was followed by Judge E. B. Deason. Hugh McGeeger, of the revenue board of Jefferson County took the place of Dr. Lovelady, chairman of that board, who was unable to be present. R. E. Bowden, chairman of the revenue board of Shelby county sent a letter expressing regret that he was not present which Mr. Keller read.

The trip to Clanton was most enjoyable; the roads, with few exceptions, were good, and there was little dust. The roads of Autauga county were the only really bad roads encountered, and they brought forth much criticism. Immediately after the speaking the great barbecue which the people of Clanton had prepared, was served. It was a real old-fashioned barbecue, and there was enough of a great variety to satisfy the most epicurean appetite.

Governor O'Neal in his opening remarks declared every citizen of Alabama who wanted the state to progress in the future had been converted to good roads.

"These meetings create the public opinion and sentiment necessary to every great reform," he said. "We have now created the sentiment and the hour for action has arrived. It will not do to advocate good roads if we are not willing to spend money to obtain them. There is only one way to get good roads and the Birmingham - Montgomery highway, and that is for the counties through which the road is to pass to make contributions. It can't be done by sentiment or by appeals to congress."



The governor told how the contributions might be obtained by using surplus taxes or by bond issue, under which system all the wealth of the whole country would be taxed.

He explained his formation of the state highway commission, and said that during the past year the state had spent $183,000 for good roads and the counties not less than $500,000.

"More money has been expended for good roads in Alabama since the formation of the highway commission than had been spent since the indians were driven from these forests," he said.

AUTO OWNERS MUST PAY UP

THOSE WHO FAIL TO PAY THE LICENSE WILL BE PROSECUTED.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Citations to automobile owners who have failed to pay their license taxes for the year 1914 have been issued by the State Motor Vehicle Department and the licenses are being rapidly paid, according to a statement of Thomas Bradford, chief clerk of the department.

During the last few days the owners have been paying up promptly in order to escape crimnal prosecution. Those who fail to pay up within the next few days will be vigorously prosecuted. Governor O'Neal recently instructed the solicitors of the various judicial circuits to prosecute those who have failed to pay their license.

Road System Approved.

Governor O'Neal's statement at Clanton that he will suggest to the next Legislature that the funds now expended for State-wide road work be spent in construction of trunk highways, has met with a favorable reception among good roads officials. Under the plan of the governor, the State will spend the money that has been appropriated for State-aid roads for the construction of a system of trunk highways that will connect the leading cities of the State.

By the new system it is believed that within a few years the leading cities of the State will be connected by modern highways which will be constructed through the aid and cooperation of the State. The connecting roads and lateral roads will follow the construction of the trunk highways.

Last summer W. S. Keller, State highway engineer, made a tour of the State in an automobile for the purpose of mapping out a system for State trunk highways. This system will be presented to the next Legislature for approval. This summer Mr. Keller may make another trip over the State, going over roads different from those traversed last year.

Try J. G. Oakley in August.

James G. Oakley's next trial on a charge of embezzlement probably will be held at Columbiana next August, according to J. T. Leeper, of Columbiana, attorney for Oakley, who was in Montgomery.

"Mr. Oakley's case is set for the August term of the Shelby Circuit Court, but I do not know what action the solicitor will take in the matter.

"Mr. Oakley was indicted three times, but all the indictments covered practically the same charge. At his trial in Columbiana several months ago Mr. Oakley was acquitted and the remaining indictments cover practically the same charge as the one upon which he was tried," said Mr. Leeper.

It is probable that the attorneys for Oakley will plead "former jeopardy" at the next trial although Mr. Leeper declined to discuss his plans.

Cain Will Qualify July First.

McDuff Cain, recently appointed United States marshal for the Middle district of Alabama, has received his commission and will qualify for office about July 1, he announced at the Federal building.

The fiscal year of the government closes June 30 and Mr. Cain will leave the office in charge of the present marshal, Ben W. Walker, until the year's work has been wound up.

Mr. Cain was appointed several days ago, but would not announce when he would qualify for office until his commission arrived.

He will succeed Mr. Walker, a Republican, who has held the office several years.

Combine to Fight Cotton Destroyer.

Farm demonstration agents of Alabama are concentrating their efforts toward fighting the boll weevil and a determined battle against the pest is being waged in Southwest Alabama, according to reports received at the office of Capt. R. F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture.

Capt. J. C. Cheney, chief clerk of the department, has gone to Southwest Alabama to make a personal inspection of the damages resulting from the coming of the boll weevil.

Freight Rates Taken Up June 22.

Members of the State Railroad Commission will hold a special session June 22 to take up the establishment of equitable freight rates on four railroads. These railroads are the Louisville and Nashville, the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, the Central of Georgia and the Western Railway of Alabama. These roads were cited to appear before the commission last month to shaw cause why equitable rates should not be established on their lines. A decision in some of the cases is looked for.

Technical Shortage of $1,406.

H. M. Craig, Superintendant of Education of Lawrence County, is short in his accounts to the extent of $1,406, according to a report filed with Governor O'Neal by Charles L. Townes, Examiner of Public Accounts. For the purpose of settling the matter Dave Almon, of Morgan County, called on the Governor, but no action was taken.

The superintendant is charged with paying his teachers for one year out of the money allotted for another year and such a payment is illegal

State Borrows $1,000,000.

Through the aid of Louis B. Farley, president of the New Farley National Bank of Montgomery, the state of Alabama has borrowed $1,000,000 at the lowest rate of interest ever paid for a temporary loan in the history of the state. This rate is 4¾ per cent and the loan was made with a single New York bank. By arranging the loan it is likely that there will be no extra session of the Alabama legislature.

Announcement of the arrangement of the loan was made by the governor after he had conferred with Mr. Farley. Both Mr. Farley and the governor issued statements in which they declared that the state has been enabled to borrow money at the lowest rate of interest ever paid for temporary loans in the history of the state.

All warrants involved in the transaction will be made payable through the New Farley bank of Montgomery. The loan was arranged by Mr. Farley, who recently went to New York.

"I found in the East that Alabama's credit is good and that the state can get more than $1,000,000, if it needs it," said Mr. Farley. "I had no difficulty in consummating such an arrangement as was desired by the governor when I placed the matter before the bank in question."

"It gives me great pleasure," said the governor, "to assure those who seem skeptical as to the state's ability to meet its obligations that every obligation of the state will be met in the future as they have been promptly paid in the past."

Pardon Granted "Pick" Roden.

Governor O'Neal granted a full pardon to "Pick" Roden of Marshall county, who has been convicted several times on a charge of violating the prohibition law and who was recently paroled by the governor. Roden was serving a three-year sentence on a charge of attempting to bribe an official in a liquor law violation case.

When Roden appeared before the State Board of Pardons he presented a petition signed by more than 1,000 citizens of Marshall county. In this petition the request was made that Roden be granted a full pardon for the alleged offenses committed by him in the past.

According to those who signed the petition, Roden has been persecuted in many instances. The claim was made that Roden has already been punished sufficiently and that he should be given a full and complete pardon with a restoration of his civil rights.

Others who received executive clemencyency were Charles Riley, Mobile county; M. S. Sharp, Bullock county; Will Kirkwood, Winston county, and W. M. McCutcheon, Morgan county. Riley was serving three years on a charge of grand larceny. Sharp was serving two years on a bigamy charge; Kirkwood was serving four years on a manslaughter charge.

Spicer Verdict Found Erroneous.

Because a mass of irrelevant testimony was admitted at the trial, the supreme court granted a new trial to Sam Spicer, a prominent Covington county planter, who was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment last year for the murder of his wife. In reversing and remanding the judgment of the lower court, Associate Justice Mayfield delivered a voluminous opinion declaring the trial court allowed too much latitude to the state in proving every detail connected with Spicer's procuring of insurance on his wife's life and collecting same and in proving Spicer's relations with other women and in admitting many other details erroneously.

Pension Examiners For Wilcox Named

Dr. R. H. Kilpatrick and N. S. Jones, of Camden, were appointed as members of the Board of Pension Examiners of Wilcox county. The appointments were made by Governor O'Neal.

J. J. Moore, former superintendent of schools at Cullman, was appointed president of the First District Agricultural school at Jackson. He succeeds R. L. Reaves, who was not an applicant for re-appointment. Professor Moore will, it was stated, nominate his faculty at an early date and it will be put before the board of trustees for approval. Professor Moore's salary was fixed at $1,500 a year. He was selected as president by the state agricultural school board.

Julian first visited Tuscaloosa and from the city went to Lee county. From Lee county Mr. Julian went to Southeast Alabama. Mr. Julian will look over the tracks of the railroad companies, the depots and terminals and will hear the complaints of citizens concerning the service rendered by the various roads.

ADLAI STEVENSON DIES IN CHICAGO

FORMER VICE PRESIDENT SUCCUMBS AFTER ILLNESS OF SEVERAL MONTHS.

HAD LONG PUBLIC CAREER

Was Member of Forty-fourth and Forty-Sixth Congresses—Defeated for Gov. of Illinois by Deneen.

Chicago. — Adlai E. Stevenson, vice president of the United States through the second Cleveland administration, died at a hospital here after an illness of several months. His three children were at his bedside.

His remains were laid to rest in Bloomington, his old home. Vice President Marshall and other notable men attended the funeral.

Adlai Ewing Stevenson, once vice president of the United States, had a long and honorable public career. He was vice president, 1893 to 1897, under President Cleveland. In 1900 he was again nominated by the Democratic party for vice president and ran with William J. Bryan, the party's candidate for president, but was defeated. He served as member of the Forty-fourth and Forty-sixth Congresses, and from 1885 to 1889 he was first assistant postmaster general under President Cleveland.

His last appearance as a candidate for public office was in 1908 when he was nominated for governor of Illinois by the Democratic party and was defeated by Charles Deneen, Republican.

Mr. Stevenson was born in Christian county, Kentucky, October 23, 1835, of Scotch-Irish parents. In 1852 his parents moved to Bloomington, Ill. He attended the public schools and the University of Illinois.

In 1856 he graduated from Canter college, Danville, Ky. There he was a classmate of Senator Joseph Blackburn and other Kentucky youths who later became prominent in public life. He signalized the close of his college career by marrying Miss Letitia Green, daughter of Dr. Lewis W. Green, president of the college.

Stevenson returned to Bloomington, where he read law and was admitted to the bar in 1858. Stevenson's political career dated from 1864, when he was a presidential elector on the Democratic ballot. He made a canvass of Illinois for the McClellan ticket and won a reputation as a political speaker.

In 1874 he was nominated for Congress by the greenback and antimonopolist parties in the Thirteenth Illinois district against Gen. John McNulta, Republican.

The Democrats considered the case hopeless and did not even hold a convention.

The campaign was exciting and Stevenson was elected by a majority of 1232 votes.

In 1876 he was re-elected to Congress from the same district on the greenback ticket.

In 1884 Stevenson led the Illinois delegation to the Democratic National Convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for president. In 1897 he was appointed a member of a commission which visited Europe in an effort to secure international bimetallism.

WILL COMMAND ATLANTIC FLEET

Navy Department Recognizes Merit of Admiral Fletcher.

Washington. — Command of the Great Atlantic fleet, goal of every American naval officer's ambition, is to be the reward of Rear Admiral Frank F. Fletcher for his work in Mexican waters.

Secretary Daniels announced that he will recommend Admiral Fletcher for commander-in-chief of the fleet to succeed Rear Admiral Badger when the latter completes his tour of service within the next five weeks. Several of the navy's high officials outrank him, but the secretary holds that conspicuously masterly conduct of Admiral Fletcher at Vera Cruz entitles him to special recognition. Moreover, if Congress passes the pending bill creating the rank of vice admiral, Fletcher will be among the first to be advanced to that grade.

"General" Kenny's Army Arrested.

Grafton, W. Va — The vanguard of "General" Kelly's army of the unemployed, on its way from San Francisco to Washington, was arrested here by Baltimore & Ohio railroad detectives on charges of trespassing. The 50 men will be put to work on the county roads. Kelly said the main body of his "army," numbering 150, had not reached here.

Explosion Kills Five and Injures Ten.

Columbus, O. — Five men, four of them foreigners, are dead and 10 are in hospitals probably fatally injured as the result of a gas explosion here in a trench in which a gang of laborers were laying a main. Five other men painfully burned will recover, according to physicians. The cause of the accident has not been fully determined, but it is believed a cap on a joint of gas pipe was blown off and that th eescaping gas was ignited by a cigarette.

The building of a large plant for the manufacture of fertilizer from basic slag is announced by the Tennessee Company of Birmingham. This means the utilization of another furnace waste—another link in the stretching chain of home consumption of natural resources.

"The greatest measure ever passed by Congress." This is what L. N. Duncan, head of the extension work at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, says of the Smith-Lever bill, which should eventually result in the expenditure of more than $300,000 a year by the State and Federal governments for agricultural extension work among the farmers of Alabama.

According to the record of the harbormaster at Mobile, the tonnage of vessels for May was the greatest in the history of the port; and shows an increase of 51,000 tons over May, 1913. Last year during May, 47 foreign-bound steamships departed. Their total tonnage was 54,478; and additionally, there were in port during the month 12 coastwise steamships of 16,425 tons aggregate.

The State board of pharmaceutical examiners held their annual meeting in Anniston on June 15, at which time several applicants for license appeared before the board following the meeting of the State convention of the Alabama Pharmaceutical Association, convened for a two days' session on June 17, with about 200 delegates in attendance. The program for the entertainment was unusually varied, including a barbecue at the lake, Anniston's playground; baseball in the afternoon, bowling, dancing and boating, an da smoker.

A general improvement in crop conditions, occasioned by showers over the State, was noted in Alabama during the week just passed. The reports show that good, seasonable rains fell in nearly every section and brought out the crop considerably, doing much to overcome the drouth that deteriorated the cotton crop during May. Reports from unbroken drouths come from only a very few sections. In nearly all of these cases the principal damage by lack of rain was done the corn crop and vegetables and fruits, cotton being only slightly affected. Advantage has been taken of the dry spells by the farmers to hoe and chop their cotton and the fields are all reported clean. Deep and regular plowing has also done much toward coping with the dry conditions. The condition of the crop generally is about the same as reported a week ago.

Cool Gowns for Summer Strollers

THE Camera Man, armed with his merciless instrument and his alert, discriminating eyes, we have always with us. And now the Moving Picture Man is "taking" unawares, everything within his reach. Both are as insistant as the Jersey mosquito, and many a wrathful victim considers himself stung by all of them.

But the Camera Man and the Movie Man are destined to do us much good. We are about to see ourselves as others see us—and when we least expect it.

On the Board Walk (which may stand for any fashionable dress parade) the Camera Man has a chance to make comparisons and to look for standards by which to make comparisons. In the picture shown here he has succeeded in catching the photograph of two wonderfully well-clad women whose charming costumes are standards of excellence, that not many others measure up to. They demonstrate that modes of the season which have been much criticized and are unsatisfactory to the majority of the people, may be developed attractively, and more than attractively.

The costume at the left is of plain and figured taffeta. The skirt is of the plain fabric, bound with plain silk in the color of the flower in the figured taffeta. It is a straight skirt wide enough at the bottom to allow a free step. The shaped tunic is rounded at the front. There is a girdle about the small coat in the plain taffeta in the colors used in the skirt and in the binding.

There is an underbodice of the sheerest materials, open at the throat and finished with deep folds of white chiffon. The skirted bodice, or coat, whichever one considers it, is finished with a turned-back collar patterned after the Chinese model and opening below the bust. The sleeves are wide and full, with deep turned-back cuffs, and are three-quarters length.

For summertime this dress embodies about all the good points that are to be considered. First, it is good looking, smart in fabric and cut, cool and delightfully refined in design.

The other dress has a plain skirt, with some drapery arranged in the seams. There is a cloth coat finished with a draped collar in Roman striped taffeta. The model follows the Russian blouse inspiration, with skirt cut longer at the right than at the left side.

This is a separate coat and practical for other wear. The Roman stripe decoration and the draped collar have been especially well handled.

Mourning Millinery in Late Designs

MOURNING millinery in new designs, for spring and summer wear, has no strikingly new features to offer—and does not need any. The smaller turban and toque shapes, which are familiar in other kinds of millinery, have afforded the best of foundations for specialists who make mourning hats.

The persistent draping of veils at the back and the use of a portion of the veil as a drape for the body of the hat, are noticeable in all the best displays. And the use of net bordered with crape is a concession to comfort which has also beauty to commend it. On the round sailor shapes, with brims one sees occasionally square veils of net bordered with crape or of chiffon, finished with woven-in border, that are placed to fall over the face and are thrown back over the hat.

Two very good examples of unpretentious but elegant hats of crape are shown in the illustration that heads this article. The toque, in all black crape, has a coronet made of folds laid about it in diagonal lines. The crown is covered with the plain crape.

The long net veil is held cornerwise and pinned at one corner of the toque at the right side toward the back. It is laid in folds without any attempt at regularity, and pinned down to the hat with pins having dull black heads. This brings the broad part of the veil below the shoulders and gives an effect of length which is achieved without weight.

This design for first mourning may be duplicated in white crape for summer wear. But with the black net bordered with crape used as a substitute for the all-crape veil, and the drapery all falling from the back, the design is not heavy or burdensome.

A round hat faced with white crape, with drape and trimming of black crape, is worn without a veil. It is very attractive, depending for its charm upon good lines and workmanship of exquisite neatness. The white next the face and hair will be found more becoming to the majority of wearers than all black.

CHOPPING MEAT.

Chopping meat to make it tender permits quick and economical cooking. In broiling chopped meat it is well to remember that there is no reason why it should not be cooked like the best and most expensive tenderloin. The broiler should be even more carefully greased than for a whole steak. This makes it possible to form the balls or cakes of chopped meat with very little pressure without running the risk of having them pulled to pieces by adhering to the wires of the broiler. They should be heated on both sides even more quickly than the steak, because the chopping has provided more ways of escape for the juice, and their openings should be sealed as soon as possible. The interior should be cooked to the taste of the family, just as the steak is.

Chopped raw meat of almost any kind can be very quickly made into a savory dish by cooking it with water or with water and milk for a short time, then thickening with butter and flour, and adding different seasonings. Such a dish may be made to go further by serving it on toast or with a border of rice, or in some similar way.

Cannelon of beef is prepared by making chopped beef into a roll and baking it wrapped in a buttered paper, a method designed to keep in the steam and so insure a moist, tender dish. The paper must be removed before serving. The roll should be basted occasionally with butter and water or drippings and water. In preparing the roll an egg may be added for each pound and a half of meat, and chopped parsley, onion juice, lemon peel or finely chopped green peppers make good seasoning. A thickened gravy may be made from the drippings, the liquid used being either water or tomato juice.

Strips of pork laid on the roll may be substituted for the buttered paper and basting.

Careful cooking aids in developing the natural flavor of some of the cheaper cuts, and browning also brings out flavors agreeable to most palates. Except in the case of roasts, browning for flavor is usually accomplished by heating the meat in a frying pan in fat which has been tried out of pork or in suet or butter. Care should be taken that the fat is not scorched, as the chief reason for the bad opinion in which fried food is held by many is that it almost always means eating burned fat. Fat in itself is a very valuable food, but when burned it is most unpleasant and indigestible.

Fried salt pork with salt codfish, or "salt fish dinner," owes its savoriness to the flavor of browned fat or meat: Half pound salt pork, one pound codfish, two cups of milk (skim milk will do), four tablespoonfuls flour, a speck of salt.

Cut the codfish into strips, soak in lukewarm water and then cook in water until tender but do not allow the water to come to the boiling point except for a very short time as prolonged boiling may make it tough. Cut the pork into one-fourth inch slices and cut several gashes in each piece. Fry very slowly until golden brown and remove, pouring off the fat. Out of four tablespoonfuls of fat, the flour, and the milk make a white sauce. Dish up the codfish with pieces of pork around it and serve with boiled potatoes and beets. Some persons serve the pork, and the fat from it, in a gravy boat so it can be added as relished.

Vegetables of distinctive flavor, such as onions, carrots or celery; savory herbs, such as parsley, sage, bay leaf or thyme; materials such as vinegar, pickles or currant jelly; spices such as pepper, cloves, or "curry" mixtures, and sharp or highly seasoned meat sauces are all types of flavoring materials which are useful in imparting flavor to meat and which may be used in a variety of ways. A few hints regarding the use of some of these materials may not be amiss:

Most of the stews, soups, braised meats, and pot roasts are very much improved if the flavoring vegetables which they contain, such as carrots, turnips, onions, celery, or green peppers, are fried in a little fat before being cooked with the meat. This need not complicate the preparation of the meat or increase the number of utensils used, for the meat itself is usually seared over in fat, and the vegetables can be cooked in the same fat before the browning of the meat.

Cookbooks usually say that onion juice should be extracted by cutting an onion in two and rubbing the cut surface against a grater. Considering how hard it is to wash a grater, this method has its drawbacks. Small amounts of juice may be obtained in the following simpler way: Peel the onion and extract a few drops of juice by pressing one side with the dull edge of a knife.

It is easy to raise parsley by growing it in a pot in the kitchen window and thus to have it always on hand fresh, or the leaves may be kept for a long time if sealed up in a fruit jar and stored in a cool place. Parsley, mint and celery tops may all be dried, rubbed into fine bits and kept in airtight jars. Recipes usually say to chop fresh parsley with a sharp knife on a board. But a board is a hard thing to wash and a plate serves the purpose quite as well.

A "bouquet" such as is often referred to in recipes may be made as follows: A sprig each of parsley, savory and thyme, one small leaf of sage and a bay leaf. This will flavor one gallon of soup when cooked in it for an hour and should not remain in it longer.

Chopped pickles are sometimes added to the gravy served with boiled mutton. They are cheaper than capers and serve somewhat the same purpose. Chopped pickles are also very commonly used in sauces for fish and in many others to give a distinctive flavor.

Curry powder, a mixture of spices which apparently originated in India, but which is now a common commercial product everywhere, is a favorite flavoring for veal, lamb or poultry. A small amount gives a good flavor. It is generally used to season the thick sauces with which meats are served or in which they are allowed to simmer. While the term "curry" is usually employed to describe a particular mixture of spices made up for the trade, it has another meaning. The words "ourry" or "curried" are sometimes used to describe highly seasoned dishes of meats, eggs, or vegetables prepared by methods that have come from India or other parts of the East.

The art of preparing savory gravies and sauces is more important in connection with the serving of the cheaper meats than in connection with the cooking of the more expensive.

There are a few general principles underlying the making of all sauces or gravies, whether the liquid used is water, milk, stock, tomato juice, or some combination of these. For ordinary gravy two level tablespoonfuls of flour or one and a half tablespoonfuls of cornstarch or arrowroot is sufficient to thicken a cupful of liquid. This is true excepting when the flour is browned. In this case about one-half tablespoonful more should be allowed for browned flour does not thicken so well as unbrowned. The fat used may be butter or the drippings from the meat, the allowance being two tablespoonfuls to a cup of liquid.

The easiest way to mix the ingredients is to heat the fat, add the flour and cook until the mixture ceases to bubble, and then to add the liquid. This is a quick method and by using it there is little danger of getting a lumpy gravy. Many persons, however, think it is not a wholesome method and prefer the old fashioned one of thickening the gravy by means of flour mixed with a little cold water. The latter method is of course not practicable for brown gravies.

The good flavor of browned flour is often overlooked. If flour is cooked in fat until it is a dark brown color a distinctive and very agreeable flavor is obtained. This flavor combines very well with that of current jelly, and a little jelly added to a brown gravy is a great improvement. The flavor of this should not be combined with that of onions or other highly flavored vegetables. A recipe for mock venison which is made with brown sauce follows:

Cut cold mutton into thin slices and heat in a brown sauce made according to the following proportions: Two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls flour, one tablespoonful of bottled meat sauce (whichever is preferred), one tablespoonful red currant jelly, one cupful water or stock.

Brown the flour in the butter, add the water or stock slowly and keep stirring. Then add the jelly and meat sauce and let the mixture boil up well.

Good Advice to All Boys.

Governor Baldwin's advice to the Boy Scouts of New Haven, to the effect that they could do a very great service by helping to protect the historical monuments of the city, might well be extended to the scouts of all other Connecticut cities and to boys who are not scouts. In fact, there is no limit to which the advocacy of protection of public property might not be extended, particularly by thoughtful boys among their less thoughtful and sometimes malicious companions. Markings and cuttings upon bridges, municipal structures and state buildings are all species of vandalism and punishable as such. Boy Scouts are not the culprits. Their oaths and training would keep them from such practices. Their aid, therefore, in keeping others from perpetrating such deeds is to be desired both for present preservation and for the hope of a better future citizenship.—Hartford Times.

Rattling the Skeleton.

"I suppose that, like the general run of eminent authors, he left very little property."

"He left no money, but his executor has found among his papers the warmest bunch of love letters, originals and copies, that the literary world has seen for many years! There is a fortune in them."

"Love letters! To his wife?"

"Good gracious, no!"

Interfere With Speed.

UNITED IN TRIBUTE

All Recognize in Colonel Roosevelt the True American.

Those Who Differ With Him Politically Nevertheless Applaud Him as a Leader and a Statesman of Power.

It was not merely to a former president of the United States, not to the head of a political party that the people of Washington paid tribute in the ten hours that Colonel Roosevelt was in the capital.

Democrats, as well as Progressives and Republicans, joined in the tribute to Colonel Roosevelt because he typifies American independence of spirit, resourcefulness and bold statesmanship.

Republicans who have been unable to agree with Mr. Roosevelt in some of his doctrines, nevertheless find him sound on all matters affecting the prosperity, welfare and integrity of the nation, and so applaud him as a leader who must be reckoned with in the future.

Progressives find Colonel Roosevelt a leader who, although unable to stem the tide to the Republican party when he is not himself a candidate, nevertheless answers the call of the people for militant statesmanship which seeks no compromises with foreign powers.

Democrats acknowledge the personal popularity of the former president and regard him as a foeman worthy of their steel.

Millions of people voted against Colonel Roosevelt who still admire and respect him. Some of his issues in the last national campaign, such as the initiative, referendum and recall, alienated many voters from him. Give such a man as Colonel Roosevelt large issues, however, and his appearance in the active political race may cause another of those realignments which have become typical of his interesting career.

Consolidate for Principles.

Theodore Roosevelt is already giving evidence that his visit to Washington and his study there of political conditions and prospects have had their natural effect upon his plans and his position as the most noted and powerful leader of the Progressive party. Since his return to Oyster Bay the press has made public, evidently on high authority, a brief outline of the program of his party in respect to the coming fall campaign. It is a plan which means the rule of reason. It is a forecast which spells Democratic discouragement and disaster.

The pith of the statement published is in the following third section of the program understood to have been decided upon by Colonel Roosevelt and those who follow him:

"Insistence on policies rather than party names, and an endeavor to consolidate in every state the voters who approve of the principles of the Progressive party."

Better Stay in Danville.

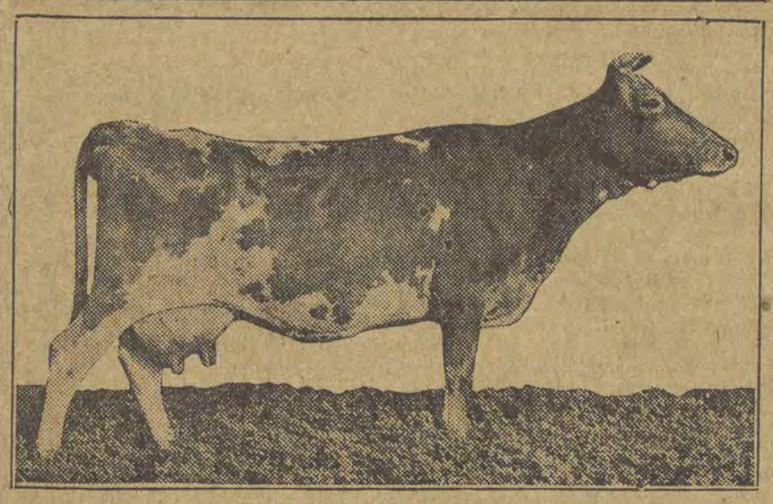
The changes in congress are only reflections of the changes in the congressional districts and in the states at large. The sentiment that made the "Old Guard" possible differs greatly from the sentiment of today. These are changing times. Perhaps we may even develop a newer sort of "Old Guard," which will be as troublesome as the old one, but at least we are practically through with the one to which Uncle Joe belongs. For his own peace of mind we hope that the veteran speaker will not be re-elected. He will not find himself at home in Washington—new faces, new ideas, new rules and Cannon probably in a back seat of the minority side. No, Uncle Joe had better stay home, in Danville, and discuss crop and cattle prospects with his neighbors.

Our Ruined Sugar Industry.

F. M. Cockrell, Jr., has invented a machine for harvesting cane that will so reduce costs as to prove "the salvation of the southern sugar industry." Now, if somebody will invent a machine of equal value for weeding, harvesting, and topping beets, the domestic sugar industry can be put back where it was before the standpat prophets began their depressing work. —St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Up to Regular Republicans.

Progressives are beginning to intimate that if there is any "prodigal son" performance the regular Republican party will have to assume the title role.



Statesmen in Tents.

President Wilson was not the first official of his administration to transact business in a tent. Mr. Bryan likes a bit of yodling now and then.

Wilson and Sectionalism.

The criticism that sectionalism was at the bottom of the president's decision not to attend the exercises at Arlington determined him to reverse himself. It is a good thing that he so effectively rebuked his critics, for the time has passed when sectionalism in either popular or good politics. President Wilson has many faults, but a lack of regard for the history of his country and appreciation of the men who fought in the struggle for its national existence is not one of them.

SKIM-MILK CALVES CONSIDERED BEST

A Fine Type of Cow.

A skim-milk calf becomes accustomed to eating grain and roughness early in life, becomes gentle, and when transferred to the feed lot is ready to make an economical gain.

The feed records of an experiment last fall show that skim-milk calves have produced 100 pounds of gain for 439 pounds of grain, while whole-milk calves required 470 pounds of grain per 100 pounds of gain, and calves running with the dams required 475 pounds of grain per 100 pounds of gain.

Up to the weaning time the calves running with their dams look sleeker and fatter than those raised on either skim-milk or whole milk. The critical period with those that run with the dams is at the weaning time.

The calves nursed by the cows lost 73 pounds the first week after weaning, while the skim-milk calf gained 220 pounds and the whole-milk calves 77 pounds. It took several weeks for the calves nursed by their dams to recover from weaning.

It is not advisable to mix corn or any other starchy food with milk. When the starch in grain takes the place of fat in milk its form must be changed to sugar before it is digestible.

This change is effected by the alkaline fluids and chiefly by the saliva of the mouth.

If the grain is gulped down with the milk there is no time for the saliva to act, and as the gastric juice of the stomach is acid instead of alkaline the starch is not acted upon until it reaches the intestines.

FREE RANGE IS IDEAL

GROWING PULLET THOROUGHLY APPRECIATES FREEDOM.

Plenty of Natural Shade, Fresh Air Houses and Abundance of Green, Succulent Food Material Are Conducive to Success.

(By PROF. H. R. LEWIS. Copyright, 1914.)

Of all the problems confronting poultrymen the successful rearing of growing stock is the most vital. The question is one of inducing a continuous rapid development from hatching time to maturity.

Success depends upon giving growing pullets and cockerels ideal environmental conditions, such as an extended range, plenty of natural shade, fresh air houses and abundance of green, succulent food material in addition to a well-balanced grain ration.

Free range is ideal, being conducive to uniform and economical growth, with food material in the form of grubs, insects and green grass. The more range given the birds the more sanitary their surroundings, for the droppings will be well distributed and will more quickly leach into the soil. When necessary to closely confine growing stock during the summer the area available should be divided into two runs and each alternately seeded to green crops.

Shade Essential.

Adequate shade is also essential, giving protection against the rays of the sun, and a growing bush or tree is the best, as more moisture is present than where artificial shelters of boards or burlap are used. The orchard is a good place to rear pullets, and the cornfield is another portion of the average farm which furnishes ideal range. Sunflowers, corn, castor beans and soy beans are some annuals which can well be planted for shade, and peach, apple and plum trees make excellent, permanent shade.

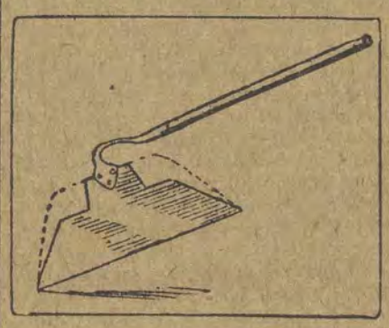
A constant supply of green food is necessary for the best development, and where birds are on free range there is usually plenty of greensward, though on restricted areas crops, such as peas and oats, buckwheat, soy beans, rye, vetch and crimson clover, can be seeded to provide a continuous supply.

During hot summer nights all the protection which chicks need are cheap shelters, relatively wide open, and hence cool and well ventilated. Shed roof shelters, open in front and both sides, with provision for confining birds against enemies, is all that is necessary, and a shelter 6 by 8 feet will house 50 pullets to maturity.

The food supply should be determined by the condition of the range. A well balanced dry mash, kept in large hoppers, supplemented by corn and wheat (equal parts), fed broadcast morning and night with plenty of fresh water are the essentials for continuous growth and early maturity.

Breed for Results.

The vast majority of poultrymen want good layers or good market fowls, and want them well bred; further than that, they care nothing. Today we have practical fanciers on every hand; men who breed for results, or who put results before feathers; therefore their flocks must be strong and vigorous, and among these strong, vigorous birds will be found many prize winners, or birds fit for such honors.



Get Pure Bred Cocks.

Sell off all cocks from your poultry and buy new blood—but get pure bred. They do not take up any more room and they bring many more dollars than scrubs do.

USEFUL TOOL IN A GARDEN

Pointed End on a Hoe Ehables One to Get Under Growing Plants to Cut Out Weeds.

The rounding end on the ordinary hoe is useless in many instances for getting under growing plants, to cut out the weeds and to loosen up the earth, says a writer in Popular Mechanics. I find that shaping the hoe ends as shown in the sketch is very effective in getting up close to a plant and under spreading vines.

Hoe With Pointed End.

Plant Food in Sawdust.

Sawdust contains about one-third as much plant food, pound for pound, as manure, but the plant food in sawdust becomes available to plants much more slowly than the plant food of manure. A good way to use sawdust is as bedding. It soaks up the liquid manure to good advantage. Spread on in connection with manure, sawdust would rot much more rapidly than if spread on by itself.

If the mare is worked the colt should not be allowed to follow her to the field.

AN APPEAL TO WOMEN

By One Who, From Her Past Experience, is Capable of Giving Sound Advice.

Bud, Ky.—"I want to urge all weak women," says Mrs. Lizzie R. Barker, of this place, "to give Cardui, the woman's tonic, a fair trial, for I believe it will do for them what it has done for me.

I was a sufferer for 13 years, with such pains I could scarcely walk or stand on my feet. I had headache, dizziness and fainting spells.

After many treatments failed to help me, my husband persuaded me to give Cardui, the woman's tonic, a trial, and I did so. Now I feel like a new woman. I am well of all these troubles, and can do all my housework, with pleasure.

When I commenced taking Cardui, I was not able to sit up. Now I am enjoying good health and do all of my work.

I shall keep Cardui in my home all the time. There is not any medicine that equals it for women."

We, also, urge you to try Cardui, the woman's tonic, for your troubles. It has helped so many thousands of women in the past half century that we feel sure it will help you, too.

Prepared from perfectly harmless, vegetable ingredients, Cardui is the remedy for you to use. It can do you nothing but good.

Try it.—Adv.

Why Not Armor for Every Bullet?

An ingenious New York doctor has invented a bichloride of mercury tablet in which the antidote is combined with the poison, so that a person may swallow corrosive sublimate, intentionally or accidentally, with immunity. It's a capital idea, and ought to be applied to poisons generally, and possibly Maxim might find some way of applying the principle to firearms. An automatic, self-resisting bullet, or something of that sort, would be of much greater utility than his silencer.

EYE STRAIN
Relieved by Quitting Coffee.

Many cases of defective vision are caused by the habitual use of coffee.

It is said that in Arabia where coffee is used in large quantities, many lose their eyesight at about fifty. Tea contains the same drug, caffeine, as coffee.

A N. J. woman writes to the point concerning eye trouble and coffee. She says:

"My son was for years troubled with his eyes. He tried several kinds of glasses without relief. The optician said there was a defect in his eyes which was hard to reach.

"He used to drink coffee, as we all did, and finally quit it and began to use Postum. That was three years ago and he has not had to wear glasses and has had no trouble with his eyes since.

"I was always fond of tea and coffee and finally became so nervous I could hardly sit still long enough to eat a meal. My heart was in such a condition I thought I might die at any time.

"Medicine did not give me relief and I was almost desperate. It was about this time we decided to quit coffee and use Postum, and have used it ever since. I am in perfect health. No trouble now with my heart and never felt better in my life.

"Postum has been a great blessing to us all, particularly to my son and myself."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

Considerable progress is being made in the grading of the section of the Birmingham-Montgomery Highway between Clanton and Mountain Creek. For a distance of about three miles south of Clanton the road has been straightened and graded, and is already in much better shape than heretofore.

The construction of Clanton's waterworks and sewerage system is being pushed along at a rapid rate by the contracting company having the work in charge. The mains are all laid, and the large tank nearly completed. Soon the work of boring the wells and the construction of pump houses will be under way, and in a short time if no serious impediment is encountered our little city will be fully enjoying the immense advantages of a first class waterworks and sewerage system.

Let us not lose sight of the important fact that next Tuesday is the date of the mass meeting of the Progressive Party of Alabama at Birmingham. The duty of sending a large delegation to this meeting devolves upon the members of the Progressive party in Chilton County, and we must not fail to come up to all that may be expected of us. It would be very becoming for a large number of voters to go from here to the meeting, and represent our county. No county in the state gives a stronger vote to the Progressive ticket than Chilton, and therefore we are entitled to an important place in the deliberations that will be enacted in that body.

The teachers institute for Chilton County is to be held at Clanton, during the week beginning August 10th. Elsewhere we are publishing the complete program as furnished us by the Superintendent of education. This promises to be an occasion of great importance in the experience of the school teacher. The program is broad in its scope, but is supplied with sufficient details in all the applications to make the event a veritable training school, in which the advantages of instruction from some of the state's best educators is offered. The teacher who wants to go to his or her school next year with something in store for the boys and girls who are to be instructed will welcome this splendid opportunity of better preparation for the work.

We notice with much interest the movement which is being agitated in the city of Montgomery to secure for the employees of the stores and other business houses a half holiday once a week. This movement is indeed a sanely humane one, and deserves the notice and emulation of other towns. Even in Clanton there is every reason in the world why such a practice through the sultry summer months should be put in vogue. Our business men are well able to allow their hired help this privilege, which would automatically resolve itself into untold advantages to those who are daily confined in the store and office in order to secure the sustainence of a monthly wage. We would be glad to hear some one else express his views on the matter, and even offer some method of procedure for putting the practice into force.

Are you looking forward to the Chilton County Fair this fall? If not you have certainly lost sight of a very important occasion in the curriculum of our county progress. Whether you are a farmer, business or professional man the above will apply to you in practically the same measure. We have had a number of very successful fairs in Chilton county, and practically every citizen has attended them at one time or another and observed the benefit derived from their influence. The place of estimation that the county fair has in past won with our farmers and business men surely will not suffer a lagging of interest this year, nor in all succeeding years for that matter, but appeal more strongly than ever for zealous support for the worthy cause which it is. We want to see the organization grow, and as a necessity for this is the undivided and unprejudiced support of all our people. No one is interested in the fair for personal aggrandizement, but for the civic upbuilding and broadening of our county's possibilities along all the lines that lead to substantial progress. Therefore let us begin to tink seriously about the matter, and exert every effort to concentrate our energies and resources into the best Fair that we have ever had.

THE HIGH SCHOOL QUESTION.

The contest for the location of the Chilton County High School has been a spirited one. The interest which the citizens of the different communities have displayed regarding the securing of the institution has been very earnest, and sincere to the bottom. At all times those who have been working for the school have done so with broad incentives, actuated by the desire to benefit the entire citizenship of our county. Different persons have contended for their own ideas in the matter, not because they were more personally concerned, but because they believed their plans to be the best for the citizenship of the entire county. These were honorable differences and possessed not the least taint of petty narrowness.

Now the school is located. The High School Commission has looked into the conditions surrounding the case, and with that same desire and intention to serve the best interest of all the citizens has said in an impartial declaration where the school shall be. So if we are to be as broad in our feelings and attitude toward the institution in future as we have in the past we will lay down all our different arguments and accept the decision in the true spirit of the optimistic citizen.

The school will be useless unless it succeeds. Success for such an institution is impossible without co-operative support from those whom it aspires to serve. Therefore we can but hope that our people will, in expression of just and full appreciation for the great advantage we have received at the hands of our state, give to the good cause the profoundest support in any and all ways possibly necessary. This school means more good to our county than any achievement made in the last decade. We feel certainly correct in predicting that our people will not let the institution suffer from lack of support upon their part, but stand firmly back of it in meeting out to our boys and girls those superior advantages of which they have been heretofore deprived.

COUNTY SHOULD HELP BUILD THE HOUSE.

Jefferson is to have a high school and it is located on a street car line, close to the city. The land company has made a splendid offer at Tarrant City and has given ten acres of land that is immensely valuable. There has long been an urgent need for a county high school.

The Board of Revenue will be asked to help build the house. It should respond as liberally as the funds of the county will permit. Really the committee asks but $15,000, and that is surely little enoug for the county to pay for a permanent improvement and a public benefit.

Tax-payers often complain that they pay their tax money and see no benefit except schools and roads. Really the public buildings should be counted in, because they enhance and maintain the value of all real estate.

A handsome high school building at Tarrant City gives permanency to values near it and adds to the value of all real estate between its location and the court house. The Board of Revenue is doing nobly on public roads; let it be equally as earnest and progressive towards the schools. Roads and scools houses are things the tax-payers can see and they approve them.—Birmingham Ledger.

At a meeting at the court house Monday night for that purpose Messrs. E. M. Pinckard, W. H. Sartor, J. J. Pickens, W. L. Popwell and E. B. Deason were selected as the building committee for the Chilton County High School. They will select an architect for the building within the next ten days.

Tribute To Marvin Wilson

Now and then there falls on sleep in the quite rank of the profession, a nobleman of nature, who if his virtues were blazoned in publicity, would rank with the famous of his time. Such a man was Dr. Marvin H. Wilson, who died Sunday morning, May 17, 1914.

The circle of his intimate friends was small, but within that circle that knew him for his worth he had won a place which is his forever, and he lives in the loving memory of his loyal friends. Few men have been better loved in life and few more genuinely lamented in his untimely death.

He is remembered in tenderness, and his absence is felt as a daily and distressing void. Briefly, in this narrow space, let us say of him that he was the soul of honor, the embodiment of generosity, the essence of kindness, and the incarnation of loyal faith. He abhorred shams, he detested fraud, and he scorned the devious subterfuges of the charlatan.

He was gallant in spirit, chivalrous in conduct, and would have been fair in dealing with his dearest foe. What more can be said of any man than these words, which we sadly and truly speak of him. He was my schoolmate in his boyhood, my comrade in his latter days, and as the sod closes over his kindly face I realize in more than passing sorrow that I have lost a golden hearted friend.

J. P. Crumpton.

Gerald-Mastin

In a quiet home weddidg, participated in only by the families of the contracting parties, and a few of their intimate friends, Mr. Lawrence F. Gerald, son of Mrs. Hattie M. Gerald, and junior member of the law firm of Mullins, Smith and Gerald, of Clanton, and Miss Ella Mastin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. O. C. Mastin, were married at the residence of the bride's parents at Thorsby at 8 p.m. on Wednesday evening, June 10. Rev. S. H. Herbert officiated at the ceremony.

The bride wore white satin gown, her veil was fastened with lillies of the valley, and she carried a bouquet of bride roses. She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Philip Horn, wearing pink satin gown with lace trimming, carrying sweet peas.

Mr. Guy H. Gerald, a brother of the groom, was best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald left on an evening train for an extended trip in the West, and on their return will reside in Clanton.

Leonard Kemp was married this week to a Miss Powers at Coosada.

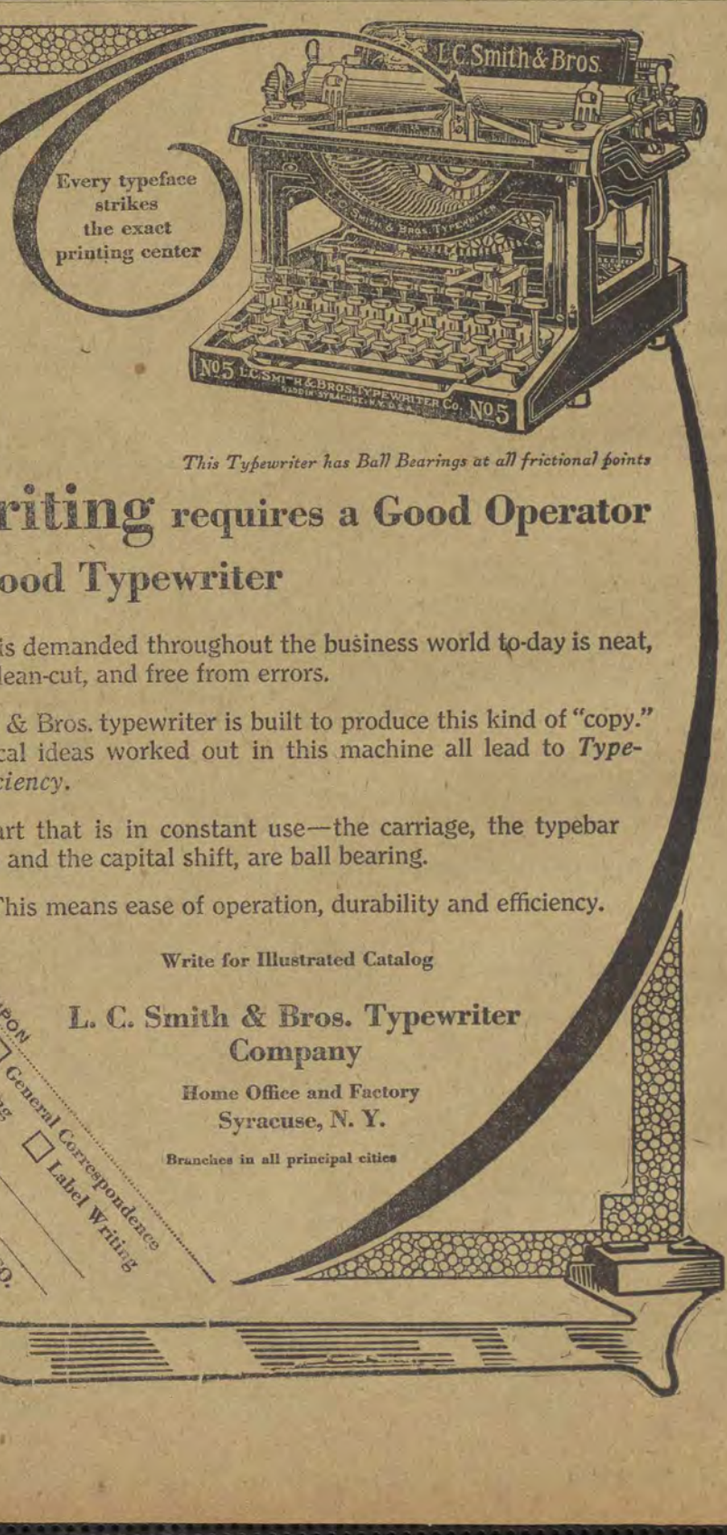
Blood Trouble Often A Puzzling Question

The Searching Power of a Great Remedy Answers the Worst Riddle.

Thousands Have Solved It With S. S. S.

It is now known that the germs of blood disorders are found in the minute spaces of the tissue fibres. They can be seen only through a powerful microscope. And it is in these spaces that S. S. S. goes to work rapidly, effectively and with wonderfully noticeable results.

This famous blood purifier contains medicinal components vital and essential to healthy blood.



There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, all skin affections, rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced by all sufferers with poisoned blood.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright, and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life.

S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of the Swift Specific Co., 221 Swift Bldg., Atlanta Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice.

Hint for Coming Maternity

In a little book designed for expectant mothers more complete instruction is given in the use of "Mother's Friend." This is an external embrocation applied to the abdominal muscles for the purpose of reducing the strain on ligaments, cords and tendons.

In thus bringing relief and avoiding pain great good is accomplished. It serves to ease the mind, indirectly has a most beneficial effect upon the nervous system and thousands of women have delightedly told how they were free of nausea, had no morning sickness and went through the ordeal with most remarkable success. "Mother's Friend" has been growing in popular favor for more than forty years. In almost every community are grandmothers who used it themselves, their daughters have used it and they certainly must know what a blessing it is when they recommend it so warmly. Strictly an external application it has no other effect than to ease the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments involved hence is perfectly safe to use by all women. It is used very successfully to prevent caking of breasts.

"Mother's Friend" is prepared in the laboratory of Bradfield Regulator Co., 404 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

To Young Men

Next to health, youth is the most wonderful possession of men and women. Men of millions would cheerfully write their checks for their entire fortune and give a due bill to boot, to once again be the "bare-foot boy with cheek of tan."

Ponce de Leon braved the ravages of disease, the terrors of unexplored jungles, the danger of starvation, in his search for the fountain of eternal youth.

Millionaires are endowing colleges, scientists are devoting days and nights to research, to preserve health and youth.

There does not live a man of mature years who is without regret for one or more lost opportunities; who does not say to himself, "If I could only go back!"

Youth is slipping away, day by day. The preparatory period is growing shorter. The physical and mental youth is settling into the weak, ineffectual man; or, the mediocre, ordinary man; or the aggressive, creative man.

WHICH ARE YOU?

You are going to be the man that you are the youth, only more so. Your weakness, your negative qualities, your strength will be accentuated in mature years. "As the twig is bent," etc.

The L. & N. writes of these things because the times demand thoughtful men, clean men, creative men, reliable men.

The L. & N. operates in thirteen productive Southern States. The present welfare of the system which, comparatively, is insignificant, depends on the clean, thoughtful, reliable, creative men of the present.

But we are looking to and writing of the great, the mysterious future.

We urge on the youth of the nation the necessity for clean living, right thinking, activity in well doing, that they may be prepared to successfully meet the problems of their day.

The L. & N. has suffered, just as many other developments have suffered, at the hands of thoughtless men, selfish men, prejudiced men. A greater addition could have been made to the sum of human happiness if a spirit of cheerful good-will and co-operation prevailed.

We are doing our best to supply unexcelled freight and passenger service. We solicit your patronage. We ask you to put a charitable construction on our shortcomings and to encourage us in our well doing.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

During a recent visit to a small town in our county I saw several boys just merging into manhood under the influence of whiskey, and it made my heart ache to think how their mothers would feel when they went home in this condition. But don't you suppose their parents are partly to blame for their conduct? I fear they are, for I have known some of the boys since they were quite small and I know that they were allowed to run about on Sunday's, and often at night with rough men and boys and their parents didn't know where they were or with whom they were associating, at the time when they needed watching. This will not do. Boys should be taught to obey and to ask about going off to spend Sunday afternoon just the same as their sisters until you are sure they know right from wrong and that they will choose the right companions, and even then you should know their companions well. A boys father is the best companion he can have, and should always be ready to take part in any wholesome sport or game suggested; and he could spend many pleasant hours of his spare time teaching his sons and his neighbors sons how to swim, set traps, shoot a gun and tell the directions of the compass while they are small, and when they are larger he can help them by explaining the new methods of farming and the use of gasoline and improved implements and their superiority over the old ways. If father doesn't enjoy this he should remember that it may be keeping the boys out of trouble (and father too perhaps). But the whole burden should not be left for father. Mother can do her part by giving him little parties, so she may get acquainted with the children he will have to associate with, and by always listening to his little troubles and helping him solve his little social problems. If parents would only do these things I believe the boys would go to them when they were older to ask advice and to relate their sorrows. I hope the boys nor their parents will be offended by this for I have written it with only one purpose: To try to help someone, for it is distressing to see our future men growing up in the way they are.

Home Department:—In answer to the call of my many friends, I will chat a while with you all this morning. We have been having a drought all through May and so far in June, have had only two showers—not enough to meet the moisture good; but corn and cotton are holding up very well some have very nice gardens, but mine is a failure. Sickness in the family kept me from getting any seed planted early and what I planted later did not come up. But my kind neighbors give me cabbage. I think our kind editor has acted wisely in giving us a department and I know it will be appreciated by the ladies, and I am expecting the pleasure of reading many good and useful letters from our farm women as well as those of the towns, and by our experience we can help each other. I feel that I am not competent to write an interesting letter myself. I have had so much on my mind and body all this year that I am almost given out. My sister-in-law that had been with me was an invalid. She died April 10. We miss her a great deal. I would like to have ideas of our ladies on the styles. It looks to me that our girls are trying to look as near like men as possible. Those tight skirts are a fright to me. I think a pair of pants look so much better with two legs than with one leg to them, besides the tight skirt is not becoming to any one and are not convenient. I guess the girls will be on to me after this. Let them come if they want some fun. Seriously now, can't we keep in the middle of the road and not go to the extreme either way. I think a plain fitting dress that gives room to walk and drops in graceful lines while standing is neat and looks well.

If this escapes the waste basket I will come again. Wishing all a bounteous supply of pleasure.

Grandma.

Thank you for complying with my request, your views are very interesting.—Editor.

Come on all you sisters and write to our department, let's show our editor that we appreciate our part of the paper. "Just a Girl," I liked your letter. I think we need such a course taught in our country schools, just as much as they do in the city. Some of us mothers would be thankful if we could take such a course ourselves. I'm sure I would. Some of you sisters who can tomatoes for soup, try putting in tomatoes, butter beans, a little okra, a few tender roasting ears, and a little pepper. Boil fifteen minutes, put in a jar boiling hot and seal, and see if you don't have good soup. Thorough sterilization of everything means success in canning, provided of course you use first products. Never use old rubbers.

Farmer's Wife.

IS OUR RED CROSS VISITING NURSE MAKING GOOD?

By Mrs. W. T. Callen.

Listen! She has been with us scarcely three months. Read her report in the county papers.

Here is just one instance of life and money saving to the county: A child was recently taken ill with typhoid fever. Miss Harlan was called, and soon she instructed the family as to carrying out the doctor's prescriptions, nursing, feeding, and disposal of all discharges. At her suggestion a sanitary privy was erected. Her timely efforts in this one case have saved the family and community from an epidemic, and there is no telling how many lives have been preserved.

Miss Harlan is an authority on sanitation and hygiene—is called all over the state to make addresses. Her paper read before the Sociological Association recently held in Birmingham has met with favorable comment by our state papers. She has just returned from Greenville, where she addressed a thousand people assembled for the Chautauqua. She tells me Butler county is about ready to appoint a full time Health Officer with a Red Cross Nurse to assist him. Greenville already has a sanitary rest room. The ladies of many Alabama towns are awaking to their needs. Why should we neglect our opportunities? The progress of any people is first, last and always dependent on its sanitation and vitality.

We learned last Friday that our county is only forty-five years old (or young.) Now, if we expect to take our place with the other counties of the state, we must inform ourselves and co-operate with the heads of the different departments of learning fostered in our county.

Miss Harlan represents the American Red Cross Society which is sending workers all over the U. S., and its posessions to promote the sanitation and health of its people.

Those of us who have met Miss Harlan realize she is not here in a spirit of criticism, but is filled with an earnest desire to promote the interest of our county, and aid in any of these important lines.

Right here, I wish to tell the ladies of Clanton and vicinity, that encouraging reports have already come from some Beats regarding the Chilton County Improvement Association.

Ladies of Clanton! Rouse yourselves from your lethargy! On the 25 of July shall we be "weighed in the balance and found wanting"? No organization perfected, no work begun? Our President, Miss Mary C. Gibson is in Europe for study and research on women's welfare work. Let's rally to the leading of our Vice President, Mrs. J. M. Horn, and have a complete organization and much improvement by the time Miss Gibson returns. How badly we need a rest room for the comfort of our country women. By concert of action Clanton can ere long boast of a comfortable rest room and other needed conveniences. We can rejoice when tourists and friends write us down as a city beautiful.

These random thoughts have been been jotted down hastily, hoping that the sowing will bring a full harvest ere long.

SLUGGISH LIVERS STARTEE PLEASANTLY

No Need to Risk Disagreable Dangerous Calomel Now That Dodson's Liver Tone Takes Irs Place

Plenty of people—thousands of them—have found that it is no longer necessary to risk being "all knocked out" by taking calomel when constipated or suffering from a sluggish liver.

Nowadays Dodson's Liver Tone takes the place of calomel.

What calomel does unpleasantly and often with danger, Dodson's Liver Tone does for you safely and pleasantly, with no pain and no gripe. It does not interfere in any way with your regular business, habits or diet.

Calomel is a poison, a form of mercury, a mineral. Dodson's Liver Tone is an all-vegetable liquid.

Of course, this reliable remedy has its imitators. But Dodson's Liver Tone has been made to take the place of calomel right from the start. The label on the bottle always has said so, beginning with the first bottle sold. And it is widely known today how good Dodson's Liver Tone is as a remedy and that Dodson never makes extravagant statements. He says that it "livens the liver," overcomes constipation agteeably bnd makes you feel good, and if you are not satisfied completely with it Alred Drug Company will hand back the purchase price (50c.) to you with a smile.

Such statements could not be made without true merit to back them up and it is easy for you to prove them for yourself at no cost if not satisfied and convinced.

CLANTON VS. ROBINSON SPRINGS.

An interesting feature of the entertainments in Clanton last Friday was the base ball game between the Clanton and Robinson Springs teams in the afternoon.

The battle was pitched shortly after two o'clock for the first game, with Willie Wilson in the box for Clanton, and Johnnie McDowell catching. Seven innings were played, and in the final score the results were 3 to 1 in favor of Clanton. Wilson pitched good ball, and for a long time held the visitors down without a single hit.

In the second game Albert Pyron filled the box for Clanton and Jim Ramsey catcher. The visitors hit "Pal" rather hard, and at the end of the seventh inning turned up a score of 6 to 2 in favor of Robinson Springs.

The game was played comparatively well considering the amount of practice the boys have had this season, but numerous errors were made which are rather hard to account for. The team from Robinson Springs is about an even match for our home fellows. The tie which was left between the two teams last season is still unchanged by Friday' results, and we hope to see them get together again soon.

Eubanks-Frazier

An interesting wedding of the season was that which was solemnized by Rev. A. R. Aldridge last Sunday afternoon at his home in West town, between Mr. Herman Eubanks and Miss Ella Frazier. The contracting parties were well and favorably known here, this being the home of each, and they have among their acquaintances, scores of friends and well wishers. Only a few relatives and invited guests were present at the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Eubanks left Clanton on the afternoon train for Jacksonville, Fla., where they will make their future home.

Mrs. Tipton Mullins is visiting in Texas.

Horn-Anderson

A very pretty wedding was celebrated at 8 p.m. Wednesday, June 10, at the home of the bride's parents, when Mr. Ivy Horn, son of Mr. J. M. Horn, and Miss Hilda Anderson, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Magne Anderson, were united in marriage by the Rev. E. W. Butler.

Miss Anderson is a graduate of Thorsby Institute and has been for some time a very successful teacher in the Chilton County schools. She is of a pleasing personality and by her many admirable traits of character has won a host of friends.

The bride was attired in silk crepe de chine trimmed with shadow lace, her veil was arranged with orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of white sweet peas. Her maid of honor was her class mate and fellow graduate, Miss Mabel Swan, who wore pale yellow gown of crepe de chine and carried pink sweet peas. Miss Clara Soberg, another intimate friend, presided at the piano, beautifully rendering Mendelssohn's wedding march. Mr. Albert Anderson, a brother of the bride, was best man. Presents for the bride were numerous and beautiful, chiefly in china, cut glass and silver, but all of practical utility for a young housewife.

The color scheme of the decorations was green and white ferns, carnations and magnolia blooms predominating.

A course dinner was served on the lawn, which was lighted with Japanese lanterns. Mr. and Mrs. Horn left on an evening train. They expect to return soon and set up a home of their own in Thorsby, where Mr. Horn is engaged in farming.

HOW CHILDREN GROW

Children grow by nourishment—not overloaded stomachs or rich foods but qualities that are readily converted into life-sustaining blood; too often their digestive powers cannot procure these qualities from ordinary foods which results in weakness, dullness and sickness.

If your children are under-size, underweight, catch cold easily, are languid, backward, pale or frail, give them Scott's Emulsion which is pure medicinal nourishment. It sharpens the appetite, builds healthy flesh, firm muscles and active brains. Scott's is growing-food for children. Refuse alcoholic substitutes.

Mr. W. H. Conway of Jemison was in Clanton last Friday.

The Union Song service at the Methodist church last Sunday night was highly entertaining and delightful. SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Mrs. Sara Wrandall and Hetty attend the funeral of Challis Wrandall at the home of his parents. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, makes himself useful to Sara and becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Leslie Wrandall becomes impatient and jealous over the picture painting and declares he is going to propose to Hetty at the first opportunity. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Sara, between whom and Hetty a strong mutual affection has grown up, tries to persuade the girl that she should not let the tragedy prevent her from marrying

"You do know it, don't you?" he went on.

"I—God knows I don't want you to love me. I never meant that you should—" she was saying, as if to herself.

"I suppose it's hopeless," he said dumbly, as her voice trailed off in a whisper.

"Yes, it is utterly hopeless," she said, and she was white to the lips.

"I—I sha'n't say anything more," said he. "Of course, I understand how it is. There's some one else, Only I want you to know that I love you with all my soul, Hetty. I—I don't see how I'm going to get on without you. But I—I won't distress you, dear."

"There isn't anyone else, Brandon," she said in a very low voice. Her fingers tightened on his in a sort of desperation. "I know what you are thinking. It isn't Leslie. It never can be Leslie."

"Then—then—" he stammered, the blood surging back into his heart—"there may be a chance—"

"No, no!" she cried, almost vehemently. "I can't let you go on hoping. It is wrong—so terribly wrong. You must forget me. You must—"

He seized her other hand and held them both firmly, masterfully.

"See here, my—look at me, dearest! What is wrong? Tell me! You are unhappy. Don't be afraid to tell me. You—you do love me?"

She drew a long breath through her half-closed lips. Her eyes darkened with pain.

"No. I don't love you. Oh, I am so sorry to have given you—"

He was almost radiant. "Tell me the truth," he cried triumphantly. "Don't hold anything back, darling. If there is anything troubling you, let me shoulder it. I can—I will do anything in the world for you. Listen:

"Some Day You Will Tell Me—Everything?"

I know there's a mystery somewhere. I have felt it about you always. I have seen it in your eyes, I have always sensed it stealing over me when I'm with you—this strange, bewildering atmosphere of—"

"Hush! You must not say anything more," she cried out. "I cannot love you. There is nothing more to be said."

"But I know it now. You do love me. I could shout it to—" The miserable, whipped expression in her eyes checked this outburst. He was struck by it, even dismayed. "My dearest one, my love," he said, with infinite tenderness, "what is it? Tell me?"

He drew her to him. His arm went about her shoulders. The final thrill of ecstasy bounded through his veins. The feel of her! The wonderful, subtle, feminine feel of her! His brain reeled in a new and vast whirl of intoxication.

She sat there very still and unresisting, her hand to her lips, uttering no word, scarcely breathing. He waited. He gave her time. After a little while her fingers strayed to the crown of her limp, rakish panama. They found the single hatpin and drew it out. He smiled as he pushed the hat away and then pressed her dark little head against his breast. Her blue eyes were swimming.

"Just this once, just this once," she murmured with a sob in her voice. Her hand stole upward and caressed his brown cheek and throat. Tears of joy started in his eyes—tears of exquisite delight.

"Good God, Hetty, I—I can't do without you,' he whispered, shaken by his passion. "Nothing can come between us. I must have you always like this."

"Che sara, sara," she sighed, like the breath of the summer wind as it sings in the trees.

The minutes passed and neither spoke. His rapt gaze hung upon the glossy crown that pressed against him so gently. He could not see her eyes, but somehow he felt they were tightly shut, as if in pain.

"I love you, Hetty. Nothing can matter," he whispered at last. "Tell me what it is."

She lifted her head and gently withdrew herself from his embrace. He did not oppose her, noting the serious, almost somber look in her eyes as she turned to regard him steadfastly, an unwavering integrity of purpose in their depths.

She had made up her mind to tell him a part of the truth. "Brandon, I am Hetty Glynn."

He started, not so much in surprise as at the abruptness with which she made the announcement.

"I have been sure of it, dear, from the beginning," he said quietly.

Then her tongue was loosed. The words rushed to her lips. "I was Hawkright's model for six months. I posed for all those studies, and for the big canvas in the academy. It was either that or starvation. Oh, you will hate me—you must hate me."

He laid his hand on her hair, a calm smile on his lips. "I can't love and hate at the same time," he said. "There was nothing wrong in what you did for Hawkright. I am a painter, you know. I understand. Does—does Mrs. Wrandall know all this?"

"Yes—everything. She knows and understands. She is an angel, Brandon, an angel from heaven. But," she burst forth, "I am not altogether a sham. I am the daughter of Colonel Castleton, and I am cousin of all the Murgatroyds—the poor relation. It isn't as if I were the scum of the earth, is it? I am a Castleton. My father comes of a noble family. And, Brandon, the only thing I've ever done in my life that I am really ashamed of is the deception I practiced on you when you brought that magazine to me and faced me with it. I did not lie to you. I simply let you believe I was not the—the person you thought I was. But I deceived you—"

"No, you did not deceive me," he said gently. "I read the truth in your dear eyes."

"There are other things, too. I shall not speak of them, except to repeat that I have not done anything else in my life that I should be ashamed of." Her eyes were burning with earnestness. He could not but understand what she meant.

Again he stroked her hair. "I am sure of that," he said.

"My mother was Kitty Glynn, the actress. My father, a younger son, fell in love with her. They were married against the wishes of his father, who cut him off. He was in the service, and he was brave enough to stick. They went to one of the South African garrisons, and I was born there. Then to India. Then back to London, where an aunt had died, leaving my father quite a comfortable fortune. But his old friends would have nothing to do with him. He had lived—well, he had made life a hell for my mother in those frontier posts. He deserted us in the end, after he had squandered the fortune. My mother made no effort to compel him to provide for her or for me. She was proud. She was hurt. Today he is in India, still in the service, a martinet with a record for bravery on the field of battle that cannot be taken from him, no matter what else may befall. I hear from him once or twice a year. That is all I can tell you about him. My mother died three years ago, after two years of invalidism. During those years I tried to repay her for the sacrifice she had made in giving me the education, the—" She choked up for a second, and then went bravely on. "Her old manager made a place for me in one of his companies. I took my mother's name, Hetty Glynn, and—well, for a season and a half I was in the chorus. I could not stay there. I could not," she repeated with a shudder. "I gave it up after my mother's death. I was fairly well equipped for work as a children's governess, so I engaged myself to—"

She stopped in dismay, for he was laughing.

"And now do you know what I think of you, Miss Hetty Glynn?" he cried, seizing her hands and regarding her with a serious, steadfast gleam in his eyes. "You are the pluckiest, sandiest girl I've ever known. You are the kind that heroines are made of. There is nothing in what you've told me that could in the least alter my regard for you, except to increase the love I thought could be no stronger. Will you marry me, Hetty?"

She jerked her hands away, and held them clenched against her breast.

"No! I cannot. It is impossible, Brandon. If I loved you less than I do, I might say yes, but—no, it is impossible."

His eyes narrowed. A gray shadow crept over his face.

"There can be only one obstacle so serious as all that," he said slowly. "You—you are already married."

"No!' she cried, lifting her pathetic eyes to his. "It isn't that. Oh, please be good to me! Don't ask me to say anything more. Don't make it hard for me, Brandon. I love you—I love you. To be your wife would be the most glorious—No, no! I must not even think of it. I must put it out of my mind. There is a barrier, dearest. We cannot surmount it. Don't ask me to tell you, for I cannot. I—I am so happy in knowing that you love me, and that you still love me after I have told you how mean and shameless I was in deceiving—"

He drew her close and kissed her full on the trembling lips. She gasped and closed her eyes, lying like one in a swoon. Soft, moaning sounds came from her lips. He could not help feeling a vast pity for her, she was so gentle, so miserably hurt by something he could not understand, but knew to be monumental in its power to oppress.

"Listen, dearest," he said, after a long silence; "I understand this much, at least: you can't talk about it now. Whatever it is, it hurts, and God knows I don't want to make it worse for you in this hour when I am so selfishly happy. Time will show us the way. It can't be insurmountable. Love always triumphs. I only ask you to repeat those three little words, and I will be content. Say them."

"I love you," she murmured.

"There! You are mine! Three little words bind you to me forever. I will wait until the barrier is down. Then I will take you."

"The barrier grows stronger every day," she said, staring out beyond the tree-tops at the scudding clouds. "It never can be removed.'

"Some day you will tell me—everything?"

She hesitated long. "Yes, before God, Brandon, I will tell you. Not now, but—some day. Then you will see why—why I cannot—" She could not complete the sentence.

"I don't believe there is anything you can tell me that will alter my feelings toward you," he said firmly. "The barrier may be insurmountable, but my love is everlasting."

"I can only thank you, dear, and—love you with all my wretched heart."

"You are not pledged to some one else?"

"No."

"That's all I want to know," he said, with a deep breath. "I thought it might be—Leslie."

"No, no!" she cried out, and he caught a note of horror in her voice.

"Does he know this — this thing you can't tell me?" he demanded, a harsh note of jealousy in his voice.

She looked at him, hurt by his tone. "Sara knows," she said. "There is no one else. But you are not to question her. I demand it of you."

"I will wait for you to tell me," he said gently.

CHAPTER XII.

Sara Wrandall Finds the Truth.

Sara had kept the three Wrandalls over for luncheon.

"My dear," said Mrs. Redmond Wrandall, as she stood before Hetty's portrait at the end of the long living-room, "I must say that Brandon has succeeded in catching that lovely little something that makes her so—what shall I say?—so mysterious? Is that what I want? The word is as elusive as the expression."

"Subtle is the word you want, mother," said Vivian, standing beside Leslie, tall, slim and aristocratic, her hands behind her back, her manner one of absolute indifference. Vivian was more than handsome; she was striking.

"There isn't anything subtle about Hetty," said Sara, with a laugh. "She's quite ingenuous."

Leslie was pulling at his mustache, and frowning slightly. The sunburn on his nose and forehead had begun to peel off in chappy little flakes.

"Ripping likeness, though," was his comment.

"Oh, perfect," said his mother. "Really wonderful. It will make Brandon famous."

"She's so healthy-looking," said Vivian.

"English," remarked Leslie, as if that covered everything.

"Nonsense," cried the elder Mrs. Wrandall, lifting her lorgnette again. "Pure, honest, unmixed blood, that's what it is. There is birth in that girl's face."

"You're always talking about birth, mother," said her son sourly, as he turned away.

"It's a good thing to have," said his mother with conviction.

"It's an easy thing to get in America," said he, pulling out his cigarette case.

It was then that Sara prevailed upon them to stop for luncheon. "Hetty always takes these long walks in the morning, and she will be disappointed if she finds you haven't waited—"

"Oh, as for that—" began Leslie and stopped, but he could not have been more lucid if he had uttered the sentence in full.

"Why didn't you pick her up and bring her home with you?" asked Sara, as they moved off in the direction of the porch.

"She seemed to be taking Brandy out for his morning exercise," said he surlily. "Far be it from me to—Umph!"

Sara repressed the start of surprise. She thought Hetty was alone.

"She will bring him in for luncheon,

"She Doesn't Seem Especially Overjoyed to See Me."

I suppose," she said carelessly, although there was a slight contraction of the eyelids. "He is a privileged character."

It was long past the luncheon hour when Hetty came in, flushed and warm. She was alone, and she had been walking rapidly.

"Oh, I'm sorry to be so late," she apologized, darting a look of anxiety at Sara. "We grew careless with time. Am I shockingly late?"

She was shaking hands with Mrs. Redmond Wrandall as she spoke. Leslie and Vivian stood by, rigidly awaiting their turn. Neither appeared to be especially cordial.

"What is the passing of an hour, my dear," said the old lady, "to one who is young and can spare it?"

"I did not expect you—I mean to say, nothing was said about luncheon, was there, Sara?" She was in a pretty state of confusion.

"No," said Leslie, breaking in; "we butted in, that's all. How are you?" He clasped her hand and bent over it. She was regarding him with slightly dilated eyes. He misinterpreted the steady scrutiny. "Oh, it will all peel off in a day or two," he explained, going a shade redder.

"When did you return?" she asked. "I thought tomorrow was—"

"Leslie never has any tomorrows, Miss Castleton," explained Vivian. "He always does tomorrow's work today. That's why he never has any troubles ahead of him."

"What rot!" exclaimed Leslie.

"Where is Mr. Booth?" inquired Sara. "Wouldn't he come in, Hetty?"

"I—I didn't think to ask him to stop for luncheon,' she replied, and then hurried off to her room to make herself presentable.

Hetty was in a state of nervous excitement during the luncheon. The encounter with Booth had not resulted at all as she had fancied it would. She had betrayed herself in a most disconcerting manner, and now was more deeply involved than ever before. She had been determined at the outset, she had failed, and now he had a claim—an incontestable claim against her. She found it difficult to meet Sara's steady, questioning gaze. She wanted to be alone.

After luncheon, Leslie drew Sara aside.

"I must say she doesn't seem especially overjoyed to see me," he growled. "She's as cool as ice."

"What do you expect, Leslie?" she demanded with some asperity.

"I can't stand this much longer, Sara," he said. "Don't you see how things are going? She's losing her heart to Booth."

"I don't see how we can prevent it."

"By gad, I'll have another try at it—tonight. I say, has she said—anything?"

"She pities you," she said, a malicious joy in her soul. "That's akin to something else, you know."

"Confound it all, I don't want to be pitied!"

"Then I'd advise you to defer your 'try' at it," she remarked.

"I'm mad about her, Sara. I can't sleep, I can't think, I can't—yes, I can eat, but it doesn't taste right to me. I've just got to have it settled. Why, people are beginning to notice the change in me. They say all sorts of things. About my liver, and all that sort of thing. I'm going to settle it tonight. It's been nearly three weeks now. She's surely had time to think it over; how much better everything will be for her, and all that. She's no fool, Sara. And do you know what Vivian's doing this very instant over there in the corner? She's inviting her to spend a fortnight over at our place. If she comes—well, that means the engagement will be announced at once."

Sara did not marvel at his assurance in the face of what had gone before. She knew him too well. In spite of the original rebuff, he was thoroughly satisfied in his own mind that Hetty Castleton would not be such a fool as to refuse him the second time.

"It is barely possible, Leslie," she said, "that she may consider Brandon Booth quite as good a catch as you, and infinitely better looking at the present moment."

"It's this beastly sunburn," he lamented, rubbing his nose gently, thinking first of his person. An instant later he was thinking of the other half of the declaration. "That's just what I've been afraid of," he said. "I told you what would happen if that portrait nonsense went on forever. It's your fault, Sara."

"But I have reason to believe she will not accept him, if it goes so far as that. You are quite safe in that direction."

"Gad, I'd hate to risk it," he muttered. "I have a feeling she's in love with him."

Vivian approached. "Sara, you must let me have Miss Castleton for the first two weeks in July," she said serenely.

"I can't do it, Vivian," said the other promptly. "I can't bear the thought of being alone in this big old barn of a place. Nice of you to want her, but—"

"Oh, don't be selfish, Sara," cried Vivian.

"You don't know how much I depend on her," said Sara.

"I'd ask you over, too, dear, if there weren't so many others coming. I don't know where we're going to put them. You understand, don't you?"

"Perfectly," said her sister-in-law.

"But I've been counting on—Hetty."

"I say, Sara," broke in Leslie, "you could go up to Bar Harbor with the Williamsons at that time. Tell her about the invitation, Vivie."

"It isn't necessary," said Sara coldly. "I scarcely know the Williamsons." She hesitated an instant and then went on with sardonic dismay: "They're in trade, you know."

"That's nothing against 'em," protested he. "Awfully jolly people—really ripping. Ain't they, Viv?"

"I don't know them well enough to say," said Vivian, turning away. "I only know we're all snobs of the worst sort."

"Just a minute, Viv," he called out. "What does Miss Castleton say about coming?" It was an eager question. Much depended on the reply.

"I haven't asked her," said his sister succinctly. "How could I, without first consulting Sara?"

"Then you don't intend to ask her?"

"Certainly not."

After the Wrandalls had departed, Sara took Hetty off to her room. The girl knew what was coming.

"Hetty," said the older woman, facing her after she had closed the door of her boudoir, "what is going on between you and Brandon Booth? I must have the truth. Are you doing anything foolish?"

"Foolish? Heaven help me, no! It—it is a tragedy," cried Hetty, meeting her gaze with one of utter despair.

"What has happened? Tell me!"

"What am I to do, Sara darling? He—he has told me that he—he—"

"Loves you?"

"Yes."

"And you have told him that his love is returned?"

"I couldn't help it. I was carried away. I did not mean to let him see that I—"

"You are such a novice in the business of love," said Sara sneeringly. "You are in the habit of being carried away, I fear."

"Oh, Sara!"

"You must put a stop to all this at once. How can you think of marrying him, Hetty Glynn? Send him—"

"I do not intend to marry him," said the girl, suddenly calm and dignified.

"I am to draw but one conclusion, I suppose," said the other, regarding the girl intently.

"What do you mean?"

"Is it necessary to ask that question?"

The puzzled expression remained in the girl's eyes for a time, and then slowly gave way to one of absolute horror.

"How dare you suggest such a thing?" she cried, turning pale, then crimson. "How dare you?"

Sara laughed shortly. "Isn't the inference a natural one? You are forgetting yourself."

"I understand," said the girl, through pallid lips. Her eyes were dark with pain and misery. "You think I am altogether bad." She drooped perceptibly.

"You went to Burton's inn," sententiously.

"But, Sara, you must believe me. I did not know he was—married. For God's sake, do me the justice to—"

"But you went there with him," insisted the other, her eyes hard as steel. "It doesn't matter whether he was married—or free. You went."

Hetty threw herself upon her companion's breast and wound her strong arms about her.

"Sara, Sara, you must let me explain—you must let me tell you everything. Don't stop me! You have refused to hear my plea—"

"And I still refuse;" cried Sara, throwing her off angrily. "Good God, do you think I will listen to you? If you utter another word, I will—strangle you!"

Hetty shrank back, terrified. Slowly she moved backward in the direction of the door, never taking her eyes from the impassioned face of her protector.

"Don't, Sara, please don't!" she begged. "Don't look at me like that! I promise—I promise. Forgive me! I would not give you an instant's pain for all the world. You would suffer, you would—"

Sara suddenly put her hands over her eyes. A single moan escaped her lips—a hoarse gasp of pain.

"Dearest!" cried Hetty, springing to her side.

Sara threw her head up and met her with a cold, repelling look.

"Wait!" she commanded. "The time has come when you should know what is in my mind, and has been for months. It concerns you. I expect you to marry Leslie Wrandall."

Hetty stopped short.

"How can you jest with me, Sara?" she cried, suddenly indignant.

"I am not jesting," said Sara levelly.

"You—you—really mean—what you have just said?" The puzzled look gave way to one of revulsion. A great shudder swept over her.

"Leslie Wrandall must pay his brother's debt to you."

"My God!" fell from the girl's stiff lips. "You—you must be going mad—mad!"

Sara laughed softly. "I have meant it almost from the beginning," she said. "It came to my mind the day that Challis was buried. It has never been out of it for an instant since that day. Now you understand."

If she expected Hetty to fall into a fit of weeping, to collapse, to plead with her for mercy, she was soon to find herself mistaken. The girl straightened up suddenly and met her gaze with one in which there was the fierce determination. Her eyes were steady, her bosom heaved.

"And I have loved you so devotedly—so blindly," she said, in low tones of scorn. "You have been hating me all these months while I thought you were loving me. What a fool I have been! I might have known. You couldn't love me."

"When Leslie asks you tonight to marry him, you are to say that you will do so," said Sara, betraying no sign of having heard the bitter words.

"I shall refuse, Sara," said Hetty,

"If You Utter Another Word, I Will—Strangle You!"

every vestige of color gone from her face.

"There is an alternative," announced the other deliberately.

"You will expose me to—him? To his family?"

"I shall turn you over to them, to let them do what they will with you. If you go as his wife, the secret is safe. If not, they may have you as you really are, to destroy, to annihilate. Take your choice, my dear."

"And you, Sara?" asked the girl quietly. "What explanation will you have to offer for all these months of protection?"

Her companion stared. "Has the prospect no terror for you?"

BLAMES 'LOBBY' FOR DEPRESSION

WILSON DECLARES INTERESTS BEHIND EFFORT TO FORCE EARLY ADJOURNMENT.

CREATES MILD SENSATION

Wilson Makes Public Letters From Business Firms Urging Halt in Trust Action.

Washington. — President Wilson came out with a flat declaration that, despite what he characterized as a deliberate campaign by certain interests to secure adjournment of Congress and postponement of the administration's trust legislation program, he would use every influence at his command to get the pending bills through the Senate at this session.

Choosing his words carefully, the president disclosed his belief that organized distribution of circular letters and telegrams among business men, members of Congress and other public officials, calling for an adjournment of Congress, a halt in the trust bills, an increase in freight rates for the railroads, and a "rest for business" was responsible for what he recently described as a "psychological depression."

In support of that view, the White House made public copies of letters and telegrams brought in by friends of the administration. One letter was circulated by the Simmons Hardware Company of St. Louis, under date of June 9. Just prior to that date, President Wilson had offered to E. C. Simmons, president of that company, a place on the Federal reserve board, just before the President expressed his views on trust programme, it was announced that Mr. Simmons had declined the appointment and that Charles S. Hamlin of Boston would be nominated in his stead.

White House officials emphatically denied that the Simmons letter had to do with the declination of the appointment.

The president's declaration and the publication of the letters created a mild sensation approaching that which followed the president's denunciation of the "insidious lobbying" which, he said, was threatening the tariff bill last year. Senators and Representatives discussed the situation, but no action was taken.

One of the letters made public purported to have been sent out by the Pictorial Review Company of New York, and was signed by W. P. Ahnelt, president, under date of May 1. It accompanied a prepared letter protesting against trust legislation, praying for a freight rate increase and suggesting an adjournment of Congress, with the further suggestion that the recipient mail copies to the members of Congress, the interstate commerce commission and other officials in Washington. The letter signed by Ahnelt says that "prosperity has been lost somewhere in this country, owing to the mischievous activities of the politicians," and that the draft of an enclosed letter "embraces the views of a majority of the thinking business people of our section."

VIOLENT STORM VISITS PARIS.

Loss of Life and Enormous Damage to Property is Result.

Paris. — A thunderstorm of phenomenal violence raged over Paris for three hours. It caused loss of life and enormous damage to property. The rain flooded the streets and caused the bursting of sewers. In the central fashionable quarter of the city a street caved in, engulfing several pedestrians.

The number of victims is not known, owing to the danger of approaching the immense pits resulting from the collapse of sidewalks and roadways. The police estimate the victims at seven at least.

The most serious cave-in occurred at the junction of the Rue La Boetie and the Faubourg Saint -Homore. When the storm was at its height 500 square feet of the roadway sank, carrying with it a number of persons who had taken shelter under the awning of a cafe. Water spurted from the broken mains, and, added to the torrents from the skies, converted the whole district into a veritable river. Gas mains, telephone wires and electrical supply was broken off. The quarter was immediately isolated and large detachments of police were hastily summoned, but for a long time nothing could be done owing to the darkness. President Poincare sent a number of his miltary household to the scene, and troops were ordered to aid the police and firemen in their efforts at rescue.

About the same time a large section of the roadway in the Place Saint Augustin suddenly collapsed. A passing taxicab was engulfed. Eye-witnesses saw a woman's hand waving from the vehicle, and the head of the chauffeur as the taxicab disappeared. Almost immediately a great block of stone fell upon it. A large wagonette just missed the same fate.

Almost at the beginning of the storm the roadway at the junction of the Rue Tronchet, the Rue Auber and the Boulevard Huassmann, one of the busiest sections of Paris, disappeared.

PROSPEROUS YEAR ON FARMS IS PROMISED

Confidence in General Business Outlook Strengthened as Result.

New York. — Dun's weekly review of trade says:

Official promise of another prosperous year on the farms tends to strengthen confidence in the general business outlook. The government grain report this week made a splendid exhibit. With increased wealth from the soil, the purchasing power of the agricultural community will be enhanced; an enlarged railroad freight traffic is indicated by the bountiful harvests and, since funds here are in abundant supply, no difficulty should be experienced in financing the marketing of the crops.

In regard to the monetary situation, much significance has attached to recent developments; gold is still being drawn from this center in substantial volume without exertin gany material effect upon rates for accommodation.

Absence of uniformity continues to characterize trade advices but, considered in a broad sense, favorable reports predominate.

Failures this week are 294 against 259 last year, failures in Canada 33 against 39.

GOVERNMENT SURPLUS.

Income Will Exceed Expenditures by $30,000,000.

Washington. — Estimates by Secretary McAdoo indicated that the government income for the fiscal year ending June 30 will exceed ordinary expenses by about $30,000,000. This is about $10,000,000 less than last year's surplus. Income tax returns have fallen below original estimates but the customs houses turned in about $21,000,000 more than predicted. Whatever surplus there is will be absorbed by Panama canal payments, as it was last year.

Secretary McAdoo estimated that this year's ordinary receipts would aggregate $733,000,000 and the total ordinary disbursements $703,000,000. Total receipts for the last fiscal year were $723,782,921, with ordinary disbursements of $683,699,692.

"The ordinary internal revenue receipts will probably be about $311,000,000, a decrease of about $ 1,000,000 from the original estimate," said Secretary McAdoo, in a statement.

"The additional internal revenue receipts will probably amount to about $75,000,000, the total excise tax assessments to date against corporations is between $43,000,000 and $44,000,000, about $2,400,000 in excess of the estimate. The personal income tax assessments to date are $30,750,000, which is $3,250,000 less than the estimate. The total assessment on corporations and individual will be at least $75,000,000. The miscellaneous receipts will probably be about $56,000,000, a decrease of about $3,000,000 below the estimates.

"The department is convinced that many liable to the income tax have failed to make returns and that many have made inaccurate returns. Active steps will be taken to discover all evasions of the law and a large additional amount undoubtedly will be collected from these delinquents."

Two Killed and Seven Hurt.

San Bernardino, Cal. — Two passengers were killed and seven injured, some of them probably fatally, when the eastbound California limited of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe struck the rear end of a freight train at Bagdad, Cal., 160 miles east of here. Most of the dead and injured were in th edining car, which was demolished. The freight was entering the yards at Bagdad, when the limited overtook and ran into it.

Will Not Celebrate Battle.

Petersburg, Va. — Plans for celebratin gthe fiftieth anniversary of the battle of the Crater on July 30, were abandoned. No reason was given for the decision of the local camp, Sons of Confederate Veterans, which had arranged for the celebration.

Big Volcano Eruption.

Redding, Cal. — The fourth and greatest eruption of steam and smoke from the new opening near the peak of Mount Lassen, at the foot of the Shasta range, occurred today.

Irving Fletcher, the well-known advertising expert, said at an advertising men's dinner at Delmonico's in New York:

"A good advertisement never lies. It never deceives. For it can only pay by making life patrons, not transient ones.

"A good advertisement never lies, but it states its case as strongly as possible, and it avails itself of every point, however slight. There it is like young Jones.

"Young Jones proposed at Lakewood to a pretty girl, but she said uncertainly, swinging her slim foot in and out of her slashed skirt:

"'I like you, Mr. Jones. But, then, I like Mr. Brown, too. And Mr. Brown is so devoted. He says he thinks of me 365 days in the year.'

"'Huh!' snorted young Jones, contemptuously. 'He wants a day off every four years, does he? Well, I hope you're not taken in by any such one-horse devotion as that.'"

IT MAKES SICK SKINS WELL

No matter how long you have been tortured and disfigured by itching, burning, raw or scaly skin humors, just put a little of that soothing, antiseptic resinol ointment on the sores and the suffering stops right there! Healing begins that very minute, and in almost every case your skin gets well so quickly you feel ashamed of the money you threw away on tedious, useless treatments.

Resinol ointment and resinol soap clear away pimples, blackheads, and dandruff; great for sunburn and insect bites. Sold by all druggists.—Adv.

Skimpy.

A contribution to the American Magazine tells the following story:

"A clerk in one of the great jewelry stores on Fifth avenue in New York city exhibited to a rich and weary customer a lady's handbag, five inches square, made of platinum and fairly well covered on one side only with diamonds. The price was $9,000. The fact that one side only was covered with diamonds troubled the customer. Turning the handbag around and around, and looking at it from all sides over and over, he finally said, 'Very pretty—really. But I don't like one side without diamonds. Honestly, the thing looks skimpy—rather skimpy.' At an additional expense of $7,000 this difficulty was removed."

A Real Need.

A Frenchman named Delamoy has invented an apparatus whereby you can wind your clock by opening and shutting a door, the winding machine doing its work by the action of the door.

What is really needed, however, is an invention that, attached to a door, will get rid of people inside of the room. No known method has yet been invented to accomplish this purpose. Yet is there anything which would promote greater efficiency and comfort and give more lasting satisfaction?—Life.

Parson Had to Protest.

Towards the end of a long life old Mr. Barleycorn, a well-known brewer in a quiet old town, joined the church, so with a view to their eternal welfare he made it a custom for his workmen and draymen to turn up on Sunday morning at the brewery, all dressed in their best smocks and top hats, when he would march along with them to church. This had been going on for some time, when one day the parson met him, and, after stopping to chat, mentioned at parting, "Oh, by the way, Mr. B., I do wish you would cease bringing your men to my church; they snore so that I can't hear myself preach."

The Source of Uric Acid

Eating too much is a common habit that does a lot of harm. Meat, especially, forms uric acid and the constant filtering of acid-laden blood weakens the kidneys. Uric acid causes rheumatic and nervous trouble, weakens the eyes, forms gravel and leads to dropsy and Bright's disease. Kidney weakness gives early warnings, however, such as backache and urinary disorders and can be stopped by prompt treatment.

Use Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended and most widely used kidney remedy.

An Alabama Case

"In 1911, I had kidney and rheumatic trouble," says Mrs. W. D. Gossett, of 217 S. Jackson St., Mobile, Ala. "The pains in my back, hips and limbs kept getting worse until I was confined to my room for a month at a time. I was as helpless as a child. My limbs drew up so that I couldn't get them down again. My joints were so stiff I couldn't move them. Soon after I used Doan's Kidney Pills, I picked up and before long, they cured me."

Ernest Mahan Died Wednesday

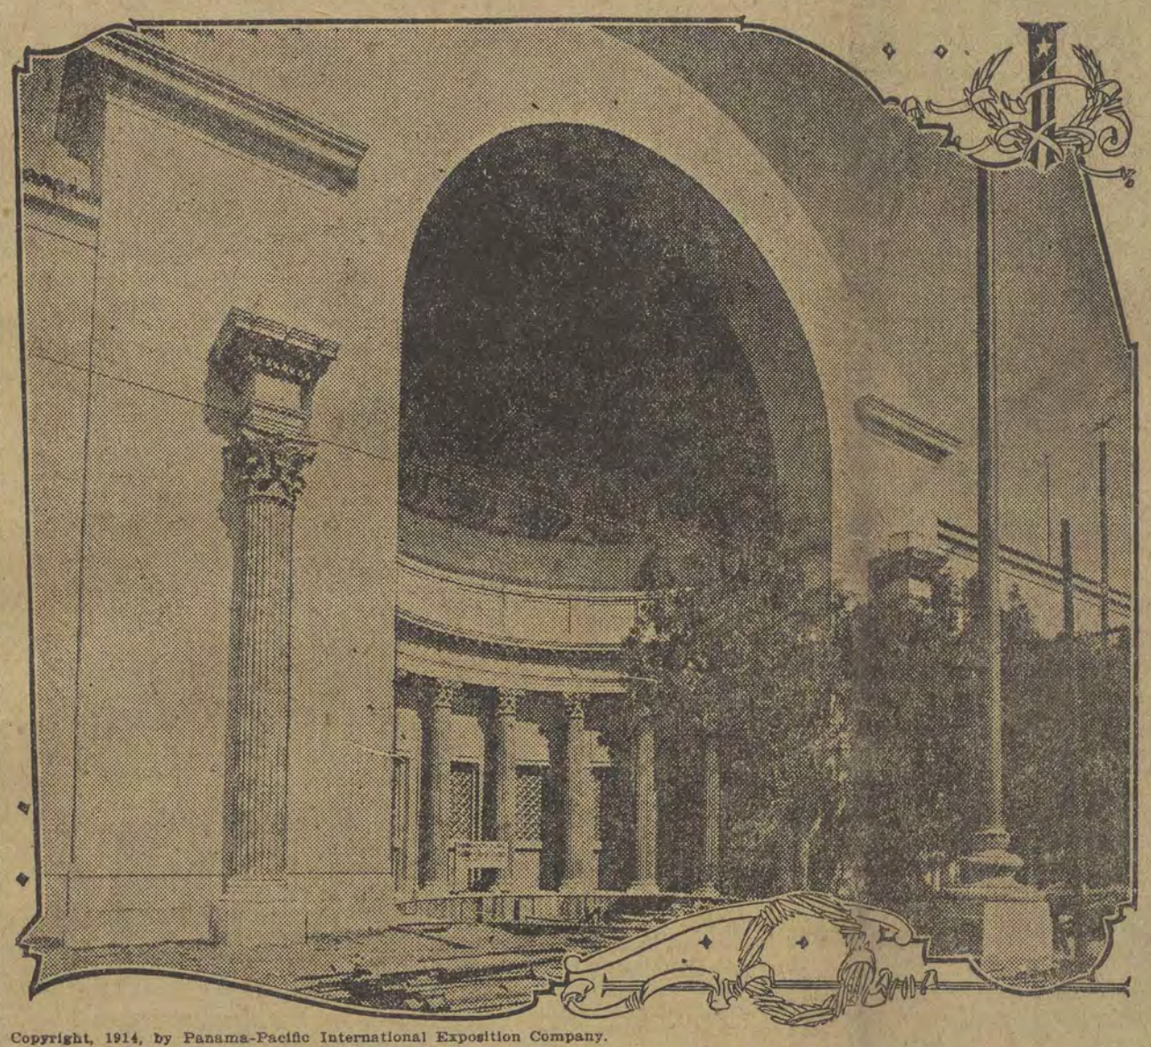
On last Wednesday night Mr. Ernest Mahan, a young married man well known in Clanton and vicinity, after a siege of forty days with typhoid fever, succumbed to his illness, and passed into the great mystery land of the beyond, from whose bourne no traveler ever returneth.

Mr. Mahan was a promising young business man of Clanton. He lived at his new home recently completed in the Gowan addition. Only a few months ago he was married to Miss Knowlton Marcus. His remains were intered in the Clanton cemetery Thursday afternoon by the members of the local camp of W. O. W. of which he was a member.

Clanton, Ala., June 22, 1914.

Editor Union - Banner: — Our High School is now a reality, and will open January 1, 1915. As one who has championed its cause zealously, I want to insist that everyone get behind the school and do his part toward making it the best county school in the state. It is a county institution and belongs to the citizens of the county, and no one should withhold his encouragement from it. During my espousal of the cause doubtless some ascribed to me selfish motives, but I feel that now is the proper time to so change their minds. My contention has all along been that the county was not only failing to do her duty to her growing generation, but her lethargy was an open discrimination against her boys and girls. Without a murmur she was paying her tax money for the maintenance of a system of high schools in the other counties of the state and at the same time taking no steps toward establishing a home institution. My first contention was that the home boy should have fair treatment, and that the county should take some part in seeing that he got it by doing like a majority of the other counties had done in assisting toward the erection of a suitable building. Being sustained in this, the next contention was to have the school located where it would do the greatest good to the greatest number; therefore Clanton's location and natural advantages led me to believe that here was the proper place, so I submitted Clanton's claims without mentioning the disadvantages of other places.

Being again sustained, I now disclaim any selfish desires on my part to reap any personal benefits from the school; and when the time comes to select a principal my name shall not be used with my consent.



Trusting that all, those who have been successful and those that have been unsuccessful in their contentions will take an unselfish interest in the school, I am,

Yours respectfully,
J. J. Pickens.

The height to the top of the half-dome is 110 feet.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please give me space in your paper to say a few words, as there is no one writing from this place now. Health is very good except Mr. L. M. Brantley who was sent to the infirmary at Birmingham for an operation for appendicitis.

The Sunday school is still the go, but we would like to see a greater interest taken by the old people; we would like for them to come and see whether their children are in Sunday school or out with some bad boys who do not care for the Sunday school. Remember the training of your children will mean a whole lot in the future.

Rev. Sam Henderson filled his regular appointment here Saturday night and Sunday and delivered some very interesting sermons. He will preach here again the Second Sunday in July. Also there is going to be an all day singing on that day. Everybody is invited to come and bring all the good singers you can. Prof. C. N. Oden will be there, and also Prof. J. M. Franklin is invited. We expect to have a large crowd on that day and some good singing. If you love good music be sure and come.

Miss Suder Hammonds from Coosa county is visiting her sister Mrs. J. W. Prim near here.

Come on all you good writers and let's make the news ring from every corner.

All Day Singing

There will be an all day singing at Samaria Sunday, June 28. Everybody except those who expect to drink whiskey and misbehave are cordially invited to come and bring your song books and baskets well filled. Will use the books, "Songs and Hymns," and the "Perrennial Praise." We are expecting some of the best singers in the county, and hope to make the day enjoyable to all.

Editor Union - Banner:— Will you allow me a small space to say a few words in your valuable paper? Health of this community is fairly good now.

Miss Bestie Lambert passed away to the sweet beyond on the 11th of June. She was a kind, good and Christian woman. She had been sick in bed four years when the Lord saw fit to call her away from this trouble to a better world. Weep not relatives and friends for she is at rest with the angels, but prepare to meet her in the sweet bye and bye. We do not feel that we could say a word to ease your aching hearts.

Our Sunday school is started up again at this place. Let's all pull together and see if we can't have a good Sunday school.

County Farmers Union Meeting

The Farmers Union of the Chilton county division will hold its meeting with Union Grove Local No. 186, beginning Wednesday, July 1, and continuing for three days. We expect to have speakers from all parts of the state. Delegates and others will get off at Jemison where they will be met by conveyances. Union Grove is five miles east of Jemison. The first day will be public and everyone who is interested in better farming is invited to attend and hear the lectures, and also visit the most up-to-date farming community in our county.

STATE BULL MOOSE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING IN BIRMINGHAM TUESDAY

SPIRITED SESSION OF STATE LEADERS AT TUTWILER HOTEL. IMPORTANT RESOLUTIONS PASSED---ARRANGED FOR A BIG STATE CONVENTION.

The meeting of the state executive committee of the Progressive party at the new Tutwiler hotel in Birmingham Tuesday was well attended by representatives and leaders of the Bull Moose from all over the state. Much interest was shown in the meeting and a spirited session it was throughout.

Hon. R. A. Perryman occupied the chair and G. S. O'Bear acted as Secretary. The Chairman called the meeting at 1 o'clock, and the business of the session was entered into. Vacancies on the committee from the first, fourth and ninth districts filled.

The matter of fusion with other parties was taken up, and entailed much debate. A resolution was offered on the matter by Secretary O'Bear, the gist of which was, "We, the Progressives, neither desire nor invite, nor will tolerate amalgamation, fusion, nor co-operation with any other party." Judge Oscar R. Hundley spoke vigorously against the adoption of that clause. Judge Reynolds made an effort at pacification by offering a substitute for the measure under discussion. After much debate from different points of view regarding the resolution offered by Mr. O'Bear it was amended by Judge A. P. Longshore as follows, and adopted by the committee:

"Resolved, that we determine that the Progressive party is the party of the people and shall ever live to do battle for a preservation of the constitution and the rights of oll Americans;

"Resolved, that we extend an invitating hand of membership in our party to all men who earnestly and honestly desire a purification of the ballot box and progress as the watchword of the people, and will advocate this co-operation."

Action regarding a state convention was left to a committee named by Chairman R. A. Perryman. This committee, which follows, will name the date and proclaim the basis of representation: L. H. Reynolds, Sid Berry, John M. Greene, J. B. Doughtry, W. L. Hollingsworth, John Alexander, Duncan McDonald, Sumter Cogswell, Will Cothrane, H. H. Snell, Chariman Perryman, and Secretary O'Bear.

Union Springs

The singing here Sunday was good and largely attended. First song by Mr. Armstrong. Prayer by Rev. J. N. Scott. Then Mr. Hodgens was called to the floor. Then Mr. Martin of Center Hill, followed by Mr. Lawley and Mr. VanDerveer of Monteyallo.

The first cotton bloom of the season here was found by Mr. W. H. Mahan on his farm.

Mr. Ray of the Southern railroad, accompanied by his lady, attended singing here Sunday.

Some of the Union Springs people went to Shady Grove, Bibb county, to the singing last Saturday.

Prof. Lawley is expecting to teach a music school here in August.

Robert and Thomas Waldrup of Marvel attended singing here Sunday.

Mrs. Culvert of Florida is visiting her father, Mr. Russ.

The high cost of living goes on. Is the Underwood tariff a failure?

ADVISES JUDGES TO OBEY COMMITTEE

BRICKELL SAYS MANDATE OF DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE SHOULD BE OBSERVED.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Probate Judge of the Third Congressional district should be guided by the mandates of the State Democratic executive committee in the matter of placing the name of J. J. Speight of Eufaula on the official ballots of the special election of June 29 which was called to elect a successor to Henry D. Clayton, according to an opinion rendered by Attorney General Robert C. Brickett.

This opinion was rendered at the request of Probate Judge J. T. Norman, of Bullock county, who raised the question through Cyrus B. Brown, Secretary of State. General Brickell ruled that the probate judges should communicate with the chairman of the State Democratic committee in case of doubt as to a candidate's name appearing on a ballot and after certifying the matter to the chairman should be guided by the ruling of the committee.

General Brickell cited Section 377 of the Code to support his rulinng. It is probable that the probate judges will follow the request of the State committee and place the names of both Mr. Speight and Mr. Mulkey on the ticket under the Democratic emblem.

Speight's Nomination Annulled.

Nomination of J. J. Speight as democratic candidate for Congress in the Third district by the Third district congressional committee was declared null and void by the state democratic executive committee at its meeting held here. Resolutions were adopted by the state committee requesting the probate judge of the various counties of the Third district to place the name of Speight and W. O. Mulkey of Geneva on the tickets as candidates. The request was also made by the committee that any democrat in the district be permitted to run.

The decision was reached after four hours of debate in which almost every member of the committee took part, and in which several able speeches were delivered by attorneys representing Mr. Speight and Mr. Mulkey, the two contestants before the committee.

At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Speight announced that he will at once inauguarate a vigorous campaign for the position as congressman from the Third district. Mr. Mulkey will also make an active fight for the job.

Weevils in Large Numbers.

Capt. John C. Cheney, chief clerk in the office of commissioner of agriculture, has returned from a week's trip in the boll weevil district investigating the ravages of this destructive pest. The counties visited by Capt. Cheney are Mobile, Washington, Choctaw, Escambia, Baldwin, Conecuh and Butler, where he found the weevil in alarming numbers. This shows, according to Capt. Cheney, that the winter was so mild that the weather conditons favored the nursing of the wintered weevills in his hibernating state.

Shipp Relieved of Charges.

T. E. Shipp, former sheriff of Morgan county, was relieved of charges against him amounting to about $6000 by the state board of compromises. The charges against the former sheriff were technical ones growing out of the loss of commitments in which cases feed bills were charged.

Mr. Shipp produced evidence to show that the commitments were in his office at the time the plastering fell and that in cleaning out the debris the commitments were lost or destroyed.

Money for Florence Normal.

The governor released an appropriation of $12,500 to the state normal school of Florence. This money is the third quarter of an appropriation of $50,000, made by the last legislature, for the purpose of building a new dormitory at the Florence school.

This appropriation was made upon the condition that $15,000 be raised by the city of Florence. The city raised the portion of money for the new dormitory and the state has paid $25,000 on the building.

Decision in Liquor Case.

Liquor may be shipped from one wet county to another wet county in Alabama, irrespective of whether the consignee is a licensed liquor dealer, according to a decision of the supreme court in affirming a ruling of Judge Gaston Gunter of the Montgomery city court in the case of the Southern Express company vs. I. Brickman. The lengthy opinion by Justice deGraffenreid says Judge Gunter was correct in holding that the liquor might be legally shipped.

Assessments in Cities High.

For the first time in the history of Alabama, town and city property is assessed for more money than the lands lying outside of municipalities, according to a statement issued by Major J. T. Gorman, examiner of public accounts, who has compiled some interesting figures on tax assessments in this State. Jefferson County is the richest county in Alabama and Winston has the lowest assessments, according to the statement of the examiner.

Major Gorman's statement is as follows:

"Alabama contains 51,278 square miles of land and 719 of water, making a total of 51,998 square miles. This makes 32,818,560 acres of land in the State.

"In 1912 there were 33,643,419 acres of land assessed in the State for taxation, at a valuation of $181,243,313, an average of $5.38 per acre. The assessment for 1913 is no tyet available. The assessment of property for taxation in Alabama is on a 60 per cent. valuation.

"On a 100 per cent. valuation, the assessment of lands in 1912 would have been $302,072,140, an average of $8.95 per acre. The assessment for 1912 shows that there were 824,859 acres more assessed than there are acres in the State.

"This is caused by the fact that in Jefferson and other counties in the mineral section, there are frequently double assessments of land, one party being assessed for the surface rights and another for the mineral rights. There are thousands of acres of land in the State upon which towns and cities are built, that are assessed as lots, and not as acres.

"There are hundreds of thousands of acres of land owned by the State, by the United States, and by educational and denominational institutions that are not assessed at all. For purposes of taxation there are three general divisions of property, lands, town property and personal property.

"For 1912 these items were assessed for taxation on a 60 per cent. valuation as follows:

Lands	$181,224,313
Town property	195,028,754
Personal property	222,132,461
Total	$598,385,528

"On a 100 per cent. valuation the assessment of these items would have been as follows:

Lands	$302,072,140
Town property	325,047,920
Personal property	370,022,076
Total	$997,142,136

"This is $397,756,608, more than the valuation on a 60 per cent. assessment, and would be the actual value of property in the State, if the assessment is correct.

"For the first time in the history of Alabama, in 1912, town property was assessed for more than the lands. On a 60 per cent. valuation the town property was worth $13,804,441 more than the lands, which would be $23,007,400 more on a 100 per cent. valuation.

"This shows more improvement, development and investment of capital in the towns and cities than in the lands.

"It is estimated that at present Alabama has a population of 2,250,000. On a $997,142,136 valuation this shows $448 per capita for every man, woman and child in the State. Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery are the three wealthiest and most populous counties in Alabama. In 1910 their area in square miles, acres of land and population, were as follows:

	Area.	Acres.	Popul'n.
Jefferson	1,092	698,880	226,476
Mobile	1,234	789,760	80,854
Montgomery	772	494,080	82,127

"In 1913 the assessments in these counties on a 60 per cent. valuation were as follows:

Jefferson.

1,446,836 acres of land	$ 9,722,438
Town property	75,438,184
Personal property	42,301,841
Total	$127,462,463

Mobile.

687,903 acres of land	$ 6,421,146
Town property	24,602,930
Personal property	13,213,387
Total	$44,237,463

Montgomery.

503,417 acres of land	$ 4,792,315
Town property	17,991,994
Personal property	10,835,635
Total	$33,619,944

"On a 100 per cent. valuation the assessments would be as follows:

Jefferson	$212,429,105
Mobile	73,697,435
Montgomery	56,033,155

"The total assessment of Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery counties is $205,199,870.

"On a 10 per cent. valuation, the per capita for each man, woman and child in Jefferson, Mobile and Montgomery counties, is as follows:

Jefferson	$938
Mobile	911
Montgomery	681

"Winston has the smallest assessment of any county in the State, $2,270,755. The 430,643 acres of land in that county are assessed for $1,117,656, an average of $2.59 per acre. Winston has the smallest population, 12,855, of any county in the State, and the per capita is $290.

"In 1912 lands in Madison County were assessed for a little over $9 per acre, the highest in the State.

"In 1913 lands in Montgomery county were assessed at average of $8.52 per acre, which on a 100 per cent. valuation would be $14.20 per acre."

ANIMAL TRAINER KILLED BY LIONS

AGED LIONESS TRIED TO PROTECT MASTER FROM ATTACK. FIGHT WAGED IN BOX CAR.

TRAGEDY WAS IN CHICAGO

Hot Weather and Lack of Food Is Blamed for Viciousness of Lions, Aged Lioness Who Tried to Save Man Swept Aside.

Chicago.—Set upon by five angry, half-famished lions, unarmed and with an aged lioness as his only protector, Emmerson D. Dietrich of Brooklyn, N. Y., a Cornell graduate and manager of a trained animal act, fought a thrilling but futile battle for his life in a box car in the yards of the Santa Fe railroad at Clarke and Sixteenth streets.

Before aid could reach him Dietrich had practically been torn to bits by the infuriated lions, which crouched over the bleeding body, refusing to permit it to be dragged from the cage until they had been forced away by the fumes of formaldehyde. Nearly every bone in Dietrich's body had been broken and it had been gored beyond recognition by the beasts.

While the lions were tearing Dietrich's limbs, his fiancee, a real animal trainer in charge of the beasts, was telling Cy de Vry, head animal keeper at Lincoln Park, that her lions were the tamest in captivity and were not dangerous. A telephone message informing her of the tragedy interrupted her remarks to de Vry.

Dietrich was manager of the animal act called "Mlle. Adgie's Performing Lions" and was engaged to the lion tamer. They were to be married at Atlantic City, where they were to open for performances next week.

NINE AVIATORS ARE KILLED

Austrian Aeroplane Hits Dirigible While Carrying on Mimic War in Air—Nine Die.

Vienna.—Nine burned and mutilated bodies, the splintered fragments of an aeroplane and the charred remnants of a big dirigible balloon are the mute records of one of the most tragic, certainly the most sensational, disasters which have occurred since man learned to fly. The catastrophe, which resulted in the death of all concerned, nine officers and men, followed a mimic attack by the aeroplane on the dirigible at a great height during the Austrian maneuvers, and served to show, more than any previous accidents to flying machines have done, the horrors that would be likely to attend aerial warfare.

The dirigible military balloon Koertling left Fischamend, eleven miles from Vienna, manned by Capt. Johann Hauswirth, in command, Lieut. Ernst Hofstetter, Lieut. Bruer, Lieut. Haidinger, Corporal Hadima, Corporal Weber and Engineer Kammerer. At the elapse of half an hour a military bi-plane, with Lieut. Flatz and Lieut. Hoosta aboard, started in pursuit.

Meanwhile, the balloon continued to rise until it was about 1,300 feet from the ground. The aeroplane, at a still greater height, maneuvered until it appeared to be nearly over the airship. Then it began its descent. It was the evident intention of the pilot of the aeroplane to take up a position directly above the dirigible, within striking distance, but owing either to a fatal miscalculation of distance or speed, the nose of the bi-plane struck the envelope of the airship and ripped it wide open.

A tremendous explosion followed, the balloon burst into flames, which enveloped the bi-plane, and in a moment the wreckage began to drop, crashing at length like lead to the slope of a hill.

The envelope of the balloon still was burning when it struck the ground. Lieut. Flatz, when extricated from the wreckage of the aeroplane, showed faint signs of life, but almost immediately he expired. All the others were killed.

Twelve Drown in Canal.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Twelve persons, most of them women and children, were drowned in the Oswego canal when a launch on which they were riding struck a log and capsized.

The disaster occurred south of Mud Lock, near Onondaga lake, in an isolated region. There were nineteen passengers on the vessel, and seven of these reached the canal bank safely. They were on their way home after a day spent at the lake resorts.

Nordica Funeral.

London.—Funeral services for Mme. Lillian Nordica, the singer, who died recently in Batavia, Java, will be held in the King's Weigh House church, Grosvenor square, where Mme. Nordica and George W. Young of New York were married five years ago. The body will be cremated in Golder's Green cemetery.

200 Have Close Call.

Liege, Belgium.—Two hundred coal miners narrowly escaped death in the Vieille Marihaye colliery near here, when fire penned them inside.

CAPTAIN KENDALL

Captain Kendall was commander of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland, which sank in the St. Lawrence after collision with a collier. He was saved.

BIG GAS BAG IS WRECKED

Balloonist Turns Up in Bad Shape Last Two Men, Thought Lost, Arrive at Rangers' Camp.

Portland, Ore.—Roy Donaldson and Wilbur Henderson, pilot and aide of the balloon Springfield, are safe. The men for whom rangers and searching parties have been combing the woods for days, staggered into the forest rangers' camp at Walker's Prairie.

With the safe arrival of those two men, all the aeronauts who, with the four balloons, took part in the long distance race here last week, have been accounted for. The balloonists encountered stormy weather and two balloons were struck by lightning in the clouds. Three balloons, including the Million Population, of St. Louis, which fell into a tree, were accounted for previously.

The Springfield was forced to descend on a rocky slope of Table mountain, about eighteen miles on a direct line from Walker's Prairie ranger station. The aeronauts had wandered about, living on half rations and uncooked food. Donaldson said the balloon was wrecked.

Homer Williams and A. Mitchel, forest guards, stationed at Walker's Prairie, were astonished when the two aeronauts staggered up one of the paths leading from a nearby creek and fell exhausted at the cabin door. Their clothing was in shreds.

PROSECUTE BANK OFFICIALS

Lorimer and Munday Will Be Charged With Looting La Salle Street Bank—"Loans" to Employes.

Springfield, Ill.—Former Senator William Lorimer and his banker-politician partner, C. B. Munday, will be prosecuted criminally for looting the LaSalle Street Trust & Savings bank and correspondent banks.

A petition for the appointment of a receiver for the LaSalle Street institution was filed in the circuit court of Cook county and the receiver will prepare the record on which the prosecution will be based.

The receiver will begin his investigation with the record of Bank Examiner Daniel V. Harkin, indicating that the loot in the LaSalle Street institution alone amounts to between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000. The report of Examiner Harkin reveals "loans" made by Lorimer and Munday to companies which they controlled, and to the employes, which totaled $1,250,000. As security for these loans Munday and Lorimer left in the bank personal notes, the notes and bonds of tottering corporations and other collateral listed as being worth $30,000, but estimated by State Auditor James J. Brady as being worth $15,000.

Insanity Increases.

New York.—Dr. A. J. Rasanoff of King's Park hospital for the Insane, in a paper read at the second annual conference of the Eugenics Research association, asserted the number of insane persons in American institutions trebled in forty years.

Ships Collide in Channel.

Southampton.—The North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II. which left Southampton for New York with a thousand passengers, is anchored off Netley, three miles to the southeast, with a big hole in her side amidships, caused by a collision with the Liverpool grain steamer Incemore from a Black Sea port for Antwerp.

The Incemore, a smaller craft than the German steamer, is in dock here with her bow badly smashed.

Trustees Meet.

Lexington, Va.—Trustees of Washington and Lee university elected Holden Bovee Schermerhorn of New York professor of law. Franklin L. Riley of the University of Mississippi will head the history department.

Beard Sentenced.

Ironton, Ohio.—Harley Beard, 19, was sentenced to die in the electric chair October 2, for the murder of Mrs. Nancy Massie, her daughter, Mary, and son, Robert, at Greasy Ridge, near here, May 13.

STOCKHOLDERS ARE JOINT DEFENDANTS

CHICAGO PETITION ASKING RECEIVER FOR LORIMER BANK SAYS OFFICERS LIABLE.

OFFICERS WERE NEGLIGENT

Attorney-General Bases His Request Upon Report of the State Examiner Regarding Cause of Closing Institutions.

Chicago.—Naming all stockholders as party defendants, asking the court to enforce their stock liability, adding that the officers and directors of the bank were culpably negligent and therefore were liable to depositors and creditors for all losses sustained, the petition filed here asking for the appointment of a receiver for the LaSalle Street bank, was scheduled to be heard in court here.

Two petitions for a receiver were filed. The first, filed by Desidor L. Tarjan, as receiver for a syndicate having deposits in the bank, Judge O'Connor, in superior court, refused to consider. The second petition was filed by Attorney-General Patrick J. Lucey.

The petition was based on the report of the state examiner, showing a depleted condition of the bank's assets.

Based on the report of D. V. Harkin, the bank examiner, who closed the LaSalle street bank, the petition recites that the institution was "wholly and irretrievably insolvent," and that immediate appointment of a receiver was necessary to conserve the remaining assets.

Particular attention was directed to loans made to various Lorimer-Munday enterprises which the examiner found were largely financed by the LaSalle street bank, and to which, according to the petition, large loans improperly secured were made.

200 KILLED BY EXPLOSION

Hillcrest Collieries Mine Blows Up, Killing 200—350 Make Their Escape From Mines.

Lethbridge, Alberta.—A mighty explosion entombed 250 miners employed in mine No. 20 of the Hillcrest Collieries, Ltd. Of fifty miners rescued only four were living.

Despite the efforts of two-score mine experts laboring amid the poisoned gases and debris, hope of rescuing alive the 200 men yet in the mine was remote.

The effects of the disaster were:

Men in mine when explosion occurred, 600, of whom 350 escaped.

Number rescued, 50, of whom 46 died later.

Miners still entombed, 200, probably killed by fire, which followed the explosion.

At dusk a group of women stood at the mouth of the mine, which had been closed by the explosion, still hopeful that the cries for help that issued from the inner workings might be repeated. Later, however, many of the women dispersed, expressing the general feling that the situation of those imprisoned was hopeless.

The explosion shook the countryside, lifted roofs from many cabins and demolished numerous small buildings. A moment after the explosion a score of panic-stricken surface workers rushed from the mine, followed by a dense cloud of smoke and poisonous fumes.

SYNDICATE BACKS CHOCTAWS

Muskogee, Okla.—Evidence has been submitted to a sub-Indian committee of the committee on Indian affairs, of which Congressman Charles D. Carter is chairman, showing that a company has been organized in Texas and Oklahoma, with the principal stockholders in Houston, Tex., to finance the fight of Mississippi Choctaw claimants to lands in Oklahoma, under a bill introduced in congress by Representative Harrison of Missisippi, and if they win their share in the profits will be $6,338,000, while the total amount to be paid the Indians under contract with this company would be $19,116,000.

Test $26,000,000 Bonds.

St. Louis.—Plans of the receivers of the St. Louis & San Francisco railroad to test the liability of the Frisco for bonds of $26,000,000 issued by the New Orleans, Texas & Mexico railroad became known here, and were confirmed by John E. Johnson and Loomis Johnson, attorneys for the receivers.

No Rate Ruling.

Washington.—The interstate commerce commission's decision in the eastern advance rate cases will not be announced.

Three Drown.

London.—Three men were drowned and it is feared a dozen other persons perished when a passenger train from Perth went through a culvert at Carr bridge, twenty-eight miles south of Inverness, Scotland.

Doubtful Betterment.

Baltimore.—"In the 350 years since Shakespeare we have progressed from dirty bodies and clean minds to clean bodies and dirty minds—a doubtful betterment," said Dr. James Walsh of New York.

BARONESS MONCHEUR

Baroness Moncheur, daughter of Gen. Powell Clayton of Arkansas and Washington and wife of the Belgian minister to Turkey, is making her annual visit to her parents.

HAS $500,000,000 ON HAND

Comptroller of Currency Says That Amount Is Ready for Farmers Under Federal Reserve Act.

Washington.—Comptroller of the Currency Williams estimates that about $500,000,000 in national banks throughout the United States is available for farm mortgage loans under the provision of the federal reserve act, making it possible for national banking associations to lend money on improved farm lands.

Scores of inquiries concerning this provision reach the treasury department daily, and there does not seem to be a general understanding that the farm loan clause of the act is now in force, and makes it possible for national banks to make farm loans before the formal organization of the federal reserve board.

The estimate of Comptroller Williams is based on reports showing the capital stock and surplus of national banks to be $1,777,000,000. Twenty-five per cent of this amount, or $444,250,000, is available for farm loans. Furthermore, the federal reserve act provides that national banks may grant farm loans up to 33 1-3 per cent of their time deposits. Banks with large deposits will be able to far exceed the sum they could lend on farms under the 25 per cent clause, and the estimate of Mr. Williams is believed to be conservative.

Farm loans under this act are not to be made for longer than five years, and the amount of each loan is not to exceed 50 per cent of the actual value of the farm offered as security.

ROOSEVELT WILL RUN AGAIN

Says He Will Not Be Candidate for Governor or Senator—Will Not Be Sidetracked.

Southampton.—Even sooner than was anticipated Col. Roosevelt "boiled over" and in an interview just before sailing for America aboard the Imperator, announced some of the most important things he will and will not do on his arrival in New York.

Briefly summarized, here are his intentions and his reasons therefor. He will not:

Run for the governorship of New York, because he has not time to be sidetracked in Albany again.

Accept nomination for the United States senatorship, because the suggestion is palpably preposterous.

Make any speech-making campaign for any party or individual, himself included, because his physician will not let him—but

He will accept the progressive party's nomination for the presidency, because he is convinced the country is in a most unhealthy state and he feels that the majority of the men of the nation want him to cure it.

$85,000 Missing.

Pittsburgh.—It became known that many detectives are searching for $85,000 which mysteriously disappeared from a deposit box in the Colonial Trust company of this city.

Asquith Has Capitulated.

London.—Premier Asquith has capitulated to the suffragettes. He has consented to receive a deputation of East End working women in Downing street.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst's attempt to carry out her threat of a hunger strike at the entrance to the house of commons until the premier yielded to the demand that he listen to a delegation of women was largely responsible for the prime minister's decision.

Protect "Dry" States.

Washington.—Constitutional amendment designed to protect "dry" states was introduced by Senator Dillingham of Vermont. Instead of prohibiting the sale he would merely prohibit the transportation of liquor.

Slayer Notifies Police.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—"I have killed a man out here; send an undertaker to get him," was the telephone message D. S. Craddock sent to the police station, after he had shot and killed Clyde Hollenbeck.

LESSONS IN DOMESTIC SCIENCE

Prepared by the

Agricultural Department
WASHINGTON, D. C.

MILK AS A TISSUE-FORMING FOOD.

Few people realize how much nourishment there is in milk, particularly how much tissue-forming material there is in it. They realize that it is rich in fat because they see cream rise upon it and know that it is made into butter, but of the fact that it is an important tissue former they often lose sight. It happens that by far the greater part of the tissue-forming materials remain in the milk after it is skimmed or after the butter is removed from it, so for the purpose of building up the body skim milk counts for as much as an equal volume of whole milk and buttermilk is not far behind.

Milk does not appear to be very nourishing, probably because it is a liquid, while most other foods are solids. As a matter of fact, it is not a concentrated food, and if a person should try to substitute it for meat and to take only as much by weight as he does of the meat he would get very little nourishment. But think! It takes only two glasses of milk to weigh a pound, and many a person takes as much as this at a meal, while he would never eat a pound of meat. So, while milk has a small percentage of protein, as the tissue-builders of the food are sometimes called, it counts up in the long run because of the large quantities of it which a person naturally takes.

If you want to get an idea of how much protein there is in milk as compared with some other common foods, set side by side a glass of milk (one-fourth of a quart), a medium-sized egg (two ounces), a small ball of chopped meat (one and a quarter ounces of boneless, medium fat beef, mutton, pork, or other meat. Make 13 balls of equal size out of a pound of meat and you will get about the right amount), a piece of cheese half the size of an egg, and a scant quarter of a cupful of uncooked, or a half cupful of cooked navy beans or cowpeas. (The amounts of beans and peas make allowance for the part which remains undigested. See Farmers' Bulletin 559, page 9.) These samples of food will, of course, not represent exactly equal amounts of protein, for all foods vary in composition, and besides round numbers have been selected for convenience. They will, however, serve to give an idea of what a glass of milk is equivalent to as a tissue former.

Since milk is so valuable a source of nourishment, people naturally desire to know a large number of ways of using it. One good way to use milk, and skim milk in particular, is in making milk soup. This is good for the children and not difficult to prepare. Milk soups, too, are a good way of using up small amounts of vegetables which happen to be left over, for, of course, they are improved by being flavored. There is almost no vegetable which cannot be used for this purpose; tomatoes, asparagus, peas, corn, potatoes, squash, turnips, carrots, all are good, and if the amount available is small add a little onion to piece out with or onion alone can be used. Some people simply combine the vegetable, after they have put it through a sieve, with hot milk and season with salt or with salt and pepper. (Note: Wash the sieve at once or put it to soak and save much trouble.) Others thicken the soup with a little flour, which makes it seem more substantial, and still others add a little butter or cheaper fat, which they work into the soup more or less carefully. Here is a recipe for a soup made of cowpeas and milk taken from Farmers' Bulletin 559. Any other peas may be used.

Cream of Cowpea Soup.—One tablespoonful of butter (all measurements are level), one tablespoonful flour, two cups milk, one teaspoonful sugar, one cupful cooked cowpeas (green or dried), a few drops of onion juice, salt.

Melt the butter, add the flour and cook thoroughly, being careful not to brown it. Add the milk and bring the mixture to the boiling point. Put the peas through a sieve; add peas and seasonings to the milk and reheat. If too thick add milk or water.

Baker milk pudding, which is another good way of using skim milk, is too often kept for dessert. Few people realize how truly nourishing it is, and that if it is not made too sweet or is not too highly flavored it can be used as the chief dish at a meal, providing the family likes it. Make it moist by using only a little of the starchy substance, rice, corn meal or farina, with which the milk is usually combined, and cook it in a very slow oven. Farmers' Bulletin 413 speaks of these puddings and of their nutritive value and gives many other valuable suggestions about keeping and using milk.

Poor Man's Rice Pudding.—One quart of milk, half cup of rice, or less, half cup of sugar, or less, half teaspoon of salt, half teaspoon of powdered cinnamon.

Put all the ingredients together in an earthen baking dish and cook in a very slow oven for three hours, stirring occasionally during the first hour.

This pudding has approximately as much tissue-forming material in it as the soup for which the recipe is given above. Scalloped potatoes can be made in which the same way except that a little butter would be used in place of the sugar and a larger amount of potato can be used than of rice.

In this article milk has been referred to chiefly in connection with its value as a tissue former. Nothing has been said of the fat and mineral matter it contains. When these are taken into consideration, it makes an even better showing. See Farmers' Bulletin 413, page 14. There you will find that all the food in a cup of milk is equal to that in three ounces of beef or in two eggs.

SEASONING FOR COTTAGE CHEESE, SOUPS AND SALADS.

The savories of the diet, the highly flavored substances, like herbs and spices, which we use in small amounts only, seldom have much food value, but they are often the means of making the lower-priced food materials attractive and thus they may serve to keep down the cost of living. Americans are not much given to the use of these substances and might well take a lesson from some of the European nations. There is a vegetable of European origin, belonging, like the onion, to the lily family and known as the chive, which has so good a flavor and is so easy to raise and to use, and is besides so ornamental as it grows, that it seems strange that American housekeepers do not make more use of it. The chive is a perennial which puts forth long, slender, hollow leaves and has small delicate purplish flowers. It can not easily be grown from the seed, but a bunch of chives can be separated and the parts replanted. They make an ornamental border for a flower or vegetable bed and can be grown in a pot or window box in the house. Some people put them into their fern dishes and consider them very decorative.

The advantage of using the chive, which resembles but is not exactly like the onion in taste and odor, besides the fact that it gives variety to the diet, is that it can be obtained in suitable form for use in cooking without the danger of getting any of it on the hands. The leaves can be cut off and snipped into small pieces by means of a pair of scissors, and, unless the hands touch the cut surfaces (and this is avoidable), no trace of the odor remains upon them. If one is sure the leaves of the plant are clean a paper or dish can be held under them and the leaves snipped directly on to it in pieces small enough for use. The cutting of the leaves does not injure the plant in any way; it seems rather to stimulate its growth and to make it more vigorous and thrifty.

The uses of the chive as a flavoring material are as numerous as those of the more familiar member of the same family—the onion; wherever chopped onion is used chopped chives may be substituted. A few special uses may, however, be mentioned. In very finely chopped condition it is an attractive addition to cottage cheese (see Farmers' Bulletin 387, Cheese and Its Economical Use in the Diet, and Farmers' Bulletin 413, The Care of Milk and Its Use in the Home), or other soft cream cheese and such mixtures may be used as sandwich fillings. It can be added to omelets and to milk sauces and soups. As an addition to plain lettuce salad it has almost no equal, the amount to be used depending, of course, upon the favor with which onion-like seasonings are held in the family.

Still another advantage may be mentioned. The chive is dark green in color and offers a pleasing contrast to the white of milk sauce or cottage cheese or to the yellow of salad dressing, thus attracting the eye as well as the palate.

A Ballad of Vegetables.

(Philadelphia Record.)

A potato went out on a mash,
And sought an onion bed.
"That's pit for me," observed the squash,
And all the beets turned red.
"Go 'way," the onion weepingly cried;
"Your love I cannot be."
The pumpkin be your lawful bride—
You cantaloupe with me."

But onward still the tuber came,
And lay down at her feet;
"You cauliflower a flower by any name
And it would smell as wheat;
And I, too, am an early rose,
And you I've come to see;
So don't turnip your lovely nose,
But spinachat with me."

"I do not carrot at all to wed;
So go, sir, if you please,"
The modest onion meekly said,
"And lettuce, pray, have peas!
Go, think that you have never seen
Myself or smelled my sigh;
Too long a maiden I have been
For favors in your rye."

"Ah, spare a cuss," the tuber prayed;
"My cherryshed bride you'll be;
You are the only weeping maid
That currant now for me."
And as the wily tuber spoke,
He caught her by surprise,
And giving her an artichoke,
Devoured her with his eyes.

Exchange.

"Does your son take after you?"

"No. I'm afraid we're a little at odds in our ideas. He wants to wear a high hat and evening clothes, while I have a fancy for going hunting and looking like a boy scout."

PROPOSAL SHE LAUGHED AT.

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying,
And this same flower that smiles today
Tomorrow will be dying.
Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while ye may, go marry;
For having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

While a girl is in her teens love is a fair game. When would-be wooers flock about her, she thinks their homage is due her. She is not serious, and regards all that is said to her in the same light vein. She laughs in the face of the bashful young man who struggles with words to try to make her understand his admiration for her. She is amused at the two who are almost at swords' points vying with each other for her favor. The man of thirty she leads a merry dance. As for the older man, she laughs in his face, wondering at his presumption in thinking June could ever wish to be linked to November. The pretty young thing takes no heed of time; nor does it cause her a regret when one lover drops off. She believes the loss of one is the gaining of two and the choice of half a dozen.

As the years rush onward, she finds that five years have made quite a difference in her life. The men of the younger set fight shy of her, casting their eyes at young girls. The man of thirty is no longer at her beck and call. She has to invent pretty devices to keep him at her side. She no longer laughs or teases him when she finds him in a serious mood, but encourages it.

Her eyes are opened to the fact, at last, as to why she is single. Her own levity has discouraged each and every one. There is a time for mirth; there is a time also for earnestness, especially if the man who seems intent upon proposing is agreeable to the girl, aye more—if there lurks in her heart the thought that he is a little dearer to her than any of her friends

Women should not play the part of a coquette too long. The lass of sixteen may laugh heartily when he speaks to her of love, for her heart is sleeping. She knows nothing of the grand passion. The young woman of six and twenty should not crush a wooers's hopes with one fell blow. Her chances of matrimony are narrowing down to one man most likely. It doesn't do the spinster much good to look back and count the lovers whom she has sent from her. While it is true that there is always one chance of matrimony for a woman, no matter how old she may be, it is well for her to recollect that love and laughter belong to youth time. The same mannerism would send an older suitor from her. She would blame herself forever after for the last proposal she treated too lightly at a moment when she should have been sympathetic—listening with heart interest.

WIVES COMPLAIN ABOUT HUSBANDS.

Can't I another's face commend
And to her virtues prove a friend,
But instantly your forehead lours,
As if her merit lessen'd yours?

It is usually the wife who has the meekest and most docile of husbands who makes the loudest complaints of her marital woes. If he makes no retort she declares he is sullen. If he mildly attempts to reason with her she says he is heaping abuse upon her.

When he grasps his hat and hurriedly leaves the house she vows he's a tyrant. If he never brings home a friend to dine she taunts him that he has no friends, is disliked. If he should happen to bring home a friend to dine he knows by the gleam in his wife's eyes that he is in for a curtain lecture as soon as the guest departs that far outranks Mrs. Caudle's. When his business takes him away early in the morning she complains that no other wife has to get up at that hour, daybreak, to prepare a meal, that a more reasonable man would breakfast at a restaurant.

If he gets through his day's duties a little before the usual hour and comes home he is accused of coming so early for the sole purpose of "snooping"; in other words, hoping to take her unawares to "catch her" should she be out for a much needed stroll or entertaining a few neighbors at a bridge affair, or perhaps having a quiet afternoon with—her relatives; who never come when he is around.

To praise the appearance of any other woman in her presence is like heaping coals on a redhot fire. The house is then made so warm for him that he has to get out with alacrity.

A husband of that kind often wonders how it is that the quiet peace-loving man often gets a shrew of a wife. The belligerant, domineering men seem to capture all the sweet, loving household angels.

If the tyrannical man's wife has any grievances she keeps them to herself making no moan. She gives the world to understand he's the dearest, most lovable man on earth. Her kindness and affection win his love toward her. Time softens his disposition. The harsh, angry wife drives her husband from her. A man needs peace and quiet in his own home, that should be the dearest spot on earth to him and his home ties sweetest and most binding. Even the wives who have faulty husbands should make the best of them.

STANDING BY HER SWEETHEART

Thine is a grief that wastes the heart,
Like mildew on a tulip's dyes
When hope, deferr'd but to depart
Loses his smiles, but keeps his sighs.

When a young man falls in love, he ought to be sure that the girl is not fickle as well as fair. How is he to gain this knowledge? There are a score or so of trite and true rules which he might follow, but one or two would do. If she is a merry, happy-go-lucky damsel, always eager to go hither and thither, where he must accompany her, and has a liking for all the new fads of the hour, he may be certain that her own pleasure comes first with her; that he is only necessary as long as he can contribute to her delights. Let misfortune come to him, in the way of unexpectedly losing his position, and he will find a sweetheart of this kind will turn a cold shoulder to him. His companionship will be irksome to her.

If she has dreams of wedding him, she will not be anxious to be always on the go with him to places where it will cost money. She will study his interest without letting him realize it. If change of fortune comes to him he will find her true. Though all of her friends grow cool toward him and turn their heads another way, she will comfort and cheer him, keep up his courage and urge him not to lose heart in his battle with the world. She will prove her love by wedding him though he is down and out, putting her shoulder to the wheel to earn support, in factory or shop, until his sky brightens and he secures another position.

Men shape their lives according to the women they love.

He who loves unwisely must pay for misplaced affection in heart-bitter sorrow. No wonder kinfolks who love a young man appear to be overanxious to have him get the right kind of a sweetheart. So much depends on it. Divorce courts, in nine cases out of ten, show wives who were once happy, but flighty, sweethearts, who for a trifling cause rend their hearts apart.

It is often a man's own fault, if his heart is caught in a vain coquette's trap. The young man who has his own row to hoe, earning his money by the sweat of his brow, should call a halt upon his affections if he finds that the girl he begins to care for is extravagant, would have him spend his last dime for her. Feigning poverty is a good test of some girl's affections.

ONE-TIME FRIENDS.

Remember that the friendship
Which you now think poor and vain
Will endure in hope and patience
Till you ask for it again.

"Take heed of a speedy, professing friend; friendship is never lasting which flames before it burns," says a poet. Another warns: "Nothing is more dangerous than an imprudent friend; an open foe may prove a curse, but a pretended friend is worse." By all of this wisdom we should gather that the choosing of a true friend is to most women almost as serious a matter as choosing a lover. Are not both supposed to be cherished a lifetime?

There are women, remarkably sagacious and clever in all else, who make a most unwise selection of women friends. The sedate woman fairly adores the bright creature, all life and sparkle. The butterfly creature, who sees only the bright side of every situation and upon whose lips there is ever ready laughter, seeks the companionship of the quiet, pensive girl, whose wise counsel saves her from many a girlish blunder. Women like friends who are congenial to them. The woman who imagines that she has domestic trouble turns to the woman who sympathizes with her.

Another wife who is slaving and working from morning till night to keep down family expenses finds comfort with the friend who praises her for her self sacrifices. She assures her that her husband ought to be more appreciative of what she is doing for his sake; that it is a wife's duty to be frugal and help her husband accumulate. The hardworking wife listens to this fulsome praise with sincere content; quite forgetful that she who is so lavish in dealing it out is the most extravagant of womankind.

Her lavish expenditures have placed her husband on the verge of bankruptcy. A woman friend of opposite nature, different ideas, is ballast for her, either for weal or woe; weal, if she helps her to be strong and brave, woe, if she ingratiates herself into her confidence and ends by betraying it or gaining such an influence over her that she can bend her to her will against her better judgment and to the detriment of her family and loved ones. From childhood up, a woman's friendship should be safeguarded most carefully. She should be removed from influences that are likely to prove dangerous. There is no end of trouble a woman friend may brew in a household if she's inclined to be a mischief maker.

SESSION TOO LONG

Nation Would Be Glad to Have Congress Adjourn.

Feeling of Uncertainty Throughout the Country Will Continue Until Legislative Treadmill at the Capitol Is Ended.

Fourteen months is entirely too long a time for congress to remain in session, and it is not at all surprising that now, after remaining at work for that length of time, the members of the senate and house are anxious to adjourn to their districts.

The demand that congress adjourn is voiced from every section of the country. The people are tired of the legislative treadmill at the capitol. They want to turn their minds to their own business. They want surcease from the agitation in congress which has been distracting the country for more than a year.

It may be that the situation is psychological, but it is physical as well.

So long as congress remains in session there will be a feeling of uncertainty throughout the country, and this can be remedied only by adjournment.

Members of congress themselves want to get away. They wish to return to their districts and meet their constituents. Other men, in closer touch with sentiment in the various districts, are anxious to win seats in congress and are already campaigning. Distance may lend enchantment in affairs of the heart, but rarely in politics. The man who is not on the ground cannot defend himself from attacks made upon him by political enemies, and his absence is frequently misconstrued.

Constituents of a member of congress naturally feel that they should be consulted about important legislative matters. The member should have the privilege of going back to his district and talking things over with his neighbors.

"Common council" should not be confined to Washington. The members of congress should have an opportunity to talk with their own constituents. In no other way can the will of the people be registered in Washington.

Roosevelt Is Unbossed.

Colonel Roosevelt is not under the domination or control of the Progressive party. He is a free man. So are all the other Progressives. No Grundyism here. The Progressive party would as soon think of controlling Mr. Roosevelt as they would George V of England. The Progressive party also knows that Colonel Roosevelt, by his suggestions since he returned from South America has convicted most of our American public men of being chumps. His suggestions about arbitration, about the proposed Colombian treaty, about the suppression of the bipartisan machines in New York, etc., show a man head and shoulders above any other public man. Therefore, if the friends and followers of Colonel Roosevelt were to influence him to withdraw from public life, they would do a very unpatriotic thing.

Colorado Progressive.

Judge Ben B. Lindsey and Mrs. Lindsey of Denver were at Sagamore Hill recently for luncheon, and the former passed most of the afternoon with Mr. Roosevelt discussing the strike and the political situation there. Judge Lindsey told reporters that there was every indication that the Progressives would be successful.

"The Democrats are in bad shape there," he said. "You know, Colorado is a beet-sugar state, and the tariff law has hurt the sugar industry. While the Republicans are showing signs of activity, they are not strong. Therefore, I believe that the Progressives will carry the state."—Dispatch in New York Herald.

Progressives in Massachusetts.

It is interesting to read in the Springfield (Mass.) Republican a report of Progressivism in that state which shows that the party is active and full of hope and enthusiasm. The Republican, in spite of its name, is not an organ of the old party, but is honestly independent; otherwise it would not be telling the truth about the Progressives, but misrepresenting and distorting facts according to the policy adopted by the standpat press.

Psychology Pays No Bills.

President Wilson says the business world's troubles are "merely psychological," but he forgot to say who has been causing most of the psychological turmoil or to explain how to cure it—save by adding to the uncertainty by propounding more anti-business laws choked with uncertainty. Unfortunately, psychology won't pay the butcher or the landlord.

Worst Doorkeeper in the World.

"James Watson of Indiana came to Missouri the other day," says Henry Allen, "to attend the state convention of the Missouri Republicans. He 'opened the door' to all Progressives to come back into the party and went away leaving it open. Mr. Watson had charge of the doorkeeping arrangements at Chicago. He's about the bummest doorkeeper the party ever had. While he had charge of the door at Chicago more than 4,000,000 Republicans walked out of it."—Kansas City Star.

Minding the Doctor.

"It isn't strange that Bob Hilliard should have won the heart and hand of a girl with three millions, for Bob, despite his years, is the handsomest and most elegant creature going."

The speaker, a dramatic critic of Chicago, smiled and continued:

"The last time Bob acted here I met him one morning promenading. And he was superb—top hat, stick, black morning coat, spats fitting without a wrinkle, and one of those cigarette tubes that had just come out, a tube of gold and amber, a foot long, or possibly 18 inches.

"As we chatted, and as he smoked his Egyptian cigarette through this extraordinary tube, I said to him:

"Why on earth, Bob, do you use such a long cigarette tube as that?"

"'My doctor has ordered me,' he replied, 'to keep away from tobacco.'"

Habit to Avoid.

"There is one unaccountable thing to me about the batter on your baseball club."

"What is that?"

"Knowing his wife as I do, I cannot imagine why he is eager to make so many home runs."

THE UNION-BANNER

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala. as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

A bank at Littlerock, Ark., with a half million capital has recently closed its doors and suspended business. The action was caused by a withdrawal of deposits. We predict that this is a continuation of the bank "busting" which was started in Chicago a few days ago, when four banks closed within a week's time, and which will continue till business is unharnessed from the influence of Democratic free trade.

Mr. N. H. Henderson of Verbena was a caller at our office Friday. Mr. Henderson is eighty years old, and talks interestingly of things political He is one of the few men of his age now living, who claim the distinction of having voted the Republican ticket when there were indeed few of them in this section of the country. Like Uncle John Baker, Mr. Henderson says he always felt that some day men would come to realize some things and vote with him, and he is proud that his hopes have come true.

A recent Washington newspaper dispatch says, "Southern Democrats are disturbed at the reported intention of the President to appoint another negro as recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia. It is said that Mr. Wilson will not be halted by this criticism, but proceed as he intends."

This paper does not deny that the negro plays a part in national politics. The above instance, like others we have cited recently, purposes to show some of our snow-white, simon-pure and sanctimonious Democratic friends that the Republicans are not the only ones who give offices to the negroes, and thereby endeavor to retain his vote.

According to the spirits of those who were in the Progressive Committtee meeting at Birmingham Tuesday, the Bull Moose party would never join with any other party unless that party would consent to accept the Progressive doctrine. When fusion with the old Republicans was mentioned by some member vociferous cries of "never, never," rose from all corners of the hall. The Progressives party is a party of principles, full of much good, and upon this principle we hope to win recognition at the hands of the people, and not by fusing with other parties.

George W. Perkins, committeeman of the Progressive party, and right hand man of ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, intends, if the necessity arises, of proving to the country that his party is not a "one-man" organization.

In a letter addressed to a prominent Alabama bull moose and made public yesterday, the national committeeman declared that at the present time he was unable to state definitely the extent of the illness of the former President. He declared that the diseased larynx had been operated on, and that the colonel was not en route to America.

"We shall soon know the truth," was his laconic comment.

In the concluding paragraph Mr. Perkins stated that in the event the health of Colonel Roosevelt prevented his participation in politics, it would be demonstrated that the progressive party was not a "one-man" party. This was taken as an intimation that the progressives are grooming a national leader to succeed to the berth now occupied by Mr. Rooseyelt.

It is Just Natural To Admire Babies

Our altrustic nature impels love for the cooing infant. And at the same time the subject of motherhood is ever before us. To know what to do that will add to the physical comfort of expectant motherhood is a subject that has interested most women of all times. One of the real helpful things is an external abdominal application sold in most drug stores under the name of "Mother's Friend." We have known so many grandmothers, who in their younger days relied upon this remedy, and who recommend it to their own daughters that it certainly must be what its name indicates. They have used it for its direct influence upon the muscles, cords, ligaments and tendons as it aims to afford relief from the strain and pain so often unnecessarily severe during the period of expectancy.

Every woman should mention "Mother's Friend" when the stork is the subject of conversation. An interesting little book is mailed free upon application to Bradfield Regulator Co., 405 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. It refers to many things that women like to read about.

Get or recommend a bottle of "Mother's Friend" to-day and write for the book.

USE OF CALOMEL IS RAPIDLY FALLING OFF

Fewer People Risking Dangerous Drugs—Thousands Taking Dodson's Liver Tone Instead.

The use of calomel, which is a poison and a form of mercury, seems to be decidedly diminishing nowadays. Dodson's Liver Tone takes its place so reliably in cases of constipation and liver trouble that its popularity is spreading more widely all the time.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a harmless vegetable liquid. What calomel does unpleasantly—often with danger—for constipation and sluggish liver, Dodson's Liver Tone does for you safely and pleasantly, with no pain and no gripe. It does not interfere in any way with your regular business, habits or diet.

So successful, so reliable and so popular a remedy has its imitators, naturally. But beware of them. You can easily detect the difference.

Dodson never makes extravagant statements. His Liver Tone has been made from the first to take the place of calomel. He says that it "livens the liver," overcomes constipation agreeably and makes you feel good. If you are not satisfied completely with Dodson's Liver Tone, Alred Drug Company will hand back the purhase price (50c.) to you cheerfully, instantly and without question. Hence you run no risks to health or yocketbook in giving it a trial.

WHY WEAK LUNGS?

The toll of tuberculosis is claiming more than 350 victims every day in the United States, yet few realize their grave condition until the critical period arrives.

Overwork, worry, weakness after sickness, catarrh, bronchitis, tender throats—all exert the weakening influence that invites consumption.

To guard against consumption, thousands of people take Scott's Emulsion after meals because its rich medicinal nourishment strengthens the lungs, puts vigor in the blood, and upbuilds strength to resist tuberculosis. Scott's Emulsion is nature's strength-builder. Refuse substitutes.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow. Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Sara declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty again attempts to tell the real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word.

CHAPTER XII.—Continued.

"Not now. Not since I have found you out. The thing I have feared all along has come to pass. I am relieved, now that you show me just where I truly stand. But, I asked: what of you?"

"The world is more likely to applaud than to curse me, Hetty. It likes a new sensation. My change of heart will appear quite natural."

"Are you sure that the world will applaud your real design? You hate the Wrandalls. Will they be charitable toward you when the truth is given out? Will Leslie applaud you? Listen, please: I am trying to save you from yourself, Sara. You will fail in everything you have hoped for. You will be more accursed than I. The world will pity me, it may even forgive me. It will listen to my story, which is more than you will do, and it will believe me. Ah, I am not afraid now. At first I was in terror. I had no hope to escape. All that is past. Today I am ready to take my chances with the big, generous world. Men will try me, and men are not made of stone and steel. They punish but they do not avenge when they sit in jury boxes. They are not women! Good God, Sara, is there a man living today who could have planned this thing you have cherished all these months? Not one! And all men will curse you for it, even though they send me to prison or to the—chair. But they will not condemn me. They will hear my story and they will set me free. And then, what of you?"

Sara stood perfectly rigid, regarding this earnest reasoner with growing wonder.

"My dear," she said, "you would better be thinking of yourself, not of me."

"Why, when I tell my story, the world will hate you, Sara Wrandall. You have helped me, you have been good to me, no matter what sinister motive you may have had in doing so. It is my turn to help you."

"To help me!" cried Sara, astonished in spite of herself.

"Yes. To save you from execration—and even worse."

"There is no moral wrong in marriage with Leslie Wrandall," said Sara, returning to her own project.

"No moral wrong!" cried Hetty, aghast. "No, I suppose not," she went on, a moment later. "It is something much deeper, much blacker than moral wrong. There is no word for it. And if I marry him, what then? Wherein lies your triumph? You can't mean that—God in heaven! You would not go to them with the truth when it was too late for him to—to cast me off!"

"I am no such fool as that. The secret would be forever safe in that event. My triumph, as you call it, we will not discuss."

"How you must hate me, to be willing to do such an infamous thing to me!"

"I do not hate you, Hetty."

"In heaven's name, what do you call it?"

"Justification. Listen to me now. I am saying this for your good sense to seize and appreciate. Would it be right in me to allow you to marry any other man, knowing all that I know? There is but one man you can in justice marry: the one who can repair the wreck that his own blood created. Not Brandon Booth, nor any man save Leslie Wrandall. He is the man who must pay."

"I do not intend to marry," said Hetty.

"But Leslie will marry some one, and I intend that it shall be you. He shall marry the ex-chorus girl, the artist's model, the—the prostitute! Wait! Don't fly at me like that! Don't assume that look of virtuous horror! Let me say what I have to say. This much of your story shall they know, and no more. They will be proud of you!"

Hetty's eyes were blazing. "You use that name—you call me that—and yet you have kissed me, caressed me—loved me!" she cried hoarse with passion.

"He will ask you tonight for the second time. You will accept him. That is all."

"You must take back what you have just said to me—of me—Sara Wrandall. You must unsay it! You must beg my pardon for that!"

"I draw no line between mistress and prostitute."

"But I—"

"Enough!"

"You wrong me vilely! You must let me—"

"I have an excellent memory, and it serves me well."

Hetty suddenly threw herself upon the couch and buried her face in her arms. Great sobs shook her slender frame.

Sara stood over her and watched for a long time with pitiless eyes. Then a queer, uneasy, wondering light began to develop in those dark, ominous eyes. She leaned forward the better to listen to the choked, inarticulate words that were pouring from the girl's lips. At last, moved by some power she could not have accounted for, she knelt beside the quivering body, and laid her hand, almost timorously, upon the girl's shoulder.

"Hetty—Hetty, if I have wronged you in—in thinking that of you—I—I—" she began brokenly. Then she lifted her eyes, and the harsh light tried to steal back into them. "No, no! What am I saying? What a fool I am to give way—"

"You have wronged me—terribly, terribly!" came in smothered tones from the cushions. "I did not dream you thought that of me."

"What was I to think?"

Hetty lifted her head and cried out: "You would not let me speak! You refused to hear my story. You have been thinking this of me all along, holding it against me, damning me with it, and I have been closer to you than— My God, what manner of woman are you?"

Sara seized her hands and held them in a fierce, tense grip. Her eyes were glowing with a strange fire.

"Tell me—tell me now, on your soul, Hetty were you—were you—"

"No! No! On my soul, no!"

"Look into my eyes!"

The girl's eyes did not falter. She met the dark, penetrating gaze of the other and, though dimmed by tears, her blue eyes were steadfast and resolute. Sara seemed to be searching the very soul of her, the soul that laid itself bare, denuded of every vestige of guile.

"I—I think I believe you," came slowly from the lips of the searcher. "You are looking the truth. I can see it. Hetty, I—I don't understand myself. Is is so—so overwhelming, so tremendous. It is so incredible. Am I really believing you? Is it possible that I have been wrong in—"

"Let me tell you everything," cried the girl, suddenly throwing her arms about her.

"Not now! Wait! Give me time to think. Go away now. I want to be alone." She arose and pushed the girl toward the door. Her eyes were fixed on her in a wondering, puzzled sort of way, and she was shaking her head as if trying to discredit the new emotion that had come to displace the one created ages ago.

"Tell Me—Tell Me, Now—on Your Soul, Hetty—"

Slowly Hetty Castleton retreated toward the door. With her hand on the knob, she paused.

"After what has happened, Sara, you must not expect me to stay with you any longer. I cannot. You may give me up to the law, but—"

Some one was tapping gently at the door.

"Shall I see who it is?" asked the girl, after a long period of silence.

"Yes."

It was Murray. "Mr. Leslie has returned, Miss Castleton, and asks if he may see you at once. He says it is very important.

"Tell him I will be down in a few minutes, Murray."

After the door closed, she waited until the footman's steps died away on the stairs.

"I shall say no to him, Sara, and I shall say to him that you will tell him why I cannot be his wife. Do you understand? Are you listening to me?"

Sara turned away without a word or look of response.

Hetty quietly opened the door and went out.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Second Encounter.

Booth trudged rapidly homeward after leaving Hetty at the lodge. He was throbbing all over with the love of her. The thrill of conquest was in his blood. She had raised a mysterious barrier; all the more zest to the inevitable victory that would be his. He would delight in overcoming obstacles—the bigger the better—for his heart was valiant and the prize no smaller than those which the ancient knights went out to battle for in the lists of love.

It was enough for the present to know that she loved him.

What if she were Hetty Glynn? What if she had been an artist's model? The look he had had into the soul of her through those pure blue eyes was all-convincing. She was worthy of the noblest love.

After luncheon—served with some exasperation by Patrick an hour and a half later than usual—he smoked his pipe on the porch and stared reminiscently at the shifting clouds above the tree tops.

He did not see the Wrandall motor at his garden gate until a lusty voice brought him down from the clouds into the range of earthly sounds. Then he dashed out to the gate, bareheaded and coatless, forgetting that he had been sitting in the obscurity of trailing vines and purple blossoms the while he thought of her.

Leslie was sitting on the wide seat between his mother and sister.

"Glad to see you back, old man," said Booth, reaching in to shake hands with him. "Day early, aren't you? Good afternoon, Mrs. Wrandall. Won't you come in?"

He looked at Vivian as he gave the invitation.

"No, thanks," she replied. "Won't you come to dinner this evening?"

He hesitated. "I'm not quite sure whether I can, Vivian. I've got a halfway sort of—"

"Oh, do, old chap," cut in Leslie, more as a command than an entreaty. "Sorry I can't be there myself, but you'll fare quite as well without me. I'm dining at Sara's. Wants my private ear about one thing and another—see what I mean?"

"We shall expect you, Brandon," said Mrs. Wrandall, fixing him with her lorgnette.

"I'll come, thank you," said he.

He felt disgustingly transparent under that inquisitive glass.

Wrandall stepped out of the car. "I'll stop off for a chat with Brandy, mother."

"Shall I send the car back, dear?"

"Never mind. I'll walk down."

The two men turned in at the gate as the car sped away.

"Well," said Booth, "it's good to see you. Pat!" He called through a basement window. "Come up and take the gentleman's order."

"No drink for me, Brandy. I've been in the temperance state of Maine for two weeks. One week more of it and I'd have been completely pickled. I shall always remember Maine."

Booth sat down on the porch rail, hooked his toes in the supports and proceeded to fill his pipe. Then he struck a match and applied it, Leslie watching him with moody eyes.

"How do you like the portrait, old man?" he inquired between punctuating puffs.

"It's bully. Sargent never did anything finer. Ripping."

"I owe it all to you, Les."

"To me?"

"You induced her to sit to me."

"So I did," said Leslie sourly. "I was Mr. Fix-it sure enough." He allowed a short interval to elapse before taking the plunge. "I suppose, old chap, if I should happen to need your valuable services as best man in the near future, you'd not disappoint me?"

Booth eyed him quizzically. "I trust you're not throwing yourself away, Les," he said drily. "I mean to say, on some one—well, some one not quite up to the mark."

Leslie regarded him with some severity. "Of course not, old chap. What the devil put that into your head?"

"I thought that possibly you'd been making a chump of yourself up in the Maine woods."

"Piffle! Don't be an ass. What's the sense pretending you don't know who she is?"

"I suppose it's Hetty Castleton," said Booth, puffing away at his pipe.

"Who else?"

"Think she'll have you, old man?" asked Booth, after a moment.

"I don't know," replied the other, a bit dashed. "You might wish me luck, though."

Booth knocked the burnt tobacco from the bowl of his pipe. A serious line appeared between his eyes. He was a [illegible]ded fellow, without guile, without a single treacherous instinct.

"I can't wish you luck, Les," he said slowly. "You see I'm—I'm in love with her myself."

"The devil!" Leslie sat bolt upright and glared at him. "I might have known! And—and is she in love with you?"

"My dear fellow, you reveal considerable lack of tact in asking that question."

"What I want to know is this," exclaimed Wrandall, very pale but very hot: "is she going to marry you?"

Booth smiled. "I'll be perfectly frank with you. She says she won't."

Leslie gulped. "So you've asked her?"

"Obviously."

"And she said she wouldn't? She refused you? Turned you down?" His little mustache shot up at the ends and a joyous, triumphant laugh broke from his lips. "Oh, this is rich! Ha, ha! Turned you down, eh? Poor old Brandy! You're my best friend, and dammit I'm sorry. I mean to say," he went on in some embarrassment, "I'm sorry for you. Of course, you can hardly expect me to—er—"

"Certainly not," accepted Booth amiably. "I quite understand."

"Then, since she's refused you, you might wish me better luck."

"That would mean giving up hope."

"Hope?" exclaimed Leslie quickly. "You don't mean to say you'll annoy her with your—"

"No, I shall not annoy her," replied his friend, shaking his head.

"Well, I should hope not," said Leslie with a scowl. "Turned you down, eh? 'Pon my soul!" He appeared to be relishing the idea of it. "Sorry, old chap, but I suppose you understand just what that means."

Booth's lips hardened for an instant, then relaxed into a queer, almost pitying smile.

"And you want me to be your best man?" he said reflectively.

Leslie arose. His chest seemed to swell a little; assuredly he was breathing much easier. He assumed an air of compassion.

"I shan't insist, old fellow, if you feel you'd rather not—er— See what I mean?" It then occurred to him to utter a word or two of kindly advice. "I shouldn't go on moping if I were you, Brandy. 'Pon my soul, I shouldn't. Take it like a man. I know it hurts, but— Pooh! What's the use aggravating the pain by butting against a stone wall?"

His companion looked out over the tree tops, his hands in his trousers pockets, and it must be confessed that his manner was not that of one who is oppressed by despair.

"I think I'm taking it like a man, Les," he said. "I only hope you'll take it as nicely if she says nay to you."

An uneasy look leaped into Leslie's face. He seemed noticeably less corpulent about the chest. He wondered if Booth knew anything about his initial venture. A question rose to his lips, but he thought quickly and held it back. Instead, he glanced at his watch.

"I must be off. See you tomorrow, I hope."

"So long," said Booth, stopping at the top of the steps while his visitor skipped down to the gate with a nimbleness that suggested the formation of a sudden resolve.

Leslie did not waste time in parting inanities he strode off briskly in the direction of home, but not without a furtive glance out of the tail of his eye as he disappeared beyond the hedgerow at the end of Booth's garden. That gentleman was standing where he had left him, and was filling his pipe once more.

The day was warm, and Leslie was in a dripping perspiration when he reached home. He did not enter the house but made his way direct to the garage.

"Get out the car at once, Brown," was his order.

Three minutes later he was being driven over the lower road toward Southlook, taking good care to avoid Booth's place by the matter of a mile or more. He was in a fever of hope and eagerness. It was very plain to him why she had refused Booth. The iron was hot. He didn't intend to lose any time in striking.

And now we know why he came again to Sara's in the middle of a blazing afternoon, instead of waiting until the more seductive shades of night had fallen, when the moon sat serene in the seat of the Mighty.

* * * * * * *

He didn't have to wait long for Hetty. Up to the instant of her appearance in the door, he had reveled in the thought that the way was now paved with roses. But with her entrance, he felt his confidence and courage slipping. Perhaps that may explain the abruptness with which he proceeded to go about the business in hand.

"I couldn't wait till tonight," he explained as she came slowly across the room toward him. She was halfway to him before he awoke to the fact that he was standing perfectly still. Then he started forward, somehow impelled to meet her at least half-way. "You'll forgive me, Hetty, if I have disturbed you."

"I was not lying down, Mr. Wrandall," she said quietly. There was nothing ominous in the words, but he experienced a sudden sensation of cold. "Won't you sit down? Or would you rather go out to the terrace?"

"It's much more comfortable here, if you don't mind. I—I suppose you know what it is I want to say to you. You—"

"Yes," she interrupted wearily; "and knowing as much, Mr. Wrandall, it would not be fair of me to let you go on."

"Not fair?" he said, in honest amazement. "But, my dear, I—"

"Please, Mr. Wrandall," she exclaimed, with a pleading little smile that would have touched the heart of anyone but Leslie. "Please don't go on. It is quite as impossible now as it was before. I have not changed."

He could only say, mechanically: "You haven't?"

"No. I am sorry if you have thought that I might come to—"

"Think, for heaven's sake, think what you are doing!" he cried, feeling for the edge of the table with a support-seeking hand. "I—I had Sara's word that you were not—"

"Unfortunately Sara cannot speak for me in a matter of this kind. Thank you for the honor you would—"

"Honor be hanged!" he blurted out, losing his temper. "I love you! It's a purely selfish thing with me, and I'm blowed if I consider it an honor to be refused by any woman. I—"

"Mr. Wrandall!" she cried, fixing him with her flashing, indignant eyes. "You are forgetting yourself." She was standing very straight and slim and imperious before him.

He quailed. "I—I beg your pardon. I—I—"

"There is nothing more to be said," she went on icily. "Goodby."

"Would you mind telling me whether there is anyone else?" he asked, as he turned toward the door.

"Do you really feel that you have the right to ask that question, Mr. Wrandall?"

He wet his lips with his tongue. "Then, there is some one!" he cried, rapping the table with his knuckles. He didn't realize till afterward how vigorously he rapped. "Some confounded English nobody, I suppose."

She smiled, not unkindly. "There is no English nobody, if that answers your question."

"Then, will you be kind enough to offer a reason for not giving me a fair chance in a clear field? I think it's due—"

"Can't you see how you are distressing me? Must I again go through that horrid scene in the garden? Can't you take a plain no for an answer?"

"Good Lord!" he gasped, and in those two words he revealed the complete overturning of a lifelong estimate of himself. It seemed to take more than his breath away.

"Goodby," she said with finality.

He stared at the door through which she disappeared, his hopes, his conceit, his self-regard trailing after her with shameless disloyalty to the standards he had set for them, and then, with a rather ghastly smile of self-commiseration on his lips, he slipped out of the house, jumped into the motor car, and gave a brief but explicit command to the chauffeur, who lost no time in assisting his master to turn tail in ignominious flight.

Hetty was gloomily but resolutely employed in laying out certain of her personal belongings, preparatory to packing them for departure, when Sara entered her room.

They regarded each other steadily, questioningly for a short space of time.

"Leslie has just called up to ask 'what the devil' I meant by letting him make a fool of himself," said Sara, with a peculiar little twisted smile on her lips.

Hetty offered no comment, but after a moment gravely and rather wistfully called attention to her present occupation by a significant flaunt of her hand and a saddened smile.

"I see," said Sara, without emotion. "If you choose to go, Hetty, I shall not oppose you."

"My position here is a false one, Sara. I prefer to go."

"This morning I should have held a sword over your head."

"It is very difficult for me to realize all that has happened."

"You are free to depart. You are free in every sense of the word. Your future rests with yourself, my dear."

"It hurts me more than I can tell to feel that you have been hating me all these months."

"It hurts me—now."

Hetty walked to the window and looked out.

"What are your plans?" Sara inquired, after an interval.

"I shall seek employment—and wait for you to act."

"I? You mean?"

"I shall not run away, Sara. Nor do I intend to reveal myself to the authorities. I am not morally guilty of crime. A year ago I feared the consequences of my deed, but I have learned much since then. I was a stranger in a new world. In England we have been led to believe that you lynch women here as readily as you lynch men. I now know better than that. From you alone I learned my greatest lesson. You revealed to me the true meaning of human kindness. You shielded me who should not. Even now I believe that your first impulse was a tender one. I shall not forget it, Sara. You will live to regret the baser thought that came later on. I have loved you—yes, almost as a good dog loves his master. It is not for me to tell the story of that night and all these months to the world. I would not be betraying myself, but you. You would be called upon to explain, not I. And you would be the one to suffer. When you met me on the road that night I was on my way back to the inn to give myself into custody. You have made it impossible for me to do so now. My lips are sealed. It rests with you, Sara."

Sara joined her in the broad window. There was a strangely exalted look in her face. A gilded birdcage hung suspended in the casement. Without a word, she threw open the window screen. The gay little canary in the gilded cage cocked his head and watched her with alert eyes. Then she reached up and gently removed the cage from its fastenings. Putting it down upon the window sill, she opened the tiny door. The bird hopped about his prison in a state of great excitement.

Hetty looked on, fascinated.

At last a yellow streak shot out through the open door and an instant later resolved itself into the bobbing, fluttering dicky-bird that had lived in a cage all its life without an hour of freedom. For a few seconds it circled over the tree tops and then alighted on one of the branches. One might well have imagined that he could hear its tiny heart beating with terror. Its wings were half-raised and fluttering, its head jerking from side to side in wild perturbation. Taking courage, Master Dicky hopped timorously to a nearby twig, and then ventured a flight to a tree top nearer the window casement. Perched in its topmost branches he cheeped shrilly, as if there was fear in his little breast.

In silence the two women in the window watched the agitated movements of the bird. The same thought was in the mind of each, the same question, the same intense wish.

A brown thrush sped through the air, close by the timid canary. Like a flash it dropped to the twigs lower down, its wings palpitating in violent alarm.

"Dicky!" called Sara Wrandall, and then cheeped between her teeth.

A moment later Dicky was fluttering about the eaves; his circles grew smaller, his winging less rhythmical, till at last with a nervous little flutter he perched on the top of the window shutter, so near that they might have reached to him with their hands. He sat there with his head cocked to one side.

"Dicky!" called Sara again. This time she held out her finger. For some time he regarded it with indifference, not to say disfavor. Then he took one more flight, but much shorter than the first, bringing up again at the shutter-top. A second later he hopped down and his little talons gripped Sara's finger with an earnestness that left no room for doubt.

She lowered her hand until it was even with the open door of the gilded cage. He shot inside with a whir that suggested a scramble. With his wings folded, he sat on his little trapeze and cheeped. She closed and fastened the door, and then turned to Hetty.

"My symbol," she said softly.

There were tears in Hetty's eyes.

Forget to Collect Their Money.

The British government every year reaps a huge profit from the people who forget their own government stock when dividends fall due. The fault rests entirely with the stockholders for they even forget to give their addresses, so that they can be notified that money awaits them in the government coffers. In this case, about $5,000,000 is passed on to the national debt commission, and in turn it receives the interest from this money.

COLOMBIAN TREATY DEFENDED BY BRYAN

SAYS EXPRESSION "SINCERE REGRET" SHOULD CAUSE NO CONTROVERSY.

HOPEFUL OF SETTLEMENT

Objectionable Clause Practically Same as Used in Treaty Proposed During Taft Administration.

Washington. — Criticism of the proposed treaty to settle the differences between the United States and Colombia over the separation of Panama brought a formal statement from Secretary Bryan, defending the clause expressing "sincere regret" on the part of the United States that anything should have occurred to mar friendly relations between the two countries.

"The expression, 'honest regret,'" Mr. Bryan said, was used in the memorandum drafted during the Taft administration on which the present negotiations as well as those which previously had failed were based.

Despite opposition in the Senate, Mr. Bryan was hopeful that the treaty would be favorably reported and ratified. Members of the foreign relations committee expected that correspondence in the archives of the State department bearing on the treaty would reach the committee and will be referred to a sub-committee and probably will be made public. It is said of this correspondence that at one stage of the negotiations with Colombia during the Taft administration the United States proposed to submit the dispute to arbitration with the knowledge that a verdict in favor of Colombia would mean a judgment for at least $40,000,000.

Secretary Bryan's statement follows:

"Article 1 of the treaty now before the Senate reads:

"'The government of the United States of America wishing to put at rest all controversies and differences with the republic of Colombia arising out of the events from which the present situation on the Isthmus of Panama resulted, expresses, in its own name and in the name of the people of the United States, sincere regret that anything should have occurred to interrupt or to mar the relations of cordial friendship that has so long subsisted between the two nations.

"'The government of the republic of Colombia, in its own name, and in the name of the Colombian people, accepts this declaration in the full assurance that every obstacle to the restoration of complete harmony between the two countries will this disappear.'

"In what is known as the DuBois memorandum, made during the Taft administration, which presented the bases upon which he was authorized to negotiate a treaty, the following language is used:

"'The government and the people of the United States honestly regret anything should have ever occurred to mar, in any way, the long and sincere friendship that existed for nearly a century between Colombia and the United States, and the latter country has for years, earnestly desired to remove the ill feeling aroused in Colombia by the separation of Panama.'

"It will be seen from a comparison of the two paragraphs that they are identical in meaning, almost identical in language. In the DuBois memorandum the United States 'honestly regrets,' and in the pending treaty the government of the United States of America expressed in its own name and in the name of the people of the United States 'sincere regrets.' There is difference between "honest regrets' and 'sincerely regrets.' The pending treaty uses the phrase "to interrupt or to mar,' the DuBois memorandum uses the words 'to mar.' The DeBois memorandum describes the friendship formerly existing as "sincere,' while the pending treaty describes it as 'cordial.' Both refer to the 'events of 1903.' The DuBois memorandum speaks of 'the ill feeling' aroused in Colombia by the separation of Panama,' the pending treaty refers to 'the events from which the present situation on the Isthmus of Panama resulted.' In the pending treaty the government of Colombia accepts this declaration in the full assurance that every obstacle to the restoration of the complete harmony between the two countries will thus disappear, while the DuBois memorandum declares that the United States earnestly desired to remove the ill feeling aroused in Colombia by the separation of Panama.

Washington, Pa. — Twenty persons were injured, one seriously, eight houses destroyed by fire and six others dynamited as the result of lightning setting fire to a tank containing 25,000 barrels of oil at Meadowlands near here. Efforts to extinguish the oil fire have been futile. A partial collapse of the tank caused the burning oil to spread over a wide territory.

The Senate report on the rivers and harbors bill increased the House appropriations for the Black Warrior river for locks and dams from $500,000 to $750,000. The Senate also increased the appropriation for the Tennessee river from Chattanooga to Brown's Island from $150,000 to $250,000. The report made no change from Riverton to the mouth of the river, but from Brown's Island to Riverton it increased the House item from $120,000 to $250,000. There was also an added sum of $150,000 for preliminary work in connection with the Muscle Shoals.

State accounts of J. D. Searcy, treasurer of Cullman county, against whom warants have been issued charging embezzlement, were correct in the office of the governor. Searcy went to Birmingham and secured certified checks for $25,00 on a road bond issue of his county. He is alleged to have cashed two checks for $5,000 and disappeared. The governor has not sent a state examiner to check over the books of the missing treasurer, and probably will not do so unless a request for such action is made. The alleged peculations were related wholly to county funds. No reward has yet been offered by the governor for the arrest of the missing man.

A report of crop conditions in State says: Rains have fallen in every section of North Alabama within the last week and crops are on a boom. The waterfall has been too light in most places to allow the farmer to speak of it as a "season." Cotton is in splendid condition. Corn needs more rain yet. It needs a season—some real good downpours. Gardens were badly hurt by the drouth, but they have improved wonderfully since the showers. Some sections of the State have fair fruit crops, while other sections are reporting rather bad years. Northeast Alabama is claiming a fair crop, while Northwest Alabama reports that fruit in that section is practically a failure.

WRONG KING OF GARDENING

Form That Patient Had Been Indulging In Was Not What Doctor Would Have Recommended.

"Now comes the season when the wife goes to the country and the husband, in the words of the immortal song, shouts 'Hooray! Hooray!'"

Thus Jerome S. McWade, in an after dinner speech at Duluth began his response to a toast on "The Ladies."

"When the ladies are with us, we are safe," he resumed, "but when they go off to country or shore, leaving us in town alone, then our troubles begin.

"A man one summer day called on a doctor.

"'Doc,' he said, 'I'm all run down.'

"'You look it, too,' said the doctor sympathetically. 'I'm not going to prescribe drugs for a man in your condition. No, sir, what I'm going to prescribe for you is gardening.'

"The patient started and his unhealthy pallor turned to a dull brick red.

"'But, doc,' he said, 'gardening is the cause of all my trouble.'

"'Humph, what kind of gardening?' said the doctor incredulously.

"'Roof,' the man replied."

WANTED TO KNOW THE FIGURE

Fortune Hunter's Mother Was Not Dealing In Uncertainties, If She Could Help It.

Miss Jeannette Gilder, the brilliant critic, toyed with a pink and gold mustache cup at the mustache cup tea concluding the Bad Taste exhibition in New York.

"The mustache cup," said Miss Gilder, "holds its own even better than the hand-painted cuspidor. But, after all, there is spiritual as well as material bad taste, and a spiritual bad taste exhibition is now in order.

"In the forefront of it I'd put the fortune hunter. Not all our fortune hunters come from across the water. I heard of one the other day who belongs to the oldest family in America.

"But his family is very poor, and so he and his mother have decided that he must marry for money. They were discussing recently, the pair of them, a western girl.

"'Her fortune is large but vague,' said the mother. 'Besides, she is gauche. Her feet are broad and flat. She has a gold front tooth. Her French is execrable. She—'

"'Oh, I could make something out of her,' the young fortune hunter asserted confidently.

"'Yes, but how much—that's the question,' said his mother."

"I have, sir."

"And your figures?"

"Ten thousand dollars a year."

"I'm sorry, my boy," said the older man, "but I cannot afford to throw away $2,000 a year. Another suitor has figured he can do it for $8,000."

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and a FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Words of Praise

For Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

"How thankful we are to you for getting a hold of your wonderful Remedy. My wife could not have had but a short time to live if she had not taken your Wonderful Remedy when she did. One more of those paroxysm pains she was having would have killed her without a doubt. Now she is free from all pain, free from heart trouble and free from that disturbing Neuralgia—all the results of five treatments—and the expulsion of five or six hundred Gall Stones. Now she is able to eat anything she wants and her appetite is good and before taking your medicine she had no appetite and when she ate anything she would suffer death for so doing and could not sleep at night; since taking your treatment she sleeps well all night long. T. A. NEALL, Roanoke, Texas."

The above letter should convince you more than anything we could say in behalf of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Sufferers should try one dose of this Remedy—one dose should convince them that they can be restored to health. Nearly all Stomach Ailments are caused by the clogging of the intestinal tract with mucoid and catarrhal accretions allowing poisonous fluids into the Stomach and otherwise deranging the digestive system. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy painlessly removes these accretions without a surgical operation and puts an end to Colic Attacks, Gases in the Stomach and Intestines and all of the usual symptoms of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments. Ask your druggist about Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free booklet on Stomach Ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

Just to keep the boys from thinking that I think they are worse or less sensible than the girls, and to try to help the girls do better I'm going to tell the girls a few things this week and give the mothers several hints and the fathers a few. But before I write anything, let me say that I don't believe any boy or girl means to do anything wrong or act any way that a gentleman or gentlewoman would not. They just need starting the right way, and here is where the mother's word begins. She should have watchfulness for her watchword. Watch your girls all the time, from the cradle till she leaves you for a home of her own. But don't watch them in a way that will make them think you believe they need watching, but be their companion in all their innocent amusements, and when they come to you with their troubles or to tell you something some one has told them dont scold them or appear shocked at what they tell you but listen patiently to the end, and then no matter how badly shocked or how troubled you are at the things they have been told, be patient and explain to them the best you can all you think they ought to know, and try to make such a good impression that they will come to you with all their troubles and have no secrets from you; and as they grow older encourage them to tell you about their schoolmates of both sexes and invite them to your home on Saturday evenings where you can see them at play and hear them talk, thereby judging whether they are the kind of boys and girls you want your girl to associate with. When your girl is thirteen or fourteen years old she is very apt to be very shy, or very bold and either case will naturally cause you pain, but do not scold her, instead have a heart to heart talk with her, and give her good books to read and all the pleasant outdoor work to do that you think she needs and try to take her out with you after explaining that you are going to help her overcome her shyness or her boisterousness.

Now just a few words to the girls: Don't try to get grown too quick, you will have plenty of time to be grown, no matter how long it seems to take you to grow up. So wear your hair in braids, and your dresses short just as long as they are becoming to you, and when you begin to lengthen your dresses don't copy them from designs intended for "grownups," but from those suitable for your age, and don't wear high heel shoes, they are neither becoming nor healthful. And now here's something for older girls and women: If you don't use rouge or paiut or don't know of any one who does that you could keep from it, this isn't for you. Don't paint your cheeks unless you are perfectly colorless and can't be any other way. I've seen lots of girls who I'm sure would have been pretty if they had left the paint off that looked, to say the least grotesque with it on.

In an editorial of the near future I'm going to give you a few beauty hints that if they do not make you beautiful, will at least help you look your best.

I suppose father is wondering where he comes in, so will ease his mind. The best thing, in my opinion that he can do is help his wife every way he can and give her the money she needs for books, entertainments, and the furnishing of his daughters room, and when she reaches the age that "boys will come courting," he should know the boys.

I enjoy our editor's chat very much every week. Those are my views on whiskey: Whiskey causes more sorrow and heartache than anything I know of. Boys should be ashamed to carry whiskey with them any where, especially to public gatherings. Girls are to blame some too. They should refuse to recognize such boys, but they won't do it. If they would that would go a long ways toward having less whiskey and better behavior at such places. I think we should have papers and magazines for our children to read without having whiskey advertising flaunted in their faces. I hope we will soon have reading matter for our children that will only have clean high class matter in the advertising columns, and we will just as soon as enough people demand it.

Mrs. Callen's letter was interesting and encouraging. I have long wished Clanton had a rest room. Am sure many of our country women would appreciate it. We need a place where we can go and rest some after we have finished our shopping and are waiting for our "Johns."

I hope Miss Harlan will get all the encouragement and help she needs to enable her to do the greatest amount of good in this county.

Grandma, I was glad to read your interesting letter. My spring garden was not very good, but am still planting seed, and will continue to do so for some time yet; in fact till fall. We need a twelve month garden instead of just a spring and summer garden. Cabbage seed, beets, beans, spinach, radishes, and many other kinds can still be planted. As to the styles, I have always thought that truly refined were not the ones that went to the extremes. Frankly I don't like a skirt that is wider at the top than at the bottom, but the moderately short, moderately tight skirt is both sensible and becoming. Also the large high waist is more sensible that the small long waist. However what the styles are, we should consider health first and dress accordingly. A healthy person is nearly always a happy person; without help one is greatly handicaped. Can't some of the sister's send in their favorite canning recipes? I have canned thirty quarts of berries this year.

STRANGER KILLED IN DISPUTE OVER FOOD

Jasper Ingram Kills Road Worker Who Threatened His Life

On June 26th on the automobile highway that is being constructed through Montevallo, Jasper Ingram killed a man who is said to have been named Warren, and to have come from Arkansas, about 100 miles north of Little Rock.

It seems that Warren had been working on the highway but a day or two, and as he could find no place to get his meals Ingram consented to furnish them to him.

Ingram, however, knowing nothing about the newcomer, refused to allow Warren to go to his home, but brought his meals to him. Warren appears to have taken exception to this and is said to have cursed Ingram and told him that unless he would let him come and eat with him he would kill him before morning. Ingram went to his house and returned with his shotgun, and is said to have told Warren to leave. Warren refused to obey Ingram's orders, and is said to have cursed Ingram, whereupon Ingram shot him and came in to Montevallo and gave himself up to the town marshal.

Montgomery, Ala., June 11, 1914

Messrs. C. Reese Mullins, A. C. Smith, J. J. Pickens, Committee.

This is to inform you officially that the High School Commission on this day located the Chilton County High School at Clanton, Alabama, under the following conditions:

1. That the $18,000 pledged shall be placed in your local banks to the credit of the treasurer of the building committee, subject to his official check, and a certificate to this effect shall be filed with Supt. Wm. F. Feagin, Secretary of the High School Commission, not later than June 30, 1914.

2. The site selected is the twenty acres of land known as the Gowan property. A fee simple deed to this property shall be made to the State of Alabama and deeded on the regular form. Before the deed or deeds are recorded, the same should be sent here together with the abstract of title to be passed upon by the Attorney-General, and after his approval of the title, the deeds will be returned to be recorded.

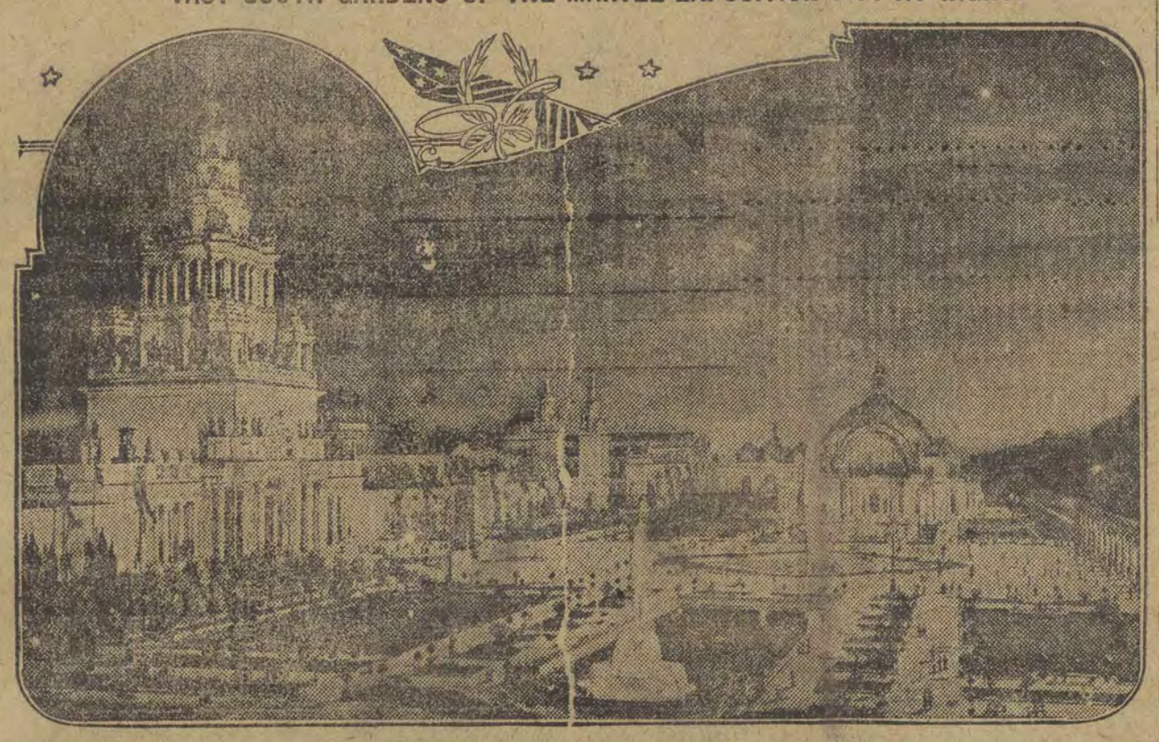
3. Not more than $15,000 of the $18,000 shall be used for the construction of the buidling proper, and the balance of the $18,000 shall be used for the equipment of the building and the payment of the architect.

4. A building committee of five local citizens, who are good business men, shall be selected and this committee shall organize by selecting one of their number chairman, another secretary, and another treasurer. The treasurer shall make a bond in a surety company for $20,000 and he shall be responsible for all funds placed in his hands, and shall pay out no funds except on the order of a majority of the building committee. This order shall be signed by the chairman and the secretary. All items of indebtedness connected with the construction of the building shall be paid by the treasurer with a check, which may act as a voucher. It shall be the duty of the building committee to give publicity to the action of the committee from time to time and shall publish a financial statement of the receipts and disbursements. Any additional rules and regulations may be made by the committee.

5. The building committee shall select the architect subject to the approval of the High School Commission. This action must be taken within the next ten days and reported in writing to Supt. Wm. F. Feagin, Montgomery, Alabama. The committee will be notified immediately as to whether or not the High School Commission has approved the selection.

6. The school is located by the High School Commission with the distinct understanding that the high school will not begin operation until January, 1915, and not then unless the building has been completed in accordance with the plans and specifications to be approved by the High School Commission, and all other conditions have been complied with.

7. In locating the county high school, the High School Commission will expect all pledges made in the communications of Messrs. Gowan and Gowan, and Messrs. C. Reese Mullins, A. C. Smith, and J. J. Pickens, both of which are dated May 29, 1914, to be carried out in detail.



8. The building committee of five referred to above, should be selected within the next week, and should organize immediately, and the personnel of this committee, showing the chairman, secretary, and treasurer, should be reported to Supt. Wm. F. Feagin.

I am sending you under separate cover three blank county high school deeds. You should see that the property is deeded immediately, but, as stated above, do not have the deeds recorded until they are finally passed upon by the Attorney-General. It is the duty of the local committee to furnish a complete abstract of title in order that the Attorney General may intelligently pass upon the deeds.

Please acknowledge receipt of this communication.

Yours very truly,
Wm. F. Feagin,
Supt. of Education.

VAST SOUTH GARDENS OF THE MARVEL EXPOSITION CITY AT NIGHT.

Night view of South Gardens and main entrance to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915. Dominating the scene at the left of the picture is the Tower of Jewels, rising some 435 feet into the air, its architectural lines marked with thousands of glittering hand-polished crystals of many colors and its whole surface softly glowing with the reflected light from the arcs which are hidden from the spectator. Further down the facade, at about the center of the picture, may be seen the two slender towers which guard the entrance to the Court of Palms and directly in front of the Tower of Jewels is A. Stirling Calder's "Fountain of Energy." In the background at the extreme left may be seen the top of the triumphal Arch of the Rising Sun, surmounted by the group "The Nations of the East."

Boll Weevil Is Now Increasing

Hot Weather Adapted To Growth of Cotton Pests.

The boll weevil has spread rapidly in Alabama in the last week and has entered several other counties in addition to those already chronicled, according to reports received in the office of the department of agriculture. A lengthy bulletin was issued Saturday by the department calling attention to the rapid spread of the pest and reiterating the advice to farmers regarding the methods of fighting the weevil.

The extreme hot weather, according to the bulletin, has been especially adapted to the development of the weevil and has principally been the cause of its alarming increase.

It is also noted that the weevil appeared first in this state in the counties where the insects were first seen, the cotton yield has not declined more than 50 per cent. This fact is taken as a text to impress upon the farmers the importance of using the most expeditions remedies at their command for meeting the emergencies of the occasion.

It is recommended and suggested again that the best plan to try is for the farmers to pick the weevils from the cotton stalk and destroy them. This it is contended must be done as there is no known specific against the menace to the cotton.

The bulletin will be published in full Sunday morning.

Base Ball

Two interesting ball games were played at Thorsby last Saturday between Thorsby and Cross Roads teams. The score in the first game was 13 to 11 in favor of Thorsby. Batteries for Thorsby were Sims and Patterson; for Cross Roads, Hayes, Sims and Collins. Thorsby also took the second game by a score of 9 to 3. The Thorsby team has won four out of six games played this season.

County High School Assured

All Necessary Funds Are Raised and Placed in the Bank.

All doubt as to whether Clanton would succeed in coming up to her pledges in regard to the high school matter is now removed. The money that was subscribed has been paid to the proper authorities and is in a local bank awaiting the action of the building committee. There will be no hitch now. Arrangements will be made at once for erecting the building, and the high school will be ready for opening by January 1st, 1915.

President Will Not Oust Negroes

Washington, June 29.—President Wilson has promised to fill all positions under the federal government now held by negroes with other negroes in case of changes. He told this today to Representative Smith of Maryland, who called to urge the appointment of a white man as recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia.

President Wilson told Mr. Smith that soon after his inauguration a delegation of negroes urged him to adopt that plan and he promised to do so.

The above article was found in the Age-Herald of Tuesday. It was securely hidden away between advertisements on the back page. We suppose they put such news as this in secluded places in order to keep the followers of the Democratic party blinded to their assumed standard of white supremacy.

Chilton County S. S. Convention

The next annual session of this convention will be held at Mulberry Baptist church, on July 23rd and 24th. The program for the occasion will be published later.

Marvelous Works of Art to be Shown at San Francisco

Thirty-six of the World's Navies Will Participate Officially Upon a Stupendous Scale—World's Most Noted Architects Create City of Palaces the Like of Which Man Has Never Beheld—England to Exhibit.

The photographs upon this page reveal just a few of the thousands of marvels that will be seen by the millions who visit the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco next year.

The opening of the Panama canal is regarded by the nations as one of the most stupendous events in the history of the world, and in recognition of the great work at Panama there will be exhibited in San Francisco such a display of the world's progress as has never been seen before.

The news that England will exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is evidence of the amazing interest that is everywhere taken in America's Panama canal celebration.

Thirty-six of the world's great nations will officially participate in the exposition. Here is the list: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Guatamala, Haiti, Holland, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Panama, Persia, Peru, Portugal, Salvador, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Turkey Uruguay, Venezuela and Great Britain. The nations have appropriated enormous sums. The Argentine, for example, has appropriated $1,300,000 gold for its display; Canada has appropriated $600,000 and construction is far advanced on the great Canadian pavilion.

The natives of every civilized country on earth will be enabled at San Francisco to behold a surpassing view of the progress of their native land.

Throughout the United States and in foreign lands millions of people are planning to visit the exposition next year. At a recent meeting of the Transcontinental Passenger association it was decided to make great reductions in railroad fares. The exposition opens on February 20 and closes on December 4, 1915.

The exposition today is one of the sights of the world. The passenger on a steamer through the Golden Gate beholds the vast domes of the exposition palaces rising like the domes and minarets of a fabled Oriental city. Before the main group of exposition palaces, which face north upon the harbor for more than one mile, a great sea esplanade has been constructed; this has been wonderfully landscaped with thousands of rare trees and shrubs brought from distant parts of the world. Here multitudes will gather during the exposition to view by day the assembled warships of the world's navies and at night a wonderful series of colored illuminations visible forty or fifty miles away. The entire exposition grounds parallel San Francisco harbor for almost three miles.

A HANDSOME book of sixty pages, illustrated profusely in colors and giving detailed descriptions of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Francisco from February 20 until December 4, 1915, and of the Panama canal and the canal region, will be mailed by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition free of charge to all inquirers. The booklet is intended as a general guide to prospective visitors and will also contain information concerning the great engineering feat which the exposition is to celebrate. Write to the Manager, the Bureau of Publications, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, Exposition building, San Francisco, for the booklet.

COL. ROOSEVELT WOULD CONTROL AND NOT CRUSH BIG BUSINESS

In Stirring Speech to Pennsylvania Progressives at Pittsburgh, Outlines Party's Attitude Toward Trusts and the Bosses

SAYS "NEW FREEDOM" IS VERY OLD FREEDOM OF 1650

States That the Present Administration Is Pursuing a Course That Prevents the Existence of Prosperity—Would Put a Stop to the Misdeeds of Business Men Who Do Wrong and Also to the Harrying and Persecution of Honest Business Men Who Do Right.

Pittsburgh, July 1.—Following is the speech which Col. Theodore Roosevelt delivered at the Pennsylvania Progressive Conference:

I am glad to speak for such men as Gifford Pinchot for senator and Dean Lewis for governor. These men by their lives have honored the republic. It would be supreme good fortune to have them in public position for already in private position they have been among the best and most useful public servants.

Moreover I am glad to speak for the second time at a meeting held under the auspices of the Progressive Service of Pennsylvania, first, because Pennsylvania has taken an advanced position in fighting for the Progressive Party and for the principles which that Party represents, and second, because the most striking, and I am tempted to say, most important of those principles is both symbolized by and embodied in the fact that we have made the Progressive Service an integral and and essential portion of the working machinery of the Progressive Party. This is one of the ways in which we make it evident that our promises are to be made good by our performances; that our platform was a solemn pledge, a contract of obligation and that the planks it contains were neither put in merely to catch votes before election and to be cheerfully repudiated after election nor put in with such reckless disregard of feasibility that the promises they contained were certain to be falsified the moment the attempt was made to reduce them to practice. Our whole fight centers around the great principle of social and industrial justice. Our platform was a veritable charter of democracy. Each promise in it set forth some principle of conduct which itself represented one method of achieving our great central purpose.

We are devoted to things, not names. We are not fighting for revenge nor rancor nor to gratify grudges. When we oppose certain public men we oppose them merely because they embody and represent evil principles, or else because their practices have been such that they cannot be trusted to stand in good faith for those great and vital principles of public morality which are essential to the permanent well-being of our people. We wish to see these vital principles incorporated into our governmental system and become part of the habit of thought and habit of action among our people. We will gladly work with any men who will themselves with open sincerity work for these principles, provided that they are men of such character as to justify confidence in their good faith. In this spirit we ask all good citizens to co-operate with us when, as here in Pennsylvania, we hold aloft the flag of good citizenship in the fight to translate these sound and lofty principles into governmental practice. In such a fight it is equally necessary both to cleave steadfastly to a lofty idealism and also to show hard-headed common sense in trying to remove this idealism from the domain of words into the domain of deeds. We realize that mere material well-being is never enough in itself, but only as a foundation for a higher morality, a morality of justice and fair dealing and spiritual aspiration; we realize also that material well-being is absolutely essential, because without it as a foundation, there will be nothing whatever on which to build the lofty superstructure of a higher life. We stand for justice to all and therefore we feel bound to work with heart and brain for that material prosperity the lack of which will prevent our doing justice to anyone. We do not intend to let the business man of brains use these brains to the detriment either of the men who work with or under him, or of the men who are his rivals, or of the general public; but we wish to shape conditions so that if he acts squarely he will succeed, and this not only as a matter of justice to him, but because his success is a factor of prime importance to the success of wage-worker and farmer alike. We wish to pass prosperity around and for that very reason we desire that there may be in existence prosperity sufficient to pass around.

The present national administration is pursuing a course that prevents the existence of prosperity, and that does not offer a single serious or intelligible plan for passing prosperity around, should prosperity, in spite of the administration's efforts, at some future time return to our people. This is true both as regards the trust question and the tariff question. As regards both, the only wise course to follow is that set forth in the National Progressive Platform. The nation should deal with both by continuing executive action through administrative commissions of ample power. One commission should shape our tariff policies so as, with thorough knowledge disinterestedly acquired, to give proper encouragement to our merchants while also giving proper protection to our wage workers, our farmers and our business men. The other commission should exercise strict supervision and control over big business. We should treat it with entire justice, drawing the line not on size, but on misconduct. We should encourage the big business man who does well and who regards his great abilities as a trust to be exercised as much in the interest of the public as in his own interests. But we should check and punish him effectually and promptly when he exercises these abilities to the detriment either of the smaller business man with whom he competes, of the wage-workers who should share with him the benefits of his and their common efforts or of the general public whom he serves.

As regards the tariff, I wish especially to call your attention to the promises made by President Wilson and his supporters two years ago. They asserted that their method of tariff reduction would reduce the cost of living and would thus solve the trust question because, as they said, the trusts were the creatures of the tariff. We then answered that their promises were empty words, that no such results as they stated could or would follow from the course they advocated and that only by the method we propose could either the trust or the tariff question be dealt with so as to abate the existing evils and at the same time increase the general well-being. Two short years have proved us to be right. Their promises have not been kept. Their performance has brought distress upon the nation. The cost of living has not been reduced. But the ability of the average man to earn a living has been greatly reduced. Not the slightest progress has been made toward solving the trust question. But the business community has been harassed and harried to no purpose; and the prosperity of the business man has been checked exactly as the prosperity of the farmer and the wage worker has been checked. As for the farmer, the present tariff, the administration's tariff, was so framed as to result in the sacrifice of his interests. He had no spokesman, no friend in high quarters and his welfare was contemptuously sacrificed. At every point where his interest was concerned he was made to suffer. As for the wage-worker, the result of the tariff was that he suffered even more than his employer.

As for the employer, sometimes he has been able to struggle on with the loss of profits, sometimes he has had to close his shop. In businesses in which any of the big trusts were concerned, it was the small competitors of the trusts who were injured and in many cases ruined. Tariff reduction as put into practice by the present administration has chiefly benefited foreign rivals and competitors. It has done grave injury to the business community and the farming community and has caused suffering to the wage-workers and the whole policy of the administration has been one to cause our people in business, our people on the farms, our people with dinner pails, to look toward the future with grave concern and apprehension.

It is, of course, essential to rebuke those leaders who, by their action, helped to put the present administration in power, and, moreover, it is of vital consequence to the future well-being of our people, to drive from public life all men whose political activities in state and nation alike, have been such as those of Senator Penrose. This is not only a political but a moral issue. I mention the name of Senator Penrose, merely because he typifies a class. I am not concerned with him as an individual; I am concerned with him as a type. Mr. Penrose stands in Pennsylvania as Mr. Barnes stands in New York and Mr. Lorimer in Illinois. When we fight these men and their activities, we are fighting the battle of all decent men and in particular, we are fighting the battle of the honest Republican rank and file, whom these men have misrepresented and betrayed.

It is well to keep in mind that we now have Mr. Wilson's administration, that we now suffer from a wretched foreign policy and from home policies in national affairs which have seriously impaired the well-being of our people, primarily because of the action of Senator Penrose in association with men of the same type like Mr. Barnes. Messrs. Penrose, Barnes and their associates at Chicago taking advantage of the fact that national nominating conventions are not protected by law, followed a course of conduct morally every whit as bad as that which at elections result in wrong-doers of humbler rank being put in stripes. They stole from the rank and file of the Republican Party the right to govern themselves; to nominate their own candidates and promulgate their own platform. They took this action with the deliberate purpose of electing a Democratic president because they infinitely preferred the triumph of their nominal party foes to seeing the control of their own organization wrested from their hands by the rank and file of their own party. They are foes of decent citizenship. Their political lives depend upon their keeping politics in such condition that decent men cannot succeed them and that the ordinary citizens cannot get control of their own government.

Remember that the action of these men at the Chicago convention was merely the culmination of a long series of actions on their part. Their power and the well-being of the interests they subserved depended upon their control of executive action and even more upon their control of legislatio Gradually this control of theirs had become almost absolute. They opposed us merely because at the moment we embodied those forces and principles, the triumph of which meant the ending of the system which kept them in public life as efficient tools and representatives of the great interests behind them. Rather than see this control broken, Messrs. Penrose, Barnes and their associates deliberately put the democratic organization and Mr. Wilson into power at Washington.

Of course, our contest must always be primarily one for principles. It must always be a contest to enact into law and reduce to the domain of executive action these principles. But it is impossible to do this effectively until we drive from political leadership the boss whose very existence in politics is the negation of these principles. There is no use in endeavoring to put into effect our platform for social and industrial justice if the legislative and executive officers of government are mere sub-officers of a boss, whether this boss be Mr. Penrose, Mr. Barnes, or Mr. Murphy. Much of our effort is to secure laws protecting the labor of women and prohibiting the labor of children in mines and factories, providing for workmen's compensation and the like. Our effort is to secure equality of opportunity, to democratize industry, and to better the living and working conditions of all who are not vicious, shiftless and idle. Our effort is to better the standard of living and working, making it worthy of a free people; and gradually to introduce the beginnings of representative government into business. This effort is bound to come to naught, if, in its actual working, the forces of government are administered by men whose whole theory of action is based on the alliance of crooked politics with crooked wealth.

Much of our effort is to help the men who live on farms to help themselves by working in co-operation, so that they may better the conditions of living, so that they may produce more and at the same time make their farms more attractive to their children, so that they may market their products themselves and apply the best business methods for the benefit of those who till the soil; and this effort will fail if the government of state and nation is controlled by men who treat with derision the very idea of seriously studying the conditions in the open country that need remedying.

Much of our effort is to help industry. We propose to help business by enabling honest business men to co-operate for their own common good and for the general public good. We propose to make the conditions such that these honest men can earn a fair living for themselves and their families without the haunting fear of being prosecuted for violations of law which they did not and could not know were such and which were not violations of sound public policy.

Much of our effort is to help men and women workers. Just as we believe in co-operation among the farmers and the business men so we believe in co-operation among the wage-workers, in order that they may better their conditions of living and have a larger share in the prosperity of industry. And we further believe that the wage-workers and the business men must co-operate together and work closer together for their mutual advantage. It has been the cut-throat competition of the past—the competition that Mr. Wilson is determined to preserve by law—which has not only hurt business and prevented the business man from working most effectively for the common good but which has forced the working man to work for ruinously small wages. We propose to substitute the era of co-operation for the era of competition among the business men and farmers and wage-workers; and as a necessary corollary we believe that the government must in thorough-going fashion supervise and regulate this movement toward co-operation.

But this effort will come to nought if honest business men support sinister politicians whose interested endeavor is chiefly to help the crooked business man whose success is achieved by swindling his fellows. In their resentment at the national administration because of its part in bringing them to sore need, many business men and working men and farmers threaten to vote even for such politicians as Mr. Penrose in hope of securing relief. Those who do will invite a worse disaster than that from which they now suffer. It was the politicians like Mr. Penrose who are responsible for the existence of the present national administration. To put them in power would merely ensure in a short time another violent swing of the pendulum against them, and a continuation of government by convulsion, of a governmental see-saw between two sets of policies, both inimical to the general well-fare, and two sets of politicians, neither of them responsive to the public needs. For the honor and interest of your state and of the nation all the good citizens of Pennsylvania should join against Mr. Penrose and his nominees and followers. For the honor and interest of the nation and the interes' of your state the good citizens of Pennsylvania should oppose the supporters of the present national administration. For the high honor and vital interest of both nation and state, the citizens of Pennsylvania should put into office those staunch, fearless and able public servants, Gifford Pinchot, Dean Lewis, and their associates.

We ask that you consider specifically the performances of the Progressive Party, here in Pennsylvania and in the nation.

The Progressive Party is a party of performance. Two years ago, in our national and state platforms, which we designated "contracts with the people," we pledged ourselves to certain definite reforms. Even before the Presidential campaign of 1912 was over in this and other states, our committees were at work preparing bills to carry out the pledges of our state platforms. In this respect, you in Pennsylvania were leaders. You controlled the Republican State Convention of May, 1912. After drawing the first Progressive state platform, the convention took the then-unprecedented step of appointing a committee, known as its executive and legislative committee, to prepare bills to carry out its platform pledges. This committee presented to your legislature of 1913 a number of measures all of which passed your House of Representatives.

The Pennsylvania Progressive legislative program is one of which you may well be proud. It included laws, to provide non-partisan nominations and elections for all local offices, as well as for judges, and to prevent corrupt practices at primary and regular elections. Had this last bill become law, no candidate for United States Senator or Governor could have expended at both the primary and regular elections combined more than ten thousand dollars. The expenditure by a candidate for Governor in a primary contest of nearly forty thousand dollars would have been impossible.

There were also bills carrying out our pledge to promote social and industrial justice—a bill preventing the employment of women in manufacturing establishments more than fifty hours per week, or more than nine hours per day, a Minimum Wage Bill, and a Child Labor Bill containing the provisions advocated by the National Child Labor Association and by all persons interested in child welfare—a bill which would have prevented the present exploitation of child labor in this state, including the disgraceful labor of children under sixteen in glass factories at night; a bill which would have been the first step in giving to all the children of Pennsylvania what every child is entitled to have, namely, a right to a time for play, to the opportunity to grow up strong in body, and to a mental and physical training adequate to enable it to meet the duties and responsibilities of manhood or womanhood. The restrictions on the labor of women and children which the Pennsylvania Progressives advocated are now on the statute-books of a majority of the states, and a number of western states last year enacted minimum wage laws.

Finally there were bills calling a Constitutional Convention to readjust your constitution to your existing needs, a matter of present and pressing importance. I am informed that there is practically no measure designed to meet with efficiency a problem of state administration or local government that does not run counter to some clause of your constitution, drawn as it was over forty years ago to meet then-existing, but not present, conditions.

The Progressive Legislative and Executive Committee also endorsed the Workmen's Compensation Bill prepared by the State Industrial Accident Commission, a measure representing a reform of vital importance which has been very generally adopted in all parts of the country and by all the great industrial states bordering on Pennsylvania.

Thus you, the Progressive Party of Pennsylvania, did your utmost to fulfill to the letter all pledges made prior to the last election. The bills carrying out those pledges are not law today because the State Senate and the Executive are still in the control of the Penrose organization. For, remember, the organization controlled by the forces for which Senator Penrose and the candidates on the Republican state ticket stand—the same forces which we fought at Chicago—is solely responsible for defeating this legislation.

The Progressives have also taken every possible step to fulfill the pledges made in respect to National Legislation in their first National Progressive Platform.

I hold in my hand a pamphlet entitled, "Progressive Congressional Program." It contains some twelve measures prepared by a joint committee of the Progressive members of Congress and of the National Legislative Reference Committee of the Progressive Party.

I commend it, of course, to Progressives, but especially to those who are trying to make it appear that the Progressive Party represents merely a sentiment, and not definite, concrete measures.

The Progressive Party stands for protection as regards business man, farmer and wage-worker alike. It is against all favoritism to special interests. It believes that the tariff is a matter, not of politics, but of sound public policy, and that it should be handled in a business way. The schedules should be determined by a knowledge of facts, not by trading votes and log-rolling. It should be the result of the careful deliberation of a body of trained men, chosen not for their political beliefs, but for their expert knowledge of business conditions. We Progressives advocate the immediate creation of a non-partisan commission with power to propose revision of the tariff rates, schedule by schedule, treating each case on an intelligent consideration of its merits, divorced from favoritism and the fostering of special interests.

Let us turn now to the Progressive anti-trust program. We believe in co-operation among business men, among farmers and among wage-workers. Our program is based on the fundamental proposition that the State should regard private monopolistic power as contrary to public welfare, but that it should never attack a particular business organization merely because of its size. In many lines of industry the unit of social and economic efficiency in our time is a large unit. What we want is a business machinery strong and efficient enough to do our business work, to supply well and cheaply the daily needs of 90,000,000 people. We want that machinery run honestly, fairly and without monopoly. In short, we want business power ample to serve us, and we do not want that power abused. We want the control of corporations to be exercised effectively and promptly, so as to get results We should end once and for all the attempt to regulate business by a series of law-suits. We wish to put a stop to the misdeeds of business men who do wrong. We wish also to put a stop to the harrying and persecution of honest business men who do right.

The Progressives therefore advocate the creation of a strong Interstate Trade Commission and would give such Commission, primarily, three powers:

First, the power of investigation. The Commission should be able to ascertain on complaint or on its own motion, whether a monopoly in fact exists, and if it does exist, the basis of its monopolistic power.

Second, the power directly to prohibit all unfair trade practices within its jurisdiction. This power would enable the Commission to stop all monopolies based on unfair and oppressive trade practices. Whenever monopoly is based on such practices, what is needed is not the right to recommend that suits be brought by the Attorney-General, or by anyone else. What is needed is the direct power in the Commission itself to stop the wrong.

Third, the power to end the exclusive control of a factor necessary to production by an order adapted to the circumstances of the particular case. The order may involve changes in organization, in management, or in the conduct of the business. Where exclusive possession of a natural resource is the basis of the monopoly, it may be necessary to subject its possession to the obligation of public service, that is, the obligation to sell to others a reasonable amount at reasonable rates.

Our constructive program of anti-trust legislation has no quarrel with large business organizations as such. On the contrary we recognize that business efficiency in production can be attained only through business organization. But we demand that the government be clothed with all the necessary power to crush monopoly with all its attendant evils.

Contrasted with this program we have the Democratic anti-trust program now under discussion in the Senate of the United States. That program proves the inadequacy of the Democratic Party for the present and the future of the Nation. It is, and always will be, the State's Rights Party, the Party opposed to strong Federal action, the "Party-afraid-of-Power."

We cannot control our great National businesses without power, National power. But the Democrats dare not use power themselves, nor let anyone else have it. Their trust program, as it stands today, is made futile by this fear. Their official administration bills propose a weak Federal Trade Commission, with no power except to investigate and report. They fear to give the government the strength to cope with corporate abuses. They fear to give the Commission power to prevent unfair trade practices. Indeed, their measure would hardly give the Commission power really to investigate, much less to destroy by proper administrative order, monopolies based on the exclusive possession of a factor essential to production. To the powers of investigation and recommendation which the bill proposes to give to the Commission, so far as they go, we have no objection. It is the inadequacy of the Commission's power to destroy monopoly which we condemn.

But the Clayton Bill goes hopelessly wrong in that it forbids specifically any combination, or agreement in interstate commerce, between any two or more corporations, firms or even individuals, which in any way lessens or restricts the competition between them. This is the hub of their whole position. They propose to force every man to compete with every other man. They hold that two farmers selling milk across a State line cannot co-operate; and that two men doing any business across a State line cannot form a partnership or a corporation. They insist that there must be no big business power, concentrated power, or large enterprise anywhere, and that our business must go back to the period of not merely 1850, but 1650; to the cobbler's bench, the grist-mill, and the blacksmith's forge.

This is economic absurdity. We live in the twentieth century, not the seventeeth. We have ninety millions of citizens, scattered over almost four million square miles. They cannot exist in any such primitive business status. We must have ample power, large units, to do the work of today. But the Democrats dare not give to the government the firm grasp and reach to control these corporations. So they are forced into the absurd position of proposing to destroy all business power. They cannot, under their theories of government control business. Therefore, their sole alternative is to destroy it. They are absolutely blind to the facts of history. Unlimited competition has proved one of the greatest curses of modern civilization. It was unlimited competition which created the great trusts, exactly as it created the sweat-shop and is chiefly responsible for child labor. The New Freedom is merely the exceedingly old freedom which permits each man to cut his neighbor's throat.

The Progressives are of the twentieth century. They face the facts of today. They are not afraid of power, either in business or in Government. Their program will allow business concentration in so far as such concentration gives social and economic efficiency and good service. But it will also give the Government full power to see that business concentration does serve these necessary ends, and that it is not used for unfair competition or for monopoly, or for the unfair treatment of labor or for any other anti-social end.

This is the only tenable position on the trust problem, for it faces the facts, and does not try to turn back the hands of the clock. By long and disappointing experience we have had several cardinal facts hammered into us.

FIRST: We cannot and do not want to destroy all corporations; we must have large units to do our work.

SECOND: We cannot make every man compete with every other man; we cannot go back to 1850, still less to 1650.

THIRD: We cannot destroy monopoly by attacking all forms of concentration whether monopolistic or not.

FOURTH: We cannot destroy real monopoly by attacking its legal form. We must find out and take away the real economic basis of monopoly, which is a very different thing.

FIFTH: We can get no effective results through the courts, with their slow and restricted procedure.

SIXTH: We must encourage honest business, and allow that business concentration which will give the power necessary to serve us. This policy of the encouragement of decent business is as important to the welfare of our people as is our other policy of effective warfare against corrupt and unfair business.

SEVENTH: There must be co-operation among business men, among wage-workers and among farmers.

Our program recognizes the facts of today. We must have business power to do our work. We Progressives are not afraid of power. We know that power can be controlled to good ends and is necessary for great ends. We know this is true in business, as in government, and that no other position is possible for the modern state.

We cannot control our great National businesses without power, National power. But the Democrats dare not use power themselves, or let anyone else have it. Their trust program, as it stands today, is made futile by this fear.

The real business problem is the question of that great mass of corporations, which are neither monopolies on the one hand, nor individual businesses on the other. Here is the truth that so many overlook. If we view the whole area of our business, we find at one end, covering a small section, a part of our business which is still small and individual. We find at the other end, and also covering a small section, certain great businesses which are substantially monopolistic. But, in between these two extremes, and covering by far the largest area of our total business, is a mass of corporations, having a greater or less degree of business concentration, but not individual, on the one hand, nor in any sense monopolistic on the other.

We have had now twenty-four years' experience with trying to regulate business by destruction. The result has been nearly flat failure. The administration proposes a policy of further destruction, even more unintelligent in conception, and certain to be more futile in performance, than the existing policy which it amends.

The only alternative is the Progressive plan, which is sane, effective and fair. We propose to provide a strong Commission, getting prompt action by direct administrative process; with power in that Commission to attack directly all unfair and oppressive forms of competition; power in that Commission to take a case of monopoly, find out what is the real business cornerstone of its monopoly, and then bring the full strength of the Government directly against it. We propose to do away with all unfair practices by big business or little business. We propose heartily to encourage honest business, and, to give full scope to efficiency, provided the efficiency is used for the benefit and not to the detriment of the people as a whole.

From all of this it follows that we have a right to ask good citizens, men to whom the honor of America in international matters, and the welfare of all of us within our own boundaries, are dear, to join against the present administration. No matter what the party to which these good citizens have belonged in the past, no matter what the theories of governmental action to which they have professed allegiance, they must realize that when tested by practice and performance the theories and promises of the administration have resulted in national discredit and misfortune. The policies of the administration should be rebuked by the people and senators and congressmen returned to Washington who will strive to end these policies.

KELLER PLANNING TOUR OF ALABAMA

WITH A VIEW OF ESTABLISHING TRUNK HIGHWAYS. WILL INSPECT VARIOUS ROUTES.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

For the purpose of inspecting various routes for a system of trunk highways that are to be constructed in Alabama through state aid, W. S. Keller, state highway engineer, is planning an automobile tour which will embrace 20 counties in Alabama. Mr. Keller's tour will be similar to the tour taken by him last summer, but this year he will make two tours. The first will be made from Montgomery to Mobile by way of Evergreen, Greenville and Brewton, and the other will be made from Birmingham to Tuscaloosa.

Last year Mr. Keller made a tour which included nearly every county in Alabama, and consisted of about 2000 miles. He visited Mobile and Tuscumbia last year, but the trip from Montgomery to Mobile was made by way of Selma, and From Birmingham to Tuscumbia by way of Blount Springs, Cullman and Decatur.

It is probable that the two tours will be made during the month of July. Mr. Keller is now making arrangements to obtain an automobile for the trip and will make a definite announcement in connection with the tours within a few days.

Manuals for Instructors.

Manuals for the county institute instructors to be used by them in the county institutions this summer were issued by W. F. Feagin, state superintendent of education. The manuals are neatly printed and bound and will be distributed at once to the county institute workers, and the county superintendents of education.

In the manual is a complete program of the work to be done by the instructors and a schedule of the days in the week on which the work is to be done. Chapters of the book are devoted to outlining what should be discussed in the matter of teaching English, reading, languages, spelling, both in primary and grammar grades, and writing

Chapters are also devoted to manual and household arts, the school as a community center, special days, including good roads days, health days, school improvement days and better farming days. Men's clubs, women's clubs and boys' and girls' clubs are also to be discussed at the institutes and chapters explaining the discussions are contained in the manual.

Other topics in the manual are "Better Health Conditions in the Community," "Better Economic Conditions in the Community," "Better Social Conditions in the Community," and "Better Moral Conditions in the Community." Some space is devoted to the "State Teachers' Reading Circle," "School Credit for Home Work," and "School Improvement."

Based upon a survey recently made of conditions in representative parts of the state, the instuctor in any rural county where 100 teachers are present, may expect to find approximately the following conditions, according to the manual:

Twenty-two never taught before; 30 have never attended any high school; 34 possess no professional books; 43 subscribe for no teachers' magazines; 45 are strangers in the county where they expect to teach, and therefore lacking in county spirit, due to their ignorance of local conditions; 51 hold third grade certificates; 65 have never attended a summer school; 70 do not belong to the State Teachers' Reading Circle; 76 are strangers to the community where they will teach; 80 do no belong to the State Educational association; 90 have never attended a normal school, even for a day.

Chancellorship Cost $1470.

W. R. Chapman, who was elected Chancellor of the Southeastern division in the recent primaries, spent $1470 in his campaign, according to his expense account filed in the office of Cyrus B. Brown, secretary of state. Mr. Chapman defeated J. A. Carnley of Elba in the second primary. In the first primary Mr. Chapman, Mr. Carnley and M. W. Rushton of Luverne were candidates. Recently Mr. Chapman was appointed chancellor to succeed Mr. Thomas M. Espy of Dothan.

Will Have New Banks.

Alex E. Walker, superintendent of the state banking department, went to Waterloo, Lauderdale county, July 1, to be present at the opening of a new state bank at that place. The bank is backed by a number of prominent citizens of Lauderdale county. Notice of the organization of a new state bank at Tuskegee has been sent to the state banking department. This bank will make the third bank that will operate in Tuskegee. About 15 citizens of Macon county are stockholders in the institution.

Henderson Files Expense Account.

Charles Henderson, next Governor of Alabama, spent $27,952.85 in his successful campaign for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, according to his expense account filed in the office of Cyrus B. Brown, Secretary of State.

Mr. Henderson's expense account covers both campaigns and the total amount is about $5,000 more than the amount purported to have been spent by B. B. Comer, Mr. Henderson's principal opponent in the two primaries.

Mr. Henderson's expense account is as follows:

Mailing lists, stationery and postage	$ 8,576.25
Headquarters, including the clerks, rent, etc.	2,342.00
Publicity, newspapers, buttons, badges, placards, etc.	8,237.40
Organization	3,650.00
Expenses, speakers	2,640.00
Incidentals, telegrams, telephones	1,146.40
Personal traveling expenses	860.00
Assessment, State Executive Committee	500.00
Total	$27,952.85

In the first primary, Mr. Henderson was opposed by B. B. Comer, Captain Reuben F. Kolb and Walter D. Seed. Mr. Henderson and Mr. Comer were the two leading candidates in the first primary and in the second primary held May 11 Mr. Henderson defeated Mr. Comer.

"Swat the Weevil."

Determined farmers of Wilcox county are making an aggressive fight against the boll weevil and good results are being accomplished, according to information sent in by various demonstration agents to the State Department of Agriculture. For the last two weeks the farmers in Wilcox have been particularly aggressive and several meetings have been held which were attended by many white and negro farmers.

Perhaps the largest meeting ever held in the county convened in the county court house June 20. It was attended by white and colored farmers, merchants, bankers and county officials. Every store in town as well as banks and other offices were closed for the meeting; the farmers in the streets, representing the farms in the vicinity of Camden, were called in and filled the assembly room of the court house until there was hardly standing room.

The meeting was called to order by G. T. Dannelly, who was elected chairman. A large number of representative men were called on for remarks.

A negro tenant told his experience in getting the weevil under control. His attention was attracted to the falling of squares which led to a search for the weevil. The same evening he found seven. The following day he called his hands and continued the search and found thirty, the following day he caught 300. He continued until none could be found. He presented to the meeting the results of his last search, a bottle containing a few weevils. The negro stated if the weevils he did not get lay eggs he is sure to get them and he will make a crop if any one does. Many other negroes are doing equally affective work.

Change Court Rule:

Further steps looking to the abolition of the one-judge decision have been taken by the supreme court of Alabama in the promulgation of a rule by which the justices may each read all the records presented to the court. The supreme court's latest ruling announced contemplates a significant reform in the practivce of that court in the matter of deciding cases.

The rule, in brief, declares that whenever counsel for either side, upon the submission of a cause to the court, furnishes three or more copies of the record, that the justices who are to decide the case will each read the record before an opinion is written.

Heretofore, the justices have been in many cases unable to read the record because no copies were furnished, hence it was necessary that the contents be explained to them before considering and determining upon an opinion.

Two Convicts Paroled.

Two convicts were paroled by Governor O'Neal, these being Walter Loyd of Lowndes county and Alex Murphy of Monroe. The paroles of the men were recommended by the State pardon board.

First Institutes in July.

Teachers institutes for the year 1914 will start during the week of July 6, according to lists of the institutes compiled at the State Department of Education.

Greer Named on Jury Commission.

Charles H. Greer of Marion, one of the pioneer newspaper men of the state and a candidate for secretary of state in the last election, was appointed as a member of the jury commission of Perry county. The appointment was made by Governor O'Neal.

New Text Books.

Text books for use in the county high schools of the state were announced by the special committee appointed by Superintendent of Education Wm. F. Feagin. The new course of study contemplates a saving to the high school students of thousands of dollars per year in thecost of text books, the reduction of the price of books being the most remarkable feature of the new adoption. The action of the committee was announced after several days of consideration of the work.

PROUD, GLAD TIME

Celebration of Nation's Birth Proper Time for Rejoicing.

JOHN ADAMS' HOPE REALIZED

Great Statesman Predicted That the Day Would Be Observed Always as a Time for Demonstrations of Thankfulness and Joy.

THE letter has become historic, that one in which John Adams predicts the coming celebration of the Fourth of July. "I am apt to believe," he wrote, "that it (the day) will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forevermore."

His prediction has become so true that now we seek to curtail the bombast of the day as a rank overgrowth not foreseen by our forefathers. A proud, glad time, the nation's birthday; a time, not for unworthy and injurious celebration, but for renewal of loyal citizenship, and for private rejoicing in the privilege of American citizenship.

The first celebration by congress of the Fourth has been preserved to us in a letter to his daughter penned by that same splendid old John Adams. "Yesterday being the anniversary of American Independence, was celebrated here with the festivity and ceremony becoming the occasion. I am too old to delight in pretty descriptions, if I had a talent for them, otherwise a picture might be drawn which would please the fancy of a Whig, at least. The thought of taking any notice of this day was not conceived until the third. It was too late to have a sermon, as everyone wished, so this must be deferred to another year. Congress determined to adjourn over that day, and to dine together. The general officers and others in town were invited, after the president and council and board of war of this state.

Celebrations on the Ships.

"In the morning the Delaware frigate, several large galleys, and other continental armed vessels, galleys and guard-boats were hauled off in the river, and several of them beautifully dressed in the colors of all nations displayed about the masts, yards and rigging. At one o'clock the ships were all manned; that is, the men were all ordered aloft and arranged upon the topyards and shrouds, making a striking appearance of companies of men drawn up in order in the air."

He tells how he went on board with the president and the marine committee. Each armed vessel fired 13 salutes, then the galleys and gunboats. He describes much shouting and huzzaing "in a manner which gave great joy to every friend of this country, and the utmost terror and dismay to every lurking Tory."

Dining at three, they were "agreeably entertained with excellent company, good cheer, fine music from the band of Hessians taken at Trenton, and continual volleys between every toast from a company of soldiers drawn up in Second street before the city tavern, where we dined." Maneuvers on the common by light horse and trains of artillery, and a thousand infantry filled the day agreeably for the crowd.

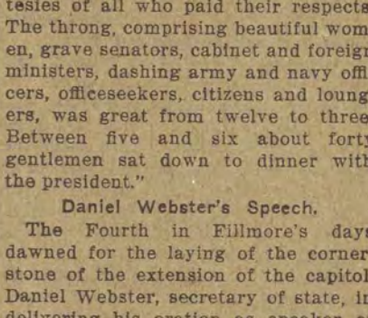
"In the evening I was walking about the streets for a little fresh air and exercise, and was surprised to find the whole city lighting up their candles at the windows. I walked most of the evening, and I think it was the most splendid illumination I ever saw—a few surly houses were dark, but the lights were very universal. Considering the lateness of the design, and the suddenness of the execution, I was amazed at the universal joy and alacrity that was discovered, and at the brilliancy and splendor of every part of this joyful exhibition. I had forgot the ringing of the bells all day, and the bonfires in the streets, and the fireworks played off. Had General Howe been here in disguise, or his master, this show would have given them the heartache."

When Enthusiasm Waned.

We have an account of the Fourth as celebrated in Tyler's administration. Already it lacked the freshness and spontaneity of those early ones John Adams witnessed, one of which he saddened by his own death. "Independence forever," he murmured, as he lay dying, his ear caught by the sounds of fireworks. It was the toast he had sent in response to a request for one to be given in his name at a Fourth of July banquet to be celebrated many hundred miles from where the sands of life were running swift with him.

That of Tyler's breathes nausea of noise and distaste for vapidity. An eye-witness writes, "The Fourth of July passed much as usual everywhere; squibs and popguns and cracked bells, with vapid orations, stupid toasts, and execrable speeches; hot meats and cold wines, the customary laudation of the nation, and the quantum of headaches that follow unusual indulgence."

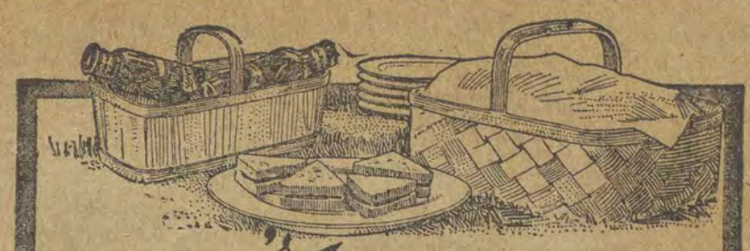
There was a levee at the White House, and the Sunday school children marched through the walks of the capitol grounds; "Mr. Adams watching them with satisfaction and interest," John Quincy Adams, then shared the quiet enthusiasm of his father. The marine band comes into prominence. Citizens of every class thronged the White House, listening to the martial airs received by the president.



"The deportment of Mr. Tyler was easy and natural, yet sufficiently dignified, placing everyone at his ease. And nothing could surpass the quiet, unaffected grace with which the ladies received and acknowledged the courtesies of all who paid their respects. The throng, comprising beautiful women, grave senators, cabinet and foreign ministers, dashing army and navy officers, officeseekers, citizens and loungers, was great from twelve to three. Between five and six about forty gentlemen sat down to dinner with the president."

Daniel Webster's Speech.

The Fourth in Fillmore's days dawned for the laying of the cornerstone of the extension of the capitol. Daniel Webster, secretary of state, in delivering his oration as speaker of the day, accomplished more than "the customary laudation of the nation." He stepped forward, copy in hand, but extemporized new thoughts and highly interesting reflections.



"I have said, gentlemen, that our inheritance is an inheritance of American liberty. That liberty is characteristic, peculiar and altogether our own. Nothing like it existed in former times nor was known in the most enlightened states of antiquity; while with us its principles have become interwoven into the minds of individual men, connected with our daily opinions and our daily habits, until it is, if I may so say, an element of social as well as of political life; and the consequence is, that to whatever region an American citizen carries himself, he takes with him, fully developed in his own understanding and experience, our American principles and opinions, and becomes ready at once, in co-operation with others, to apply them to the formation of new governments."

A CRACK COMPANY.

Quieter Celebrations.

Various ways of celebrating the Fourth have been substituted in different American cities for the old promiscuous celebration, in which every patriotic individual spent money for fireworks and held a celebration in his own back yard. The old method was fearfully wasteful—it was distributive effort. And it distributed the noise in a way to set elderly people wild.

The American Farmer.

All things recalled, wouldn't it be the part of statesmanship to do congressionally for the American farmer? He's one-fourth of your population, and the nation's best hope. The American merchant borrows at five per cent. The American stock gambler, producing nothing, accomplishing nothing, a merest leech living by toil of others, borrows for even less. The American farmer, with all that can be said to his good and solvent advantage, must and does pay 8½ per cent.

And all the time the savings and postal banks are bulging with billions.

If the government would make two blades of grass grow where but one has grown before—and publicly it would pay—the wide-flung chance lies open. Let it model action on French or German lines, and place the farmer on a borrowing par with the merchant the manufacturer and the stock jobber. Let it evolve a system of farm loans which shall put those savings and postal bank billions at a per cent within the farmer's borrowing reach. —Hearst's Magazine.

ITCHING, BURNING ERUPTION

Thomasville, Ala.—"I suffered with eczema on my hands and feet two or three years. About eleven years ago I became troubled with an itching, burning eruption which came on my hands and feet in little water blisters and in about a day or two when I would let the water out or wash it out, using my hands, then the places would fester and itch to beat the band. I could not do any work that was rough on my hands at all. It caused me great suffering and inconvenience.

"I tried everything that I knew of or was told and never was really relieved until I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I would wash the parts in water with the Cuticura Soap and then when I dried them I would apply the Cuticura Ointment on the surface in the daytime, and at night I would get a soft piece of cloth and apply the Cuticura Ointment on my hands and let it stay that way all night. A perfect cure was effected. No one will ever know how glad I was to get my hands and feet cured." (Signed) Geo. C. Crook, Nov. 25, 1912.

Gladstone's Domestic Rule.

Mr. Gladstone once said that he had solved the domestic problem in this way: "Whenever Mrs. Gladstone insists I submit; and whenever I insist she submits." He didn't say, however, whether they took turns about insisting and submitting. Marriage is a failure when one of the parties insists on being the insister and doesn't take turns in submitting to the submitter.

Anvil on the Scales.

It is customary when a military suffragette is placed on trial in England for her friends to while away their time in court by bounding shoes, bags of flour and bales of pamphlets on the magistrate's brow. This conduct is calculated to bias—if not brain—the court.

W. O. Mulkey of Geneva defeated J. J. Speight of Eufaula in the contest for the seat of Henry D. Clayton in Congress. This is one instance where the cause of the people made a successful battle against the machine gang of the Democrats. Mulkey is a Democrat, but he is opposed to ring rule in politics, and believes in abiding by the voice of the people. He received the endorsement of the Bull Moose committee in Birmingham last week.

COL. ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH.

We are fortunate this week in securing for our readers the full speech of Col. Roosevelt, which he delivered at Pittsburg on Tuesday night. This speech is highly important in that it is the first public utterance of the Colonel since his South American trip, and also because it outlines the platform and general plan of battle of the Progressive party in the campaign which is just opening. For being able to give this speech so early, and in such complete form, we are indebted to the splendid efforts of the Western Newspaper Union, which furnishes our weekly ready-print service. No other weekly paper in the state will have this speech this week, and in publishing it we hope to merit the appreciation of all who are interested in the future of the Progressive party.

House Party at Mineral Springs

An interesting event in the social calendar of Clanton this summer was the house party given last week by Mr. and Mrs. Guy Higgins at Mineral Springs, in honor of their guest, Miss Mary Will Feutrelle of Sledges, Ala.

The party left Clanton last Thursday in automobiles and traveled through the country to the springs about 12 miles away. A cottage had been engaged for the occasion, and after the arrival of the party the house was soon put in order, and then the fun began. The boys and girls found various sources of pleasure and amusement, rambling over the hills and through the woods, bathing in the streams emanating from the springs, and enjoying the quiet shades with books to read when they were too tired for the more violent ways of pleasure. Probably the most exciting feature of the occasion was the "ducking" of "Uncle" Fenn Jones in the spring by a party of young ladies. The members of the party returned to town Tuesday of this week.

Those who enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Higgins on this enjoyable occasion were:

Misses Izora Callen, Frances Higgins, Mary Will Feutrelle, guest of honor, Willie Belle Sartor, Kathleen Mullins, Pauline Woodyard, Lilla Belle Mullins, Delene Hayes, Rilla Smith, Messrs. Omar Heard, Hoke Pipes, John Silas, Oliver Mullins, Mrs. Brennan, Mrs. Sallie Foshe, Mr. and Mrs. Barrineau of Barrineau Park, Florida, and "Uncle" Fenn Jones.

Mothers Tell of Mother's Friend

Experience is or should be our best teacher. Women who have obeyed the highest and noblest of all sacrifices, the struggle for the life of others, should have a better idea of helpful influence than those who theorize from observation.

At any rate when a prospective grandmother urges her daughter to do as she did—to use "Mother's Friend," there is reason to believe it the right advice.

"Mother's Friend" is an external application for expectant mothers. Its purpose is to furnish pliancy to the muscles, to take away the strain on the cords and ligaments, to relieve the tension of nerves and tendons so apt to provoke or aggravate nausea, morning sickness, twitchings of the limbs and so on.

Although, in the nature of things, a woman would use "Mother's Friend" but but rarely, yet so effective has it been found that this splendid remedy is on sale in most drug stores throughout the United States. It has been prepared by Bradfield Regulator Co., 406 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. and advertised by us for over forty years. This is a fine record for such a special remedy and the grateful letters received to-day are just as appreciative as were those of years ago notwithstanding that methods are supposed to have greatly advanced. Ask at the drug store for a bottle of "Mother's Friend." It is worth while.

Backward and Forward

Looking backward we see some things to regret, some things of which we are proud.

This backward look clears our vision for a better view of the future. We have a wider vision, a saner perspective. Out of the fund of experience we know enough to avoid some mistakes, and reduce the chances of others to the minimum.

Retrospection is a good thing; it is conducive to thought, and anything which exercises the brain contributes to the world's development.

We have had many and bitter disappointments in the past. But they have not made us pessimists. They have but strengthened our determination, for we know that injustice is as insecure as justice is secure.

The L. & N. Railroad is a permanent constructive institution. It is for the service, and at the service of the general public. Its functions are not confined to the mere manufacture and sale of freight and passenger transportation. While we endeavor to at all times supply the highest class service in both departments, we also devote time, and energy, and thought and money to development.

Our roadbeds must be maintained, that life and property may be transported with safety and dispatch.

Our stations and our rolling stock must be kept up to the standard required by the rapid increase in industry and commerce.

Our staff of employees must be selected with care and disciplined that our patrons will receive courteous and satisfactory service.

Then, there is the great foundation of all prosperity, THE SOIL, to which we must devote scientific attention to make it yield its treasures for the benefit of mankind.

The L. & N. has a carefully selected staff of men, each expert in his particular line, and each devoting his time and thought to matters in the respective departments.

We are conducting, and hope to maintain here in the South, a railroad system second to none in the world. We take a pride in the L. & N. and we want you to share that pride with us—we want you to realize that when you travel or ship via the L. & N. that you will receive the highest standard of excellence in service.

A backward look will disclose the steady march of progress we have made, and clear your view of greater things for the future.

Purifies Blood With Telling Effect

Gives Conscious Evidence of Its Direct Action.

S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, almost talks as it sweeps its way through the circulation. Its action is so direct that very often in some forms of skin affliction the appearance of the eruptions changes over night, the itch and redness are gone and recovery begins immediately.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin afflictions.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antidotal effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 534 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores, but beware of all substitutes. Do not accept them.

RHEUMATISM ARRESTED

Many people suffer the tortures of lame muscles and stiffened joints because of impurities in the blood, and each succeeding attack seems more acute until rheumatism has invaded the whole system.

To arrest rheumatism it is quite as important to improve your general health as to purify your blood, and the cod liver oil in Scott's Emulsion is nature's great blood-maker, while its medicinal nourishment strengthens the organs to expel the impurities and upbuild your strength.

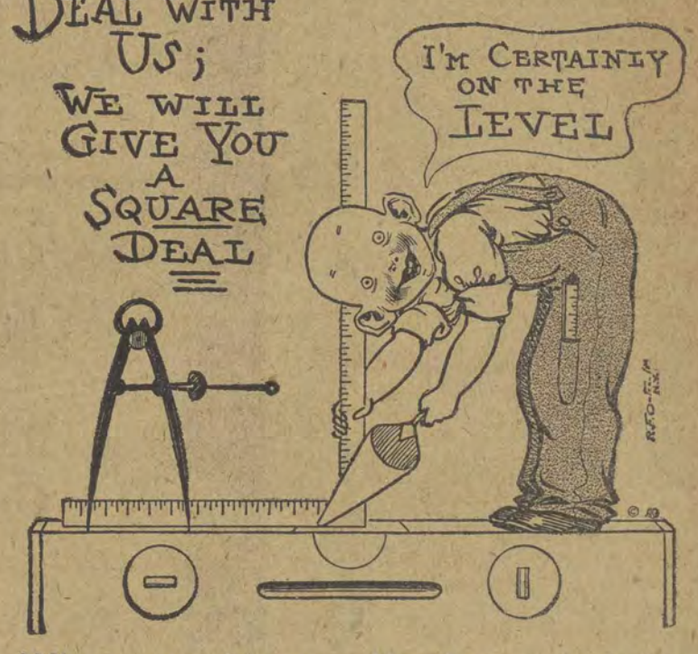
How Do You Feel After Eating.?

One should feel good natured and satisfied. That is the way one will feel if the digestive organs are working properly. No pain or distress should follow a hearty meal. If there is pain or distress your stomach needs the aid that POINDEXTER'S TONIC will give.

A dose directly after eating will prevent all trouble. This remedy will stimulate the digestive organs thereby increasing the secretion of gastric juices.



Its use insures perfect assimilation and the greatest possible percentage of nutriment from what is eaten. Money back if you are not satisfied.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Sara declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty again attempts to tell the real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word. Sara insults Hetty by revealing that all this time she has believed Hetty to have sinned in her relations with Challis Wrandall. Later she realizes that Hetty is innocent. Leslie again proposes to Hetty and is relected. Hetty prepares to leave Sara, declaring that after what has happened she can remain no longer.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

Leslie did not turn up at his father's place in the High street that night until Booth was safely out of the way. He spent a dismal evening at the boat club.

His father and mother were in the library when he came home at half-past ten. From a dark corner of the garden he had witnessed Booth's early departure. Vivian had gone down to the gate in the low-lying hedge with her visitor. She came in a moment after Leslie's entrance.

"Hello, Les," she said, bending an inquiring eye upon him. "Isn't this early for you?"

Her brother was standing near the fireplace.

"There's a heavy dew falling, Mater," he said gruffly. "Shan't I touch a match to the kindling?"

His mother came over to him quickly, and laid her hand on his arm.

"Your coat is damp," she said anxiously. "Yes, light the fire."

"It's very warm in this room," said Mr. Wrandall, looking up from his book. They were always doing something for Leslie's comfort.

No one seemed to notice him. Leslie knelt and struck a match.

"Well?" said Vivian.

"Well what?" he demanded without looking up.

His sister took a moment for thought. "Is Hetty coming to stay with us in July?"

He stood erect, first rubbing his knee to dislodge the dust—then his palms.

"No, she isn't coming," he said. He drew a very long breath—the first in several hours—and then expelled it vocally. "She has refused to marry me."

Mr. Wrandall turned a leaf in his book; it sounded like the crack of doom, so still had the room become.

Vivian had the forethought to push a chair toward her mother. It was a most timely act on her part, for Mrs. Wrandall sat down very abruptly and very limply.

"She — what?" gasped Leslie's mother.

"Turned me down—cold," said Leslie briefly.

Mr. Wrandall laid his book on the table without thinking to put the bookmark in place. Then he arose and removed his glasses, fumbling for the case.

"She—she—what?" he demanded.

"Sacked me," replied his son.

"Please do not jest with me, Leslie," said his mother, trying to smile.

"He isn't joking, mother," said Vivian, with a shrug of her fine shoulders.

"He—he must be," cried Mrs. Wrandall impatiently. "What did she really say, Leslie?"

"The only thing I remember was 'goodby,'" said he, and then blew his nose violently.

"Poor old Les!" said Vivian, with real feeling.

"It was Sara Gooch's doing!" exclaimed Mrs. Wrandall, getting her breath at last.

"Nonsense," said Mr. Wrandall, picking up his book once more and turning to the place where the bookmark lay, after which he proceeded to re-read four or five pages before discovering his error.

No one spoke for a matter of five minutes or more. Then Mrs. Wrandall got up, went over to the library table and closed with a snap the bulky blue book with the limp leather cover, saying as she held it up to let him see that it was the privately printed history of the Murgatroyd family:

"It came by post this evening from London. She is merely a fourth cousin, my son."

He looked up with a gleam of interest in his eye.

CHAPTER XIV.

Crossing the Channel.

Booth, restless with a vague uneasiness that had come over him during the night, keeping him awake until nearly dawn, was hard put during the early hours of the forenoon to find occupation for his interest until a seasonable time arrived for appearing at Southlook. He was unable to account for this feeling of uncertainty and irritation.

At nine he set out to walk over to Southlook, realizing that he should have to spend an hour in profitless gossip with the lodge keeper before presenting himself at the villa, but somehow relishing the thought that even so he would be nearer to Hetty than if he remained in his own dooryard.

Half-way there we was overtaken by Sara's big French machine returning from the village. The car came to a standstill as he stepped aside to let it pass, and Sara herself leaned over and cordially invited him to get in and ride home with her.

"What an early bird you are," he exclaimed as he took his seat beside her.

She was not in a mood for airy persiflage, as he soon discovered.

"Miss Castleton has gone up to town, Mr. Booth," she said rather lifelessly. "I have just taken her to the station. She caught the eight-thirty."

He was at once solicitous. "No bad news, I hope?" There was no thought in his mind that her absence was other than temporary.

"She is not coming back, Brandon." She had not addressed him as Brandon before.

He stared. "You—you mean—" The words died on his lips.

"She is not coming back," she repeated.

An accusing gleam leaped into his eyes.

"What has happened, Mrs. Wrandall?" he asked.

She was quick to perceive the change in his voice and manner.

"She prefers to live apart from me. That is all."

"When was this decision reached?"

"But yesterday. Soon after she came in from her walk with you."

"Do—do you mean to imply that that had anything to do with her leaving your home?" he demanded, with a flush on his cheek.

She met his look without flinching. "It was the beginning."

"You—you criticised her? You took her to task—"

"I notified her that she was to marry Leslie Wrandall if she marries anyone at all," she said in a perfectly level tone.

"Good Lord, Mrs. Wrandall!"

"But she is not going to marry Leslie."

"I know it—I knew it yesterday," he cried triumphantly. "She loves me, Sara. Didn't she say as much to you?"

"Yes, Brandon, she loves you. But she will not be your wife."

"What is all this mystery? Why can't she be my wife? What is there to prevent?"

She regarded him with dark, inscrutable eyes. Many seconds passed before she spoke.

"She—What?" Gasped Leslie's Mother.

"Would you want her for your wife if you knew she had belonged to another man?"

He turned very cold. The palms of his hands were wet, as with ice-water. Something dark seemed to flit before his eyes.

"I will not believe that of her," he said, shaking his head with an air of finality.

"That is not an answer to my question."

"Yes, I would still want her," he declared steadily.

"I merely meant to put you to the harshest test," she said, and there was relief in her voice. "She is a good girl, she is pure. I asked my question because until yesterday I had reason to doubt her."

"Good heavens, how could you doubt those honest, guiltless eyes of—"

She shook her head sadly. "To answer you I would have to reveal the secret that makes it impossible for her to become your wife, and that I cannot, will not do."

"Is it fair to me?"

"Perhaps not, but it is fair to her, and that is why I must remain silent."

"Before God, I shall know the truth—from her, if not from you—and—"

"If you love her, if you will be kind to her, you will let her go her way in peace."

He was struck by the somewhat sinister earnestness of her words.

"Tell me where I may find her," he said, setting his jaw.

"It will not be difficult for you to find her," she said, frowning, "if you insist on pursuing her."

"You drive her away from your house, Sara Wrandall, and yet you expect me to believe that your motives are friendly. Why should I accept your word as final?"

"I did not drive her away, nor did I ask her to stay."

He stared hard at her.

"Good Lord, what is the meaning of all this?" he cried in perplexity? "What am I to understand?"

The car had come to a stop under the porte cochere. She laid her hand on his arm.

"If you will come in with me, Brandon, I will try to make things clear to you."

He left in half an hour, walking rapidly down the drive, his coat buttoned closely, although the morning was hot and breathless. He held in his hand a small scrap of paper on which was written: "If I loved you less, I would come to you now and lie to you. If you love me, Brandon, you will let me go my way. It is the only course. Sara is my friend, and she is yours. Be guided by her, and believe in my love for you. Hetty."

* * * * * * *

And now, as things go in fairy stories, we should prepare ourselves to see Hetty pass through a season in drudgery and hardship, with the ultimate quintessence of joy as the reward for her trials and tribulations. Happily, this is not a fairy tale. There are some things more fantastic than fairy tales, if they are not spoiled in the telling. Hetty did not go forth to encounter drudgery, disdain and obloquy. By no manner of means! She went with a well-filled purse, a definite purpose ahead and a determined factor behind.

In a manner befitting her station as the intimate friend of Mrs. Challis Wrandall, as the cousin of the Murgatroyds, as the daughter of Colonel Castleton of the Indian corps, as a person supposed to be possessed of independent means withal, she went, with none to question, none to cavil.

Sara had insisted on this, as much for her own sake as for Hetty's; she argued, and she had prevailed in the end. What would the world think, what would their acquaintances think, and above all what would the high and mighty Wrandalls think if she went with meek and lowly mien?

Why should they make it possible for anyone to look askance?

And so it was that she departed in state, with a dozen trunks and boxes; an obsequiously attended seat in the parlor car was hers; a telegram in her bag assured her that rooms were being reserved for herself and maid at the Ritz-Carlton; alongside it reposed a letter to Mr. Carroll, instructing him to provide her with sufficient funds to carry out the plan agreed upon; and in the seat behind sat the lady's maid who had served her for a twelvemonth and more.

The timely demise of the venerable Lord Murgatroyd afforded the most natural excuse for her trip to England. The old nobleman gave up the ghost, allowing for difference in time, at the very moment when Mrs. Redmond Wrandall was undoing a certain package from London, which turned out to be a complete history of what his forbears had done in the way of propagation since the fourteenth century.

Hetty did not find it easy to accommodate her pride to the plan which was to give her a fresh and rather imposing start in the world. She was to have a full year in which to determine whether she should accept toil and poverty as her lot, or emulate the symbolic example of Dicky, the canary bird. At the end of the year, unless she did as Dicky had done, her source of supplies would be automatically cut off and she would be entirely dependent upon her own wits and resources. In the interim she was a probationary person of leisure. It had required hours of persuasion on the part of Sara Wrandall to bring her into line with these arrangements.

"But I am able and willing to work for my living," had been Hetty's stubborn retort to all the arguments brought to bear upon her.

"Then let me put it in another light. It is vital to me, of course, that you should keep up the show of affluence for a while at least. I think I have made that clear to you. But here is another side to the matter; the question of recompense."

"Recompense?" cried Hetty sharply.

"Without your knowing it, I have virtually held you a prisoner all these months, condemned in my own judgment if not in the sight of the law. I have taken the law unto myself. You were not convicted of murder in this unitarian court of mine, but of another sin. For fifteen months you have been living under the shadow of a crime you did not commit. I was reserving complete punishment for you in the shape of an ignoble marriage, which was to have served two bitter ends. Well, I had the truth from you. I believe you to be absolutely innocent of the charge I held over you, for which I condemned you without a hearing. Then, why should I not employ my own means of making restitution?"

"You have condescended to believe in me. That is all I ask."

"True, that is all you ask. But is it altogether the fair way out of it? To illustrate: our criminal laws are less kind to the innocent than to the guilty. Our law courts find a man guilty and he is sent to prison. Later on, he is found to be innocent—absolutely innocent. What does the state do in the premises? It issues a formal pardon—a mockery, pure and simple—and the man is set free. It all comes to a curt, belated apology for an error on the part of justice. No substantial recompense is offered. He is merely pardoned for something he didn't do. The state, which has wronged him, condescends to pardon him! Think of it! It is the same as if a man knocked another down and then said, before he removed his foot from the victim's neck: 'I pardon you freely.' My father was opposed to the system we have—that all countries have—of pardoning men who have been unjustly condemned. The innocent victim is pardoned in the same manner as the guilty one who comes in for clemency. I accept my father's contention that an innocent man should not be shamed and humiliated by a pardon. The court which tried him should reopen the case and honorably acquit him of the crime. Then the state should pay to this innocent man, dollar for dollar, all that he might have earned during his term of imprisonment, with an additional amount for the suffering he has endured. Not long ago in an adjoining state a man, who had served seventeen years of a life sentence for murder, was found to be wholly innocent. What happened? A pardon was handed to him and he walked out of prison, broken in spirit, health and purse. His small fortune had been wiped out in the futile effort to prove his innocence. He gave up seventeen years of his life and then was pardoned for the sacrifice. He should have been paid for every day spent in prison. That was the very least they could have done."

"I see now what you mean," mused Hetty. "I have never thought of it in that way before."

"Well, it comes to this in our case, Hetty: I have tried you all over again in my own little court and I have acquitted you of the charge I had against you. I do not offer you a silly pardon. You must allow me to have my way in this matter, to choose my own means of compensating you for—"

"You saved my life," protested Hetty, shaking her head obstinately.

"My dear, I appreciate the fact that you are English," said Sara, with a weary smile, "but won't you please see the point?"

Then Hetty smiled too, and the way was easier after that for Sara. She gained her quixotic point, and Hetty went away from Southlook feeling that no woman in all the world was so bewildering as Sara Wrandall.

When she sailed for England, two days later, the newspapers announced that the beautiful and attractive Miss Castleton was returning to her native land on account of the death of Lord Murgatroyd, and would spend the year on the continent, where probably she would be joined later on by Mrs. Wrandall, whose period of mourning and distress had been softened by the constant and loyal friendship of "this exquisite Englishwoman."

Four hundred miles out at sea she was overtaken by wireless messages from three persons.

Brandon Booth's message said: "I am sailing tomorrow on a faster ship than yours. You will find me waiting for you on the landing stage." Her heart gave a leap to dizzy heights, and, try as she would, she could not crush it back to the depths in which it had dwelt for days.

The second bit of pale green paper contained a cry from a most unexpected source: "Cable your London address. S. refuses to give it to me. I think I understand the situation. We want to make amends for what you have had to put up with during the year. She has shown her true nature at last." It was signed "Leslie."

From Sara came these cryptic words: "For each year of famine there will come seven years of plenty."

All the way across the Atlantic she lived in a state of subdued excitement. Conflicting emotions absorbed her waking hours but her dreams were all of one complexion: rosy and warm and full of a joyousness that distressed her vastly when she recalled them to mind in the early morning hours. During the day she intermittently hoped and feared that he would be on the landing stage. In any event, she was bound to find unhappiness. If he were there her joy would be short-lived and blighting; if he were not there, her disappointment would be equally hard to bear.

He was there. She saw him from the deck of the tender as they edged up to the landing. His tall figure loomed in the front rank against the rail that held back the crowd; his sun-bronzed face wore a look of eager expectancy; from her obscured position in the shadow of the deck building, purposely chosen for reasons only too obvious, she could even detect the alert, swift-moving scrutiny that he fastened upon the crowd.

Later on, he stood looking down into her serious blue eyes; her hands were lying limp in his. His own eyes were dark with earnestness, with the restraint that had fastened itself upon him. Behind her stood the respectful but immeasurably awed maid, who could not, for the life of her, understand how a man could be on both sides of the Atlantic at one and the same time.

"Thank the Lord, Hetty, say I, for the five-day boats," he was saying.

"You should not have come, Brandon," she cried softly, and the look of misery in her eyes was tinged with a glow she could not suppress. "It only makes everything harder for me. I—I— Oh, I wish you had not come!"

"But isn't it wonderful?" he cried, "that I should be here and waiting for you! It is almost inconceivable. And you were in the act of running away from me, too. Oh, I have that much of the tale from Sara, so don't look so hurt about it."

"I am so sorry you came," she repeated, her lip trembling.

Noting her emotion, he gave her hands a fierce, encouraging pressure and immediately released them.

"Come," he said gently; "I have booked for London. Everything is arranged. I shall see to your luggage. Let me put you in the carriage first."

As she sat in the railway carriage, waiting for him to return, she tried in a hundred ways to devise a means of escape, and yet she had never loved him so much as now. Her heart was sore, her desolation never so complete as now.

He came back at last and took his seat beside her in the compartment, fanning himself with his hat. The maid very discreetly stared out of the window at the hurrying throng of travelers on the platform.

"How I love you, Hetty—how I adore you!" Booth whispered passionately.

"Oh, Brandon!"

"And I don't mean to give you up," he added, his lean jaw setting hard.

"You must—oh, you must," she cried miserably. "I mean it, Brandon—"

"What are your plans?" asked he.

"Please don't ask me," she pleaded. "You must give it up, Brandon. Let me go my own way."

"Not until I have the whole story from you. You see, I am not easily thwarted, once I set my heart on a thing. I gathered this much from Sara: the object is not insurmountable."

"She—said—that?"

"In effect, yes," he qualified.

"What did she tell you?" demanded Hetty, laying her hand on his arm.

"I will confess she didn't reveal the secret that you consider a barrier, but she went so far as to say that it was very dark and dreadful," he said lightly. They were speaking in very low tones. "When I pinned her down to it, she added that it did not in any sense bear upon your honor. But there is time enough to talk about this later on. For the present let's not discuss the past. I know enough of your history from your own lips as well as what little I could get out of Sara, to feel sure that you are in a way, drifting. I intend to look after you, at least until you find yourself. Your sudden break with Sara has been explained to me. Leslie Wrandall is at the back of it. Sara told me that she tried to force you to marry him. I think you did quite right in going away as you did, but, on the other hand, was it quite fair to me?"

He Stood Looking Down Into Her Serious Blue Eyes.

"Yes, it was most fair," she said, compressing her lips.

He frowned.

"We can't possibly be of the same opinion," he said seriously.

"You wouldn't say that if you knew everything."

"How long do you intend to stay in London?"

"I don't know. When does this train arrive there?"

"At four o'clock, I think. Will you go to an hotel or to friends?" He put the question very delicately.

She smiled faintly. "You mean the Murgatroyds?"

"Your father is here, I am informed. And you must have other friends or relatives who—"

"I shall go to a small hotel I know near Trafalgar square," she interrupted quietly. "You must not come there to see me, Brandon."

"I shall expect you to dine with me at—say Prince's this evening," was his response to this.

She shook her head and then turned to look out of the window. He sat back in his seat and for many miles, with deep perplexity in his eyes, studied her half-averted face. The old uneasiness returned. Was this obstacle, after all, so great that it could not be overcome?

They lunched together, but were singularly reserved all through the meal. A plan was growing in her brain, a cruel but effective plan that made her despise herself and yet contained the only means of escape from an even more cruel situation.

He drove with her from the station to the small hotel off Trafalgar square. There were no rooms to be had. It was the week of Ascot and the city was still crowded with people who awaited only the royal sign to break the fetters that bound them to London. Somewhat perturbed, she allowed him to escort her to several hotels of a like character. Failing in each case, she was in despair. At last she plucked up the courage to say to him, not without constraint and embarrassment:

"I think, Brandon, if you were to allow me to apply alone to one of these places I could get in without much trouble."

"Good Lord!" he gasped, going very red with dismay. "What a fool I—"

"I'll try the Savoy," she said quickly, and then laughed at him. His face was the picture of distress.

"I shall come for you tonight at eight," he said, stopping the taxi at once. "Goodby till then."

He got out and gave directions to the chauffeur. Then he did a very strange thing. He hailed another taxi and, climbing in, started off in the wake of the two women. From a point of vantage near the corridor leading to the "American bar," he saw Hetty sign her slips and move off toward the left. Whereupon, seeing that she was quite out of the way, he approached the manager's office and asked for accommodatons.

"Nothing left, sir,"

"Not a thing?"

"Everything has been taken for weeks, sir. I'm sorry."

"Sorry, too. I had hoped you might have something left for a friend who expects to stop here—a Miss Castleton."

"Miss Castleton has just applied. We could not give her anything."

"Eh?"

"Fortunately we could let her have rooms until eight this evening. We were more than pleased to offer them to her for a few hours, although they are reserved for parties coming down from Liverpool tonight."

Booth tried the Cecil and got a most undesirable room. Calling up the Savoy on the telephone, he got her room. The maid answered. She informed him that Miss Castleton had just that instant gone out and would not return before seven o'clock.

"I suppose she will not remove her trunks from the station until she finds a permanent place to lodge," he inquired. "Can I be of any service?"

"I think not, sir. She left no word, sir."

He hung up the receiver and straightway dashed over to the Savoy, hoping to catch her before she left the hotel. Just inside the door he came to an abrupt stop. She was at the news and ticket booth in the lobby, closely engaged in conversation with the clerk. Presently the latter took up the telephone, and after a brief conversation with some one at the other end, turned to Hetty and nodded his head. Whereupon she nodded her own adorable head and began the search for her purse. Booth edged around to an obscure spot and saw her pay for and receive something in return.

"By Jove!" he said to himself, amazed.

She passed near him, without seeing him, and went out into the court. He watched her turn into the Strand.

MUST BE ANSWERED

Democrats Cannot Ignore Colonel Roosevelt's Criticism.

Facts Are as He Has Stated and Voters Undoubtedly Will Demand Explanation of the Failure of Tariff Policy.

In his parting shot, delivered as he sailed for Spain, Colonel Roosevelt landed squarely in the center of the Wilson administration's entrenchments.

"There is widespread apprehension among our people," said the colonel. "The cost of living has not been reduced. Not the slightest progress has been made in solving the trust question. It has been shown that the reduction of the tariff in no shape or way helps toward this solution."

The Democratic party won its victory two years ago with the tariff as a paramount issue. Its press and its orators convinced the country that the tariff was the mother evil of all evils. They promised immediate destruction of the trusts and instant reduction of the high cost of living, once their snickersnee found its way to the vitals of the protective tariff.

And their promises remain unfulfilled. The tariff was reduced, but the living cost wasn't. The import schedules were shot to pieces, but the trusts remain unbusted. With absolute command of every branch of the national government the Democratic party has had its way as it willed. And the conditions it boastfully sought to improve have grown steadily worse.

Colonel Roosevelt is known around the world for his facility in firing fast and straight. His last word as he sailed for Europe will take a lot of administration explaining. And, too, it will create a deal of concern in Washington as to the character of marksmanship he will exhibit when in a few weeks he clatters full armed into the political campaign.

Views of a Friend.

To certain leaders of the Progressive party the Roosevelt stand comes as a reproof. These have been opposed to co-operation, even though co-operation was the only means of defeating unspeakable candidates. They have made the not uncommon mistake of putting partisan success above the public welfare. Roosevelt's strength has never been party strength. It has been non-partisan strength. Many men have left their parties to vote for him because they thought he represented their ideals more closely than their party did.—Chicago Tribune.

Income Tax Revenue.

The treasury department is keeping to itself the amount of revenue which the income tax will return for the first ten months it has been assessed. The figures have been in for several weeks and the aggregate is, of course, known by this time. Is it proving to be a disappointment like the customs duties? If so it had better be known before congress adjourns, for the appropriation bills on the way through this most extravagant congress are disposing of considerably more money than is anywhere in sight.—Philadelphia Press.

President and Business.

The president told the Illinois delegation that he was convinced of the danger to business that lies in uncertainty. His can be but a shadowy conviction, however, so long as he tries to remove the menace he sees by administering one dose after another of undigested theories. The uncertainty will not disappear until there comes the certainty that experiment in uplift by the gag process has ended.—Boston Herald.

Progressives Will Unite.

The union of the great majority of the voters of the country who are opposed to Democratic principles and policies and to the methods and results of the Wilson administration cannot be prevented. It is decreed by fate and insured by American common sense. Theodore Roosevelt sees union coming. He will be ready to play a leading part in bringing it about.

Proves Party In Earnest.

Massachusetts Progressives started an eight-day campaign in which to raise a $50,000 fund and the first day brought them $10,000. There's a case where money talks. It tells of party loyalty and enthusiasm more emphatically than any words can do.

Be Sure You're Right.

Also the gentleman who quotes Colonel Roosevelt wants to be pretty sure he is accurate. The colonel always has witnesses and documentary evidence.

Awakening Coming for Wilson.

This Democratic administration and congress is simply fussing and legislating the business of the country into a state of creeping paralysis, and the congressional elections are going to give our scholarly but none too practical president a shock that will startle him out of his curious notion that the "conscience of the country" favors this continuous performance of Politics vs. Business that is throwing thousands of men out of employment and pinching their families.

HAD THE PICTURE'S MEANING

pectators at Least Formed Some Idea What Famous Painting Represented.

Two men stood before a painting in a store the other day gazing wonderingly at a picture of an equestrian statue of General Lafayette. The famous Frenchman was represented on a prancing steed. Over his arm he carried a robe. At his feet stood an allegorical figure of Victory extending a sword toward him as a mark of homage. I wonder what that picture means?' asked one of the men. "I don't know," replied the other. "I was just trying to make out what season of the year it was when a woman could go around with so little clothing while a man was dressed up in a heavy suit like that." "Oh, I see what it is now," cried the first one. "You see the soldier stole the woman's cloak and when he took it from her he dropped his sword, and now the woman is trying to trade him back the sword for her clothing."

The Way of Progress.

A dog barking at a passing automobile is generally supposed to be as telling a symbol of futile objection to the march of progress as could well be imagined. In the almost same category, however, belongs the strike of the stevedores in New Orleans against the introduction of the electric truck to transport freight between vessels and warehouses. The wonder is that this improvement has been so long delayed instead of only now appearing—and then as a source of a new labor difficulty. One cannot have much sympathy for opposition in this particular instance. The motor vehicle in all of its forms has come to stay, and the rest of the world has been rather rapidly adjusting itself to the new condition.—Engineering Record.

REAL LIFE IN THE COUNTRY

Fact Is Shown by Man's Eagerness to Escape From Congestion of the Crowded City.

Why is it that railway magnates, presidents of banks and heads of great enterprises who must perforce do business in cities, almost all try to have homes on farms in the country, where they develop soils, plant crops and breed animals? It is because there is wearisome monotony in piled up brick and stone. There is confusion in crowded streets and clanging trolley cars and hot smoky railways. These things man has made, and they are needful, but they are not life, much as the farm boy may imagine them to be.

Life is in the open country. Life is in the growing grass, the waving fields of wheat, the springing corn. Life is in the trees and birds, life is in the developing animals of the farm.

Any man who works with the land, who feeds a field and watches the result, gains a real fundamental knowledge of the underlying foundation on which rests all our civilization. It makes him a sober man, a thoughtful man, a reverent man, and if he experiments wisely a hopeful optimist. Life is where things are born and live and grow. On the farm is real life.—Breeder's Gazette.

PARADISE FOR THE BIRDS

Providence Seems to Have Provided Temperate Zone for the Feathered Friends of Man.

Up in the far country where the timber fails, the calendar is respected. There is no summer before the official day set for it. The ground is held fast by frost until June is well started. There are flurries of snow, wild, bitter winds, a sky that has no mercy. And then, suddenly, the wind shifts and comes out of the south. It is summer then with a leap.

The interest of the temperate zone in the northland is that it is there that have gone a great many of the migrating birds which paid us a few days' visit and passed on. For all its inhospitality to man, this country in summer is a paradise for birds. Its marshes are safe refuges from two and four-footed enemies. There is exhaustless material for nests. And out of the pools come myriads of insects, food that does not fail until the time for the southward bird movement arrives.

Some man has said that there is no God north of latitude 59. He did not inquire as to what the birds might have thought of that.—Toledo Blade.

Public Opinion.

People say how strong public opinion is; and, indeed, it is strong while it is in its prime. In its childhood and old age it is as weak as any other organism. I try to make my own work belong to the youth of public opinion. The history of the world is the record of the weakness, frailty and death of public opinion, as geology is the record of the decay of those bodily organisms in which public opinions have found material expression. —Samuel Butler.

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo. — "I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EDITOR'S CHAT.

This is my third and last chat about children and in this one I'm trying to help the mother of young children. I have heard so many mothers say things to their children that I thought would better have been left unsaid. Children are so imitative, and the mother who says things before her children that she wouldn't like for them to repeat is pretty sure to hear them repeated, and most likely at a time when she least desires it. Then there are mothers who storm at their little ones threatening to "skin them alive," or "tear them up," which they never do; and tho such threats usually strike terror to the little minds, at first they gradually lose power, and then mother has lost power too, and the children begin to think, and perhaps to say: "She says she will but she want so we'll just be quite till she forgets about it." So let's be careful how we speak to our little ones. Never threaten punishment unless you intend to inflict it; and don't threaten then, just tell them firmly what they may expect. Then if they wont obey you, see that they get it. But I don't believe in too much punishment. Begin right and your children won't need it. Be positive with them from babyhood and do not make a practice of giving them what they cry for and I'm sure it will save you trouble later. If one gets sick don't break every rule by which you have been governing them, but just be as good as you can, and see how much less trouble you have during their convalesence. And right here let me give a few hints as to treatment of sick children. Of course my first suggestion is to be cheerful in their presence, and try to keep their minds on pleasant things. Never try to scare them with the Doctor, but do try to teach them to trust them. In my childhood I would have taken anything our family Doctor prescribed, and even yet if he were to give me salt water I believe it would help me. Such is my faith in him. He was always jolly and kind in a sick room and little folks were almost glad to be sick just to have him visit them.

Now but "largest," how do you make a request of your babies and young children? Do you ask them in the same polite manner you would a friend or neighbor, to stand a side till you can pass with a hot dish or a chair, or do you yell at them to "get out from under my feet before I stamp you," like you would a dog or a cat? Of course one can't always think to be polite when they are hurrying to get dinner done before the tired father gets in from work, but we should try to have something to amuse them while we work. A big sand pile in the back yard where you can see them from a kitchen window is a very good baby tender, and with the aid of a big spoon and a bucket, will keep them busy by the hour.

As we haven't but one letter this week I'm going to try to make it up to you so far as I can, so I'm sending in a few tested recipes and ways of doing things.

If those who dread to fry eggs because of popping grease will sprinkle a little flour in the grease before breaking the eggs they will have no trouble.

The odor of burning grease, on the stove, can be destroyed by sprinkling salt on it.

Mildew can be removed by covering the spot in a thick paste of salt and buttermilk and leaving in the sun all day.

Mud stains maybe removed by washing in strong soda (baking) water.

Never fail sponge cake; two eggs beaten well, one cup of sugar, and beat again; measure one cup of flour into a sifter, sift half into your batter and beat five minutes. Heat three-fourths of a cup of milk, stir into the batter flavor and add rest of the flour, with one teaspoonful of baking powder, bake in medium oven. I'm sending this hoping Mrs. H. V. G. who asked for sponge cake recipe will find it satisfactory.

Orange cake; two cups sugar, two cups flour, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream of tartar, whites of three eggs, half a cup of water, a little salt, juice and grated rind of one orange yolks of five eggs, beat the white to a stiff froth, add the sugar, when thoroughly mixed add the yolks previously, beaten five minutes and baked in layers. This makes a very pretty as well as delicious cake when chocolate filling is used. Editor.

Editor Home Department:—Here I come for admittance to the Home Department of our paper. First I wish to thank our Editor for our department. I look for our page first thing each week and enjoy all of the letters so much. I love the Union-Banner because it is my home paper, and I am partial to it now more than ever, on account of our department. I do not live in the country but I have a fine garden, which is a great pleasure to me. It is so much better to gather your vegetables fresh than it is to have to buy at the markets, for those are always stale. I think everyone that can should have a garden, for besides the pleasure it affords it is a great money saver. My garden has furnished our own table with fresh vegetables, and besides I have sold lots of beans, cucumbers and onions already. That is much better than having to buy.

I want all the good writers that have been writing to come again and bring some one with them.

Mrs. E. R. S.

VOL. 3 | THE UNION 11th Year | CLANTON, ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1914 | THE BANNER 21st Year | NO. 13

TO COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Feagin Explains County Institute Laws.

A number of communications have come to this office from teachers and superintendents asking whether attendance at summer training schools exempts a teacher from the duty of attendance at county institutes.

Inasmuch as the law places the responsibility of interpreting this provision of the statute upon the State Superintendent, you will pardon a word or two in this connection.

"It is made the duty of the State Superintendent of Education to cancel the certificate of any teacher who may fail to attend an institute for a period of not less than four days in each year, unless such teacher shall secure a written excuse signed by the county superintendent and approved by the chairman of the county board of education or unless such teacher may convince the State Superintennent of Education that he has attended for a period of not less than three weeks during the current year some educational institution during which time he was engaged in the work of professional training, either as a student or a teacher, or unless he is the holder of a life grade certificate.

Almost without exception the work done in the summer training schools in Alabama is projected and intended to prepare teachers to take the state examination, and therefore cannot in any sense be interpreted to relieve their students of institute attendance.

The State of Alabama is spending $6500 yearly upon these county institutes, and the duty of bringing to the State adequate returns for this expenditure rests upon you.

Some boards of education, and I commend them for it, will not employ teachers who fail to attend their county institutes, even though they hold life certificates or have attended institutes in other counties.

When the Institute Law was enacted, it was presumed that the holder of life certificates had attained a degree of professional pride that would inspire them to attend the county institutes and therefore an exemption, was made in their case. In a few instances, however, it appears that holders of life certificates have not shown quite the attitude toward our institutes that was expected, and I wish to urge that county and city boards of education consider the attitude of all applicants towards attendance at county institutes before contracting with them, including the holders of life certificates.

This can in no sense be considered as a hardship, for our progressive and conscientious teachers are delighted to attend the institutes for their own counties and invariably state that the institute is worth while. Is it anything but right that those teachers who do not have enough interest and pride to voluntarily do so and a still smaller number who wish to shirk institute attendance, should have the strongest kind of stimulus applied-namely,-the inability to secure a contract unless they attend a county institute?

There is a considerable number of persons in the State who stand the examinations from year to year for practice or in order to get rid of the requirements for lower grade certificates without any intention of teaching whatever, or at least until they have secured a first grade certificate. This has tended to increase the percentage of failures and to reflect somewhat upon the examination law.

One way to diminish this evil is to rigidly insist upon institute attendance upon all holders of certificates, no matter if they are students in school and do not intend to teach for three or four years. If the certificate is worth anything to the holder of it, he should certainly appreciate it enough to attend his county institute.

Our best efforts have been exerted to make the institutes this year practical and helpful. Fewer and expert conductors have been chosen and a definite program has been planned which emphasizes English, community organization, and manual and household arts. It is believed that we will have made progress both in the tone and character of these yearly sessions, provided the work is not discounted by laxity on the part of those who have the power to require attendance.

I wish to insist, therefore, as stoutly as I may, that every county superintendent and every institute conductor shall exercise the utmost rigidity in enforcing the law requiring institute attendance.

Sincerely yours,
Wm. F. Feagin
Supt. of Education.

FAMOUS SCULPTOR'S CONCEPTION OF "WATER," FOR COURT OF THE UNIVERSE.

Scene in one of the sculptural warehouses on the exposition grounds. The figure above is that of a remarkable sculptural composition by Robert I. Aitkin, one of the most brilliant of American sculptors. The figure, representing the sculptor's conception of "Water," is a companion piece to three other symbolical sculptures—"Fire," "Earth" and "Air." The four figures, typifying the elements, will flank the descents into a vast sunken garden in the superb court of honor, the Court of the Universe. On the left may be seen the original model from which the figure was enlarged.

Change in Rural Route No. One

Postmaster Dudley announces that throughCongressman Blackmon he has secured a change in rural route No. 1, from Clanton, to take effect July 16th, as follows: At Sam Parrish's place across the creek one mile east of town, the route will turn to the right and go up by Daniel Wyatt's thence on by the Joe Cox place, by John Baker's and back to Walter Maddox's, there to take up the regular course as heretofore. The change will give direct service to eight families which now have to go a mile for their mail. Mr. Dudley also has a petition out for the establishment of a new route No. 9 to go out by the Miner settlement near Union Point, by Riley Robinson's and back to town through the Poplar Springs settlement. It seems that when it comes to establishing rural routes and making them serviceable to the patrons, Felix Dudley and Fred Blackmon "take the cake."

NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

At Union Grove On July 1st.

A trip to the Farmers Union County Convention at Union Grove last Wednesday would have been time well spent for any farmer, union or non union. I have never neard the truth more forcibly and convincingly presented than I did at this occasion, by such men as Ex-President Morris, President Ford, Secretary Kennedy, Prof. Hobby, Mr. Conway, and others.

In Ex-President Morris' talk I was reminded of one of the fearless champions of liberty and progress, who fought for emancipation of the farming class years ago in Europe.

Why is it, that we as individuals, are so indifferent to the work such men are carrying on in our interest; unless we see a material benefit to be gained in a direct way we usually keep very impassive and inactive to the movement. Hardly anyone will deny that the better prices in selling and buying, obtained the last few years, are due to a great extent to the activities of the farmers union, and if its members would stick closer to it and adhere to its principles, we would see much better results from its operations.

There is no information or education so valuable to us as the one which we get through the union. It comes nearer in touch with our material life than any other knowledge we may acquire. But usually all good theories or plans to be carried through requires sacrifice, so long as we are not ready with means to back them up, we can not expect to accomplish much.

It takes money to do business with and do it right, in a co operative organization as well as in anything else. I know of one country where the farmers supply themselves with practically everything they use, down to manufacturing the material from which they build their houses; they had to raise funds to bring it up to that of course, but it is money well invested.

It will take us some time to get that far, but we could do a few things without much delay to better conditions. We could start to regulate our crop system to better advantage, and it seems to me we could make arrangement for fertilizer supplies on a cash basis, nitrogen for instance, for which we pay so much at the present time, supplied direct, especially after the Panama Canal comes into general use, should be much cheaper. The air contains about four fifths of it, it ought not to be so expensive.

Come to the meetings of your local to get information and give information let us try to make the meetings interesting and instructive.

DATE SET FOR BULL MOOSE CONVENTION.

Meeting to be Held in Birmingham, Aug. 5.

The Bull Moose Convention will be called to order at the Tutwiler hotel in Birmingham August 5, noon.

If the plans of the leaders of that anti democratic organization bear fruit, the convention will be participated in by an unusually large number of delegates. Another distinctive feature will be that every delegate will be a white man.

Such in brief were the provisions of a resolution unanimously adopted yesterday at noon by a special committee on convention appointed some time ago by the executive committee of the party. Judge L. H. Reynolds of Clanton, as chairman of the special committee, presided, and George S. O'Bear of Birmingham served as secretary.

The elimination of the negro from participation in the councils of the party was achieved by a more direct if less adroit manner than the same result was achieved by the republican organization. The latter made itself lilly white by declining to permit counties which cast less than 100 votes for Taft and Roosevelt to send delegates. The bull moose organization made itself lily white by a simple declaration to the end that no negro shall participate in any convention held under the authority of the party.

The committee yesterday provided means whereby the convention will be composed of an exceedingly large number of men. A unique basis of representation was adopted. By the first shot out of the box, each county was given three delegates to be known as delegates from the state at large. In addition, it was provided that each county which cast less than 50 anti-democratic votes shall have ane represenative in convention. Other counties will have one delegate in convention for every 100 votes cast against President Wilson and one for every fraction of 100 votes above 50.

By the terms of the resolution, it will be possible for the convention to seat over 500 delegates. It is the hope of "progressive" leaders that a large number be in attendance. The convention will be held at the Tutwiler hotel, and after the disposition of prelemi-nary matters, the nomination of candidates will be in order.

It was learned yesterday that a candidate will be named for each state and congressional office. Special efforts will be made to elect a congressman from the Seventh and a congressman from the Ninth districts.

As a means of organizing those counties in which there is now no Progressive organization, an individual in each congressional district was invested with authority to call those counties in his district which have heretofore been inert to immediate action and get an organization perfected and send delegates to the state convention.

Counties are required to hold mass meetings before Aug. 1st, for the selectson of delegates to the convention in Biamingham August 5th. Under the stated basis Chilton will be entitled to about fifteen delegates.

PAROLED AFTER SERVING 20 YEARS

GIVEN FITY-YEAR SENTENCE FOR THEFT OF FITY CENTS.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Fifty years for stealing 50 cents. That is the sentence that a Hale county jury imposed on Frank Williams, a negro, who in 1894 robbed another negro of a half dollar. After serving more than 20 years of the 50-year sentence, Williams has been paroled by Governor O'Neal.

It was not the amount stolen, but the method used in obtaining the 50 cents that brought about Frank Williams undoing. He was charged with highway robbery, and although his misdeeds netted him only the paltry sum mentioned, he was sentenced to serve 50 years in the State penitentiary.

Appellate Courts' Special Session.

Immediately after the first term of the 1914 session had ended by statute, the supreme court called a special session and continued the consideration of cases appealed from lower courts.

The court of appeals ended its term at the same time, but before doing so transferred to the supreme court several cases under an agreement whereby the supreme court considers 60 and the court of appeals 40 per cent of all cases.

On the last day of the first session the supreme court handed down 50 opinions and 12 rulings on applications for rehearings. The court of appeals decided 13 appeals and made 13 rulings of applications for rehearings before ending its labors.

The supreme court's special term probably will continue two weeks or longer.

Pike Officials Commended.

Officials of Pike County have kept their books and records correctly and conducted the affairs of their offices as directed by the law, according to the report of Examiner W. F. Wilkinson, filed with Governor O'Neal. Not a single complaint was registered against any of the officials or their systems of keeping records and handling of monies.

The officers and period of examination were: A. C. Edmondson, judge of probate, August 1, 1912, to April 1, 1914; W. A. McBryde, sheriff, July 1, 1912, to January 1, 1914; T. C. Spradley, tax assessor, 1911-12-13; V. A. Gibson, tax collector, 1911-12; Charlie Cox, clerk of the circuit and law courts, August 1, 1912, to August 1, 1914; Charles F. White, ex-superintendent of education, October 1, 1912, to October 1, 1913; Key Murphree, treasurer Troy Normal College, October 1, 1913, 1912 to June 24, 1914; and L. M. Bashinsky, county treasurer school fund, October 1, 1912, to October 1, 1913.

Negro's Hanging Held Up By Court.

The hanging of John Ragland, a negro, at Decatur, for uxorcide, has been held up pending the action of the supreme court on Ragland's application for rehearing. He was to have been hanged June 19, but the certificate was recalled when the petition for rehearing was filed.

Paid $1,864,036 in Taxes.

Citizens of Jefferson county paid the State $1,864,046.87 as taxes during the last fiscal year. P. B. Bowers, tax collector of Jefferson county, has closed his book for the year and made a final settlement with the State auditor.

Of the total collections, $334,161.19 was given to the general State fund; $132,483.89 to the soldiers and $397,406.79 to the schools. Mr. Bowers' commissions from State taxes were $14,841.25, while F. A. Hewitt, tax assessor last year, was paid $9,240.97 for making assessments.

Major Scott on Retired List.

Maj. D. M. Scott of Selma, one of the most prominent members of the Alabama National Guard, tendered his resignation to Adjt. Gen. Joseph B. Scully. He requests that he be placed on the retired list with the rank of major. He has served as major-quartermaster since April 17, 1897, and is one of the oldest officers in point of service in the National Guard. General Scully has complied with Major Scott's request and has issued an order placing him on the retired list.

Medical Examiners to Meet.

The State board of medical examiners will meet in Montgomery on July 14 for the purpose of examining persons desiring to practice medicine in Alabama. The examination will continue four days. The State board of public health will meet with the board of medical examiners.

Peter Poor Granted Liberty.

The governor granted a parole to Peter Poor of Walker county, convicted for viloating the prohibition law.

Widow May Get Pension.

If the wido wof an Alabama Confederate pensioner dies the pension which she is entitled to during her lifetime may be used in paying funeral and other expenses. This was the supreme court's ruling when it refused to reverse the judgment of the City court of Montgomery. John Purifoy, State treasurer, refused to pay a pension because it was endorsed after a widow's death. Charles B. Teasley, judge of probate of Montgomery county, requested a writ of mandamus and won. Treasurer Purifoy appealed the case. Only one pension can be collected after the widow's death, and the same provisions are operative as in the case of a Confederate soldier.

Sheriff Sparks Resigns.

Governor O'Neal appointed John Lewis of Guntersville as sheriff of Marshall county to succeed J. L. Sparks, resigned. The appointment of the new sheriff was made suddenly and no announcement was made in connection with it.

No reason for the resignation of Sheriff Sparks was announced at the office of the governor.

The change is effective at once. Mr. Lewis, the new sheriff, was highly recommended to the governor by prominent citizens of Marshall county.

Former Sheriff Sparks resigned, but nothing was learned as to the reason. He was recently tried before the federal court of Gadsden on a white slave charge, but was acquitted. It is rumored that several of his bondsmen have recently removed their names from his official bond, but whether or not this action had anything to do with his resignation was not made public.

Commission Wins Against Auditor.

Salaries of members on the State tax commission must be charged to the general fund, and the special fund of $25,000 provided by the legislature for the carrying on of the commission's work need not be used in paying commissioners' aslaries. This decision of the supreme court marked a victory for the commission and a loss for C. B. Smith, State auditor.

The commission wanted the special fund for operating expenses. State Auditor Smith contended that salaries should be taken from it. The commission, through Robert C Brickell, attorney general, asked the City counrt of Montgomery for a writ of mandamus and it was refused. They appealed, the case was made a preferred one, and three weeks from the date of the trial in the lower court the supreme court reversed and remanded the case.

Justices Sayre, Gardner and Somerville dissented.

Force of Fuller Bill Outlined.

Liquor may be shipped from another State into dry territory, if it is not for use in violation of any law,, according to the Alabama supreme court's construction of the Webb law passed by Congress. It has dissolved an injunction granted by a Morgan county court because the Southern Express company showed that a shipment of liquor was not intended to be used in violation of the State law.

The test came up when the State obtained the injunction which prevented the express company from storing liquor in its warehouse at Decatur. The supreme court said the Webb law took away interstate protection of liquor, but did not intend to affect shipping when the goods were not to be used illegally.

In making the ruling the supreme court again declared the Carmichael and Fuller prohibition laws to be operative in counties where the vote of the people has not substituted the Parks local option and Smith regulation laws.

Failed to Return Property.

A threatened race riot in the vicinity of Luverne resulted in the loss of a batch of military property, according to former Captain W. H. Stoddard of Company I, First regiment, who was sued by the State in the City court for failure to deliver to his successor certain property of the State. The former official says the men failed to return guns and other property with which they were dispatched at the time of the trouble.

The State sued for $1000 damages and Judge Gunter took the case under consideration.

With the hearing of the case and the taking up of the motion docket by Judge Gunter the docket of the present session of the civil division of the City court was practically completed.

To Instruct at Camp.

Capt. DeWitt Jones of the United States army will be instruction officer for the signal corps of the Alabama National Guard at the encompment here July 21 to 30.

Walker in Washington.

Alex E. Walker, State Superintendent of Banks, has gone to Washington to attend a conference between heads of state banking departments. They will plan a system of co-operation whereby the United States can obtain reports on all state banks.

Charged With Postoffice Robbery.

Frank Richardson, a negro, charged with robbing the postoffice at Collirene, Lowndes county, was brought to Montgomery, and his hearing set before United States Commissioner Elmore for July 11. Richardson, it is charged, broke into the postoffice building at Collirene and robbed the safe of $38. He was detained by the postmaster there and was arrested on a warrant sworn out by Postoffice Inspector W. B. Brannon. The negro declares he is not guilty.

DENIES SHE EVER SAW MRS. BAILEY

DOCTOR'S WIFE VIEWS BODY OF DEAD WOMAN—DETECTIVES EXPECT TO FIND GUN.

SEARCH MADE FOR WEAPON

Mystery Surrounds Shooting of Mrs. Bailey in Doctor's Office—Sleuths Pump Cesspool in Hopes of Finding Evidence.

Freeport, N. Y.—While Mrs. Edwin Carman was in Hempstead, viewing the body of Mrs. Louise Bailey, the Long Island matron killed by a shot fired through the window in Dr. Carman's office here, detectives were pumping out a cesspool and a well in the rear of the physician's residence and a cesspool in the cellar.

The detectives declare they expect to find a 38-caliber revolver containing one exploded shell.

The body of the murdered woman was taken from her home in Hempstead to an undertaker's morgue for an autopsy which had been ordered by the district attorney.

William D. Bailey at first refused to allow his wife's body to be removed from the house, but after the authorities had threatened to go to a supreme court justice and get an order permitting the autopsy he gave his consent.

Mrs. Carman and her attorney were waiting at the morgue. Mrs. Carman was taken into a rear room and asked to look at the dead woman's features.

"Poor woman," exclaimed the physician's wife, "I am so sorry for her."

"Have you ever seen this woman before?" her attorney asked.

Mrs. Carman replied: "No; I have never seen that woman in my whole life."

Detectives interviewed Miss Helen Combs, a lawyer's stenographer, who told them she was in the physician's house at the time of the shooting, having gone there for treatment.

SERVIAN PLOT IS EXPOSED

Bombs and Arms Secured at Servian Arsenal — Conspirators Confess. Four in Plot.

Vienna.—Nedeljo Gabrinocics, who threw a bomb at Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife while they were proceeding to the Sarajevo town hall made a complete confession, according to dispatches received from Sarajevo.

Gabrinovics declared that after learning, while at Belgrade, that Archduke Francis Ferdinand was going to Sarajevo he communicated with Gavrio Prinzip, who fired the fatal shots, with the result that they resolved to go there to kill the archduke, the duchess and their suites and die themselves for the fatherland.

To obtain bombs they applied to Maj. Milan Pribitchevitch, secretary of a Pan-Servian union and formerly an officer in the Austrian army, who had joined the Servians. Through him, Gabrinovics says, bombs and revolvers were obtained from the Servian arsenal at Kraguyevatz.

DEPUTIES FIGHT ROBBERS

Kills One, Wounds Another in Aisle of Chair Car—Narrowly Escapes Death.

Pendleton, Ore.—George Macduffey, deputy sheriff of Heppner, Ore., fought a single-handed battle with train robbers in the aisle of a chair car fifty miles east of here, killing one and wounding another. He narrowly missed death himself when his pocket comb in the upper left-hand vest pocket slowed down a bullet aimed at his heart. The car was on the Oregon-Washington railroad.

The dead man was identified by an inscription in his watch as Hugh Whitney, a desperado, known for depredations in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. His wounded companion and a third robber were trailed by posses. They got $200 from the express car of the train, one diamond ring valued at $700 and afew dollars from passengers.

REPLY TO ADJOURNMENT PLEA

Senate to Pass Trust Legislation First. Lewis Told to Keep Quorum. May Hold Night Sessions.

Washington.—Senate democrats, in conference, adopted a resolution declaring their purpose to stay in session until the trust legislation passed by the house has been acted upon in the senate. The resolution does not bind senators to vote for the bills without change.

The resolution is designed to serve definite and final notice to business and the country that anti-trust legislation is to be passed before congress quits Washington. It was proposed by Senator Stone after a talk with President Wilson and with other democratic leaders. Senator Stone said it was intended as an answer to the propaganda for immediate adjournment of congress.

If party leaders decided in the future that it will be necessary to make party measures of the three house bills, or the substitutions offered for them, another conference will be held for the purpose of binding democrats to definite legislation. Some senators thought the resolution might bind senators to vote for the bills, but Senator Kern, chairman of the conference, declared such was not its purpose, and a clause stating this in specific terms was adopted.

The resolution says:

"Resolved, That the conference of democratic senators, after due consideration, hereby declares that the present session of congress should not adjourn until at least the following bills now pending in the senate have been finally disposed of."

It names the trade commission, the railroad securities and the Clayton anti-trust bills as the measures to be included.

NEW PROPELLERS TESTED

Flying Boat Makes Longest Trip Since Trials Begin—Shows Speed of 60 Miles an Hour.

Hammondsport, N. Y.—Speed trials and a bench test of the new propellers marked the work on the Rodman Wanamaker trans-Atlantic flying boat. At noon Lieut. Porte took the America out for the longest trip she has made in the air since trials began. Apparently he had no difficulty in bringing the machine to planing speed on the water.

Over a marked course the machine showed a speed of 60 miles an hour. During this test the motors were running at 1,200 revolutions per minute instead of their maximum of 1,300.

A weight-carrying test with the new propellers was planned, but rain interfered with the program.

Lieut. Porte left for New York, but expects to return here before sailing for Newfoundland to make certain that the changes to be made to the hull have the desired effect.

I. W. W. LEADERS KILLED BY BOMB

MEN WERE MAKING BOMB WHEN IT EXPLODED—MEANT FOR USE IN TARRYTOWN COURT.

WOMAN ONE OF THE VICTIMS

Three Men Killed Were Arrested on Rockefeller Estate—Police Raid Office of Anarchist Publication.

New York.—Three men and a woman were killed when a dynamite bomb, said to be the most powerful ever used in this city, exploded in an apartment tenanted by Industrial Workers of the World. The upper part of the six-story tenement house, in which the bomb was being made, was wrecked.

A score of persons were seriously injured and much property damage was done in a wide radius from the scene of the explosion.

Those dead and those who escaped injury in the apartment included Industrial Workers of the World men who are defendants in the trial to be begun in Tarrytown, N. Y., where they were arrested when they went to the village to make demonstrations outside the Pocantico Hills estate of John D Rockefeller.

As soon as one of the bodies of those killed in the explosion had been identified as that of Arthur Caron, one of the Tarrytown defendants, the police began an investigation of the explosion on the theory that the bomb was being constructed by Caron and others for possible use at the I. W. W. hearings in Tarrytown. There have been rumors of threats to Tarrytown officials.

Late the police escorted from the office of Emma Goldman's publication, "Mother Earth," to a police station a group of agitators.

ATTEMPT DR. CARMAN'S LIFE

Three Shots Taken at Freeport Doctor Without Effect—Woman May Be Arrested.

Freeport, N. Y.—Dr. Edwin Carman, in whose office Mrs. Louise Bailey was murdered, was shot at three times as he drove in his automobile through the town of Baldwin, near here. None of the bullets struck him. The doctor was on his way home from Rockville Center, where he had been to attend a patient.

Dr. Carman told the police the story of the attack on him. He had been out making professional calls and passed through Rockville Center on his way home. There he met Garland Gaden, an actor, and invited him to ride home with him.

"Gaden accepted my invitation," said Dr. Carman, "and got into the car. We stopped in a store and as we again got into the car I noticed a man on a bicycle near the curb. We drove off without paying any particular attention to the man.

"When about a mile and a half out of town I heard a report and thought one of the tires had exploded. My friend got out on one side of the machine and I got out on the other. As soon as I put my foot on the ground I heard another shot, and when I looked around I saw the man I had seen when we came out of the store standing beside his bicycle with a revolver in his hand. Garden shouted, My God, Carman, he's trying to kill you.'"

SUFFRAGE IS STATE ISSUE

Wilson Addresses Delegation From Women's Clubs of Country—For Local Government.

Washington.—Five hundred members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs marched to the white house and drew from President Wilson a final refusal to accede to demands that he support the movement for a woman suffrage amendment to the federal constitution.

The president reiterated his statements to previous delegations that his party had not embodied this question in its platforms, and then for the first time announced his personal conviction that the suffrage issue was one for settlement by the states and not by the federal government.

The women departed plainly disappointed and chagrined, some talking of immediate action against the democratic party.

Headed by such leaders as Mrs. Ellis Logan, Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, Miss Rheta Chile Dorr and Miss Alice Paul, they had marched to the while house with bands playing and banners flying. They massed themselves in the historic east room, many carrying babies. Once inside the white house, the women made no demonstration and allowed their leaders to do all the talking.

JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN DEAD

Was Striking Figure in British Politics—Heart Failure Cause of Death.

London.—Joseph Chamberlain, one of the most striking figures in British politics in the past generation, died at his London home here. His death came as a surprise. He had been suffering with paralysis, yet the condition of his health was not known to be any worse than for the past three years.

Mrs. Chamberlain, who never left her husband's side since he was stricken with paralysis eight years ago, and his son, Austin Chamberlain, were with Mr. Chamberlain when death came. The event cast a gloom over the London season, which was at its height.

Mr. Chamberlain's last public appearance was at a garden party on the grounds of his Birmingham home on May 6 last, when, with his wife and son, he received several hundred constituents. Mr. Chamberlain was wheeled out on the lawn in a chair and appeared very feeble when he lifted his hat to friends and neighbors in acknowledgment of their salutes.

The Last Word in Summer Gowns

JUST the zest that is added to all our afternoon assemblings by the enticing things that women think up to clothe themselves in simply cannot be estimated. And whether these creations are their own visions worked out in the products of the loom or are the inspirations of those whose profession is gown-making is of little importance. The important thing is the successful effect.

Here is a model from Gautier of Paris that shows how those familiar fabrics, taffeta and net, are set to the rhythm of the new modes as words to music. It is in black with the bodice over white figured net and a tunic of net finished with a broad band of silk about the bottom.

This is the style which has commanded the most attention for midsummer. The long sleeves of net, or chiffon, are featured in the majority of gowns, and a tunic of some sort is everywhere present. This dress is particularly cool looking and particularly comfortable.

The narrow plain skirt of taffeta is ankle length and finished at the bottom with a quilling of silk. There is a lapped seam in it down the front.

The tunic is rather full and the border of taffeta very wide. There is sufficient body and crispness in the taffeta border to hold the tunic out from the underskirt, and the transparency of net over the taffeta petticoat and the white bodice makes the charmingly cool effect which is the best aspect for a hot-weather costume.

There are narrow frills of net about the wrists and neck and a very new and cleverly arranged collar of taffeta which extends like a fichu about the neck, and crosses, surplice fashion, in front. It terminates at the back in a flat bow.

The simple little hat worn with this dress is of black moire and white lace. These are pretty items in the way of finishing touches to this noteworthy costume. The handbag is of moire, matching the hat. Bracelets set off the arms of the fair wearer, and one of them is worn above the elbow on the left arm.

The short skirt presupposes feet as carefully clothed as it is possible to have them. The stockings are plain black silk and the strapped slippers are decorated with tiny steel buckles.

New Arrangement of the Hair

A SIMPLE style for dressing the hair is pictured here. It employs the large shell hairpins that have met with growing favor this season, and dispenses with any other decoration.

The front hair is waved about the face for this style and parted at the left side in a long part extending from the crown of the head to the forehead. It is combed over the temples and lies in large waves about the face to the cheek, just in front of the ear, a little above the lobe.

At this point the hair is turned back and pinned at each side. Here it is all combed in together to make the back hairdressing.

For this the hair is parted in two strands and one of these is braided loosely, or twisted. This braid is coiled at the back around the remaining strand and pinned down to the head with wire pins. The remaining end is fluffed and pinned to the crown, with its ends thrust under the hair at the top crown. Small, invisible pins are placed in the waves at the front and wherever needed to keep the hair in place, for neatness must be featured in all the new styles of hairdressing.

The two large shell pins are ornamental but they also furnish a substantial support in keeping the hair in place.

This coiffure does not set so close to the head at the back as it appears to in the photograph. The fluffed strand of hair which is drawn through the braided coil and fastened in at the top, is something like a long and broad puff. It extends beyond the back of the head about as far as the usual French twist.

POULTRY

GOOD STOCK IS NECESSARY

Good, Strong, Vigorous Fowls Are Essential for Success in Poultry—Male Should Be Hustler.

In order to get the best results in poultry raising, or in fact, in any line of live stock work, it is necessary to have good stock to work with. This is as true of farm poultry kept for the production of eggs and meat as of the fanciers' fowls raised largely for exhibition purposes. The only difference is that the fowls are measured by a different standard. No matter what the stock is kept for, it should be the best obtainable for the use to which it is to be put.

What we keep poultry for, what condition we have to keep the flock under, or our personal likes and dislikes, make some difference in the variety we select, but there are some points which should be kept in mind no matter what variety is selected or what use is made of them. No matter what special branch of poultry keeping is engaged in, it is necessary to have strong, vigorous fowls if the best results are to be obtained. The weakling, no matter how good it may be in some other respect, should never have a place in the breeding pen.

In selecting a male to head the flock, the first consideration should be vigor. He should be courageous, always willing to fight for and defend his mates, active and hustling, and should have a strong crow. The hen should be active and busy, early off the roost in the morning, late in going in at night, always on the move hunting for food.

The farmer wants a fowl that is active enough to forage for a good part of its living. A large part of the profit which comes from farm poultry is made out of the waste products which the fowls find for themselves. Fowls are naturally gleaners and scavengers, and while some may object to this latter term it is a fact that in many places they are kept to utilize waste products. On the farm under the best management this would consist of grass, grain wasted in harvesting and insect life of different kinds found in the field.

MAKING FIGHT ON THE LICE

Nothing More Satisfactory Has Been Found Than Spray of Kerosene and Carbolic Acid.

During the days when the fowls are under shelter more than is usual, care must be taken to prevent lice from populating the place. You know from experience what a few days can do toward establishing a very lively community of these pests. The chickens will not sleep well, and they cannot lay when they are tortured with these pests any more than human beings can do their most efficient work when they worry.

You have a right to doubt the veracity of the poultryman who tells you that his chickens do not have lice, for wherever you find a chicken, there will you find its hand-maiden, the mite. Careful attention and repeated spraying are the price we pay for clean poultry houses and healthy, clean chickens.

Nothing more satisfactory than the old spray solution so often recommended, of kerosene and carbolic acid, has been found to meet the needs of the average farmer, and you have no doubt found that if one dose is not efficacious, the second followed in several days will put an end to the scourge for a while.

Problem of Feeding.

Feeding poultry is always something of a problem. Never place feed so that fowls can gorge themselves at any time. Make them work for it. When fed inside the building scatter the grain in a litter of fine straw or chaff upon a good floor. This makes the birds exercise to get their feed and so improve their physical condition. If you are feeding out of doors scatter the feed on dry, hard ground or in short grass. Don't put it on moist ground and don't under any circumstances leave mixed feed where it will become sour and soggy. This is disastrous to the older birds.

Next Year's Roosters.

It isn't too late yet by any means to buy that setting of eggs from which to secure your next year's roosters. Don't begrudge a good price, either Remember how much cheaper a setting of eggs is than buying the roosters fully grown.

HIT THE SPOT.

Postum Knocked Out Coffee Ails.

There's a good deal of satisfaction and comfort in hitting upon the right thing to rid one of the varied and constant ailments caused by coffee drinking.

"Ever since I can remember," writes an Ind. woman, "my father has been a lover of his coffee, but the continued use of it so affected his stomach that he could scarcely eat at times.

"Mother had coffee-headache and dizziness, and if I drank coffee for breakfast I would taste it all day and usually go to bed with a headache.

"One day father brought home a pkg. of Postum recommended by our grocer. Mother made it according to directions on the box and it just "hit the spot." It has a dark, seal-brown color, changing to golden brown when cream is added, and a snappy taste similar to mild, high-grade coffee, and we found that its continued use speedily put an end to all our coffee ills.

"That was at least ten years ago and Postum has, from that day to this, been a standing order of father's grocery bill.

"When I married, my husband was a great coffee drinker, although he admitted that it hurt him. When I mentioned Postum he said he did not like the taste of it. I told him I could make it taste all right. He smiled and said, try it. The result was a success, he won't have anything but Postum."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled—15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. Made in the cup with hot water—no boiling—30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

The Democratic congressional committee of the third district of Alabama are everlastingly "chewing the rag" with the state committee for allowing Mr. Mulkey to be elected by Republican and Bull Moose votes over Mr. Speight, a life-long Democrat. But we fail to see from whence the malcontents are to get consolation. "The die is cast." The people of the third district united against the "frame-up" dictators and out voted them.

The "Protective Tariff Cyclopedia," prepared and published by the American Protective Tariff league, New York, will be ready for distributisn about August 1st. The cyclopedia will contain the official text of Underwood law; the Underwood and Payne-Aldrich laws compared, giving every rate of duty on articles under both laws; what 152 Senators and Congressmen said for and against the Underwood bill; and a copious index of over 8,000 citations. The volume will consist of about 900 pages and will answer all questions on the tariff matter.

Is it a fact that certain county officials are contemplating issuing interest bearing time warrants on the county for the purpose of building a highway? If this be true, is it fair to force a debt on the county over the wishes of the people, to build a highway or anything else? Has the time come in this county when the tax payer has no voice as to how the tax money shall be spent? As for this paper, we say it would be a sad mistake to go in debt to build a highway. And we think it would be just and right to submit such questions to a vote of the people. We do not think that the tax money should be spent for anything over the wishes of a majority of the people of the county.

In an editorial in the Clanton Press of last week, in which a discussion of "The Knocker," is made at some length, we notice the writer of the article suspicions that someone is knocking Clanton and Chilton county by "injecting politics" into matters concerning the common good of all. There is no direct reference made, but between the lines we can read that the Press is making accusations against some party or parties for playing politics in the recent high school agitation.

We do not feel disposed to venture so far as the Press in intimating that there has been politics displayed in this matter. We do not believe that politics should be mixed with matters of education, and for that very reason we have so far refrained from a discussion of this phase of the question, feeling that a mere suspicion or intimation expressed, would be in effect, a reversal of the accusation upon ourselves in the minds of the people. And to be sure we do not want it said that we have had political aspirations behind our attitude toward the high school.

Music Teachers Elected Monday

On last Monday night the Trustees of the city high school of this place met for the purpose of electing two music teachers for the next term. After considering all the applications on file the Board unanimoysly elected Misses Carrie Mae Wilson of Birmingham, and Emmette Matthews. Miss Wilson comes highly recommended by the Sherwood Music School of Chicago, and is no nourbt a teacher of remarkable ability. Miss Matthews is a young lady of Clanton, well and favorably known here, and the impression she has made on those who are acquainted with her musical talent, is nothing less than the very best. The Board has surely made no mistake in these selections, and they hope to receive the hearty cooperation of the school patrons for the musical department of the school. All teachers have been selected except for the Sixth grade, for which a choice will be made soon.

Joyful Anticipation of Motherhood

There is apt to be a latent apprehension of distress to mar the complete joy of expectation. But this is quite overcome by the advice of so many women to use "Mother's Friend." This is an external application designed to so lubricate the muscles and to thus so relieve the pressure reacting on the nerves, that the natural strain upon the cords and ligaments is not accompanied by those severe pains said to cause nausea, morning sickness and many local distresses. This splendid embrocation is known to a multitude of mothers.

Many people believe that those remedies which have stood the test of time, that have been put to every trial under the varying conditions of age, weight, general health, etc., may be safely relied upon. And judging by the fact that "Mother's Friend" has been in continual use since our grandmother's earlier years and is known throughout the United States it may be easily inferred that it is something that women talk about and gladly recommend to prospective mothers.

"Mother's Friend" is prepared only in our own laboratory and is sold by druggists everywhere. Ask for a bottle to-day and write for a special book for expectant mothers. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 407 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

HOW TO GET STRENGTH

after any sickness is purely a matter of nourishment, whether the attack was an ordinary cold or severe illness; the weakened forces cannot repulse disease germs, and this is why a relapse is so often fatal or why chronic weakness often follows sickness.

Restoring strength to millions of people for forty years has proven the real need for taking Scott's Emulsion after any sickness; nothing equals it—nothing compares with it. Helping Kidneys By Clearing Blood

A Function Greatly Assisted By a Well-Known Remedy.

Most readers will be interested to more clearly understand why analysis of urine is so important. In the use of S. S. S. to purify the blood, its action is a stimulant to the myriad of fine blood vessels that make up the constructive tissues of the kidneys. All the blood from all over the body must pass through the kidneys. They act as testers and assayers. And according to what they allow to pass out in the urine, both as to quantity and materials, the health of the kidneys and the quality of the blood is determined. The catalytic energy forced by S. S. S. is shown in the urine. It is also demonstrated in the skin. And as the blood continues to sweep through the kidneys the dominating nature of S. S. S., acting as it does through all the avenues of elimination, shows a marked decrease of disease manifestations as demonstrated by urine analysis. This assistance is a great relief to the kidneys. The body wastes are more evenly distributed to the emunctories; their elimination is stimulated by the tonic action afforded the liver, lungs, skin and kidneys. Thus, in cases of rheumatism, cystitis, chronic sore throat, huskiness of voice, bronchitis, asthma and the myriad of other reflex indications of weak kidney action, first purify your blood with S. S. S., so it will enable the tissues to rebuild the cellular strength and regain the normal health.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 527 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Sara declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty again attempts to tell the real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word. Sara insults Hetty by revealing that all this time she has believed Hetty to have sinned in her relations with Challis Wrandall. Later she realizes that Hetty is innocent. Leslie again proposes to Hetty and is rejected. Hetty prepares to leave Sara, declaring that after what has happened she can remain no longer. Hetty starts for Europe. At sea she receives a message from Booth that he has started on a faster steamer and will be waiting for her on the other side. Booth meets her and accompanies her to London.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

When the night boat from Dover to Calais slipped away from her moorings that evening, Hetty Castleton and her maid were on board, with all their bags and trunks, and Brandon Booth was supposed to be completely at sea in the heart of that glittering London-town.

The night was fog-laden and dripping, and the crossing promised to be unpleasant. Wrapped in a thick sea-ulster Hetty sat huddled up in the lea of the deckhouse, sick at heart and miserable. She reproached herself for the scurvy trick she was playing on him, reviled herself and yet pitied herself.

A tall man came shambling down the narrow space along the rail and stopped directly in front of her. She started in alarm as he reached out his hand to support himself against the deckhouse. As he leaned forward, he laughed.

"You were thinking of me, Hetty," said the man.

For a long time she stared at him, transfixed, and then, with a low moan, covered her eyes with her hands.

"Is it true—is it a dream?" she sobbed.

He dropped down beside her and gathered her in his strong, eager arms.

"You were thinking of me, weren't you? And reproaching yourself, and hating yourself for running away like this? I thought so. Well, you might just as well try to dodge the smartest detective in the world as to give me the slip now, darling."

"You—you spied on me?" she cried, in muffled tones. She lay very limp in his arms.

"I did," he confessed, without shame. "Gad, when I think of what I might be doing at this moment if I hadn't found you out in time! Think of me back there in London, racing about like a madman, searching for you in every—"

"Please, please!" she implored.

"But luck was with me. You can't get away, Hetty. I shan't let you out of my sight again. I'll camp in front of your door and you'll see me wither and die of sleeplessness, for one or the other of my eyes will always be open."

"Oh, I am so tired, so miserable," she murmured.

"Poor little sweetheart!"

"I wish you would hate me."

"Lie where you are, dearest, and—forget!"

"If I only could—forget!"

"Rest. I will hold you tight and keep you warm. We're in for a nasty crossing, but it is paradise for me. I am mad with the delight of having you here, holding you close to me, feeling you in my arms. The wilder the night the better, for I am wild with the joy of it all. I love you! I love you!" He strained her closer to him in a sort of paroxysm.

She was quiet for a long time. Then she breathed into his ear:

"You will never know how much I was longing for you, just as you are now, Brandon, and in the midst of it all you came. It is like a fairy story, and oh, I shall always believe in fairies."

A long time afterward the throbbing ceased, bell-buoys whistled and clanged about them; the sea suddenly grew calm and lifeless; they slid over it as if it were a quavering sheet of ice; and lights sneaked out of the fog and approached with stealthy swiftness. Bells rang below and above them, sailors sprang up from everywhere and calls were heard below; the rattling of chains and the thumping of heavy luggage took the place of that steady, monotonous beat of the engines. People began to infest the deck, limp and groaning, harassed but voiceless. A mighty sigh seemed to envelop the whole ship—a sigh of relief.

Then it was that these two arose stiffly from their sheltered bench and gave heed to the things that were about them.

The channel was behind them.

CHAPTER XV.

Rattling Old Bones.

They journeyed to Paris by the night mail. He was waiting for her on the platform when she descended from the wagon lit in the Gare du Nord. Sleepy passengers crowded with them into the customs department. She, alone among them all, was smiling brightly, as if the world could be sweet at an hour when, by all odds, it should be sleepiest.

"I was up and on the lookout for you at Amiens," he declared, as they walked off together. "You might have got off there, you know," with a wry grin.

"I shall not run away from you again, Brandon," she said earnestly. "I promise, on my honor."

"By Jove," he cried, "that's a relief!" Then he broke into a happy laugh.

"I shall go to the Ritz," she said, after her effects had been examined and were ready for release.

"I thought so," he announced calmly. "I wired for rooms before I left London."

"Really, this is ridic—"

"Don't frown like that, Hetty," he pleaded.

As they rattled and bounced over the cobble-stones in a taxi-meter on the way to the Place Vendome, he devoted the whole of his conversation to the delicious breakfast they were to have, expatiating glibly on the wonderful berries that would come first in that always-to-be-remembered meal. She was ravenously hungry by the time they reached the hotel, just from listening to his dissertation on chops and rolls and coffee as they are served in Paris, to say nothing of waffles and honey and the marmalade that no Englishman can do without.

Alone in his room, however, he was quite another person. His calm assurance took flight the instant he closed the door and moodily began to prepare for his bath. Resolution was undiminished, but the facts in the case were most desolating. Whatever it was that stood between them, there was no gainsaying its power to influence their lives. It was no trifle that caused her to take this second flight, and the sooner he came to realize the seriousness of opposition the better.

He made up his mind on one point in that half-hour before breakfast; if she asked him again to let her go her way in peace, it was only fair to her and right that he should submit to the inevitable. She loved him, he was sure of it. Then there must be a very good reason for her perplexing attitude toward him. He would make one more attempt to have the truth from her.

She Stared at Him, Transfixed.

Failing in that, he would accept the situation as hopeless, for the time being at least. She should know that he loved her deeply enough for that.

She joined him in the little open-air cafe, and they sat down at a table in a remote corner. There were few people breakfasting. In her tender blue eyes there was a look of sadness that haunted him, even as she smiled and called him beloved.

"Hetty, darling," he said, leaning forward and laying his hand on hers, "can't you tell me what it is?"

She was prepared for the question. In her heart she knew the time had come when she must be fair with him. He observed the pallor that stole into her warm, smooth cheeks as she regarded him fixedly for a long time before replying.

"There is only one person in the world who can tell you, Brandon. It is for her to decide. I mean Sara Wrandall."

He felt a queer, sickening sensation of uneasiness sneak into existence. In the back of his mind, a hateful fear began to shape itself. For a long time he looked into her somber eyes, and as he looked the fear that was hateful took on something of a definite shape.

"Did you know her husband?" he asked, and somehow he knew what the answer would be.

"Yes," she replied, after a moment. She was startled. Her lips remained parted.

He watched her closely. "Has this—this secret anything to do with Challis Wrandall?"

"It has," said she, meeting his gaze steadily.

His hands clutched the edge of the table in a grip that turned the knuckles white.

"Hetty!" he cried, in a hoarse whisper. "You—can't mean that you—"

"You must go to Sara," she cried hurriedly. "Haven't I told you that she is the one—"

"Were you in love with that infernal scoundrel?" he demanded fiercely.

"Sara knows everything. She will tell you—"

"Were you carrying on an affair with him while professing to be the friend of his wife? Tell me that! Did she find you out and—"

"Oh, Brandon, why will you persist?" she cried, her eyes aflame. "I can tell you no more. Why do you glare at me as if I were the meanest thing on earth? Is this love? Is this your idea of greatness? Isn't it enough for you to know that Sara is my loyal, devoted friend; that she—"

"Wait!" he commanded darkly. "Is it possible that she did not discover your secret until the day you left her house so abruptly? Does that explain your sudden departure?"

"I can answer that," she said quietly. "She has known everything from the day I met her. I have not said anything, Brandon, to lead you to believe that I was in love with Challis Wrandall, have I?"

His eyes softened. "No, you haven't. I—I hope you will forget what I said. You see, I knew Wrandall's reputation. He had no sense of honor. He—"

"Well, I have!" she said levelly.

He flushed. "I am a beast! I'll put it in this way, then: Was he in love with you?"

"You are still unfair. I shall not answer."

He was silent for a long time. "And Sara's lips are sealed," he mused, still possessed of doubts and fears.

"Until she elects to tell the story, dearest love, my lips are also sealed. I love you better than anything else in all this world. I could willingly offer up my life for you, but—well, my life does not belong to me. It is Sara's."

"For heaven's sake, Hetty, what is all this?" he cried in desperation.

"I can say no more. It is useless to insist, Brandon. If you can wrest the story from her, all well and good. You will hate me then, dear love. But it cannot be helped. I am prepared."

"Tell me this much: When you refused to marry Leslie, was your course inspired by what had happened in—in connection with Challis Wrandall?"

"You forget that it is you that I love," she responded simply.

"But why should Sara urge you to marry Leslie if there is anything—"

"Hush! There is the waiter. Come to my sitting-room after breakfast. I have something to say to you. We must come to a definite understanding. This cannot go on."

He was with her for an hour in that pinched little sitting-room, and left her there without a vestige of rancour in his soul. She would not give an inch in the stand she had taken, but something immeasurably great in his make-up rose to the occasion and he went forth with the conviction that he had no right to demand more of her than she was ready to give. He was satisfied to abide by her decision. The spell of her was over him more completely than ever before.

Two days later he saw her off at the Gare de Lyons, bound for Interlaken. There was a complete understanding between them. She wanted to be quite alone in the Alpine town; he was not to follow her there. She had reserved rooms at the Schweitzerhof, and the windows of her sitting-room looked straight up the valley to the snow-covered crest of the Jungfrau. She remembered these rooms; as a young girl she had occupied them with her father and mother. By some hook or crook, Booth arranged by wire for her to have them again, not an easy matter at that season of the year. Later she was to go to Lucerne, and then to Venice.

The slightest shred of hope was left for Booth. Even though he might accomplish the task he had set unto himself—the conquest of Sara in respect to the untold story—he still had Hetty's dismal prophecy that after he learned the truth he would come to see why they could not be married. But he would not despair.

"We'll see," was all that he said in response to her forlorn cry that they were parting for ever. There was a grimness in the way he said it that gave her something to cherish during the months to come; the hope that he would come back and take her in spite of herself.

He sailed from Cherbourg on the first steamship calling there. Awake, he thought of her; asleep, he dreamed of Challis Wrandall. There was something uncanny in the persistence with which that ruthless despoiler of peace forced his way into his dreams, to the absolute exclusion of all else. The voyage home was made horrid by these nightly reminders of a man he scarcely knew, yet dreaded. He became more or less obsessed by the idea that an evil spell had descended upon him in the shape of a ghostly influence.

The weeks passed slowly for Hetty. There were no letters from Sara, but an occasional line or so from Mr. Carroll. She had made Brandon Booth promise that he would not write to her, nor was he to expect anything from her. If her intention was to cut herself off entirely from her recent world and its people, as she might have done in another way by pursuing the time-honored and rather cowardly plan of entering a convent, she was soon to discover that success in the undertaking brought a deeper sense of exile than she could have imagined herself able to endure at the outset. She found herself more utterly alone and friendless than at any time in her life. The chance companions she formed at Interlaken—despite a well-meant reserve—served only to increase her feeling of loneliness and despair. The very natural attentions of men, young and old, depressed her, instead of encouraging that essentially feminine thing called vanity. She lived as one without an aim, without a single purpose except to close one day that she might begin the next.

After a time, she went on to Lucerne. Here the life on the surface was gayer, and she was roused from her state of lethargy in spite of herself. Once, from her little balcony in the National, she saw two of her old acquaintances in the chorus at the Gaiety. They were wearing many pearls. Another time, she met them in the street. She was rather quietly dressed. They did not notice her. But the prosperous Hebraic gentlemen who attended them were not so careless.

One day a card was brought to her rooms. For the next two weeks she had a true and unavoidable friend in Lucerne. It would appear that Mrs. Rowe-Martin had not been apprised of the rift in the Wrandall lute. She had no reason to consider the exclusive Miss Castleton as anything but the most desirable of companions. Mrs. Rowe-Martin was not long in finding out (though how she did it, heaven knows), that Lord Murgatroyd's grandniece was no longer the intimate of that impossible person, Sara Gooch. She couldn't think of Sara without thinking of Gooch.

But at last Mrs. Rowe-Martin departed, much to Hetty's secret relief, but not before she had increased the girl's burthens by introducing her into a cold-nosed cosmopolitan set from which there were but three ways of escape. She refused to marry one of them, denied another the privilege of making love to her, and declined to play auction bridge with all of them. They were not long in dropping her, although it must be said there was real regret among the men.

From Mrs. Rowe-Martin and others she heard that Mrs. Redmond Wrandall and Vivian were to be in Scotland in October, for somebody-or-other's christening, and that Leslie had been doing some really wonderful flying at Pau.

"I am so glad, my dear," said Mrs. Rowe-Martin, "that you refused to marry Leslie. He is a cad. Besides, you would have been in a perpetual state of nerves over his flying."

Of Sara, there was no news, as might have been expected. Mrs. Rowe-Martin made it very clear that Sara was a respectable person—but heavens!

The chill days of autumn came and the crowd began to dwindle. Hetty made preparations to join in the exodus. As the days grew short and bleak, she found herself thinking more and more of the happy-hearted, symbolic dicky-bird on a faraway window ledge. His life was neither a travesty nor a tragedy; hers was both of these.

Something told her too that Brandon Booth had wormed the truth out of Sara, and that she would never see him again. It hurt her to think that while Sara believed in her, the man who loved her did not. It is a way men have.

CHAPTER XVI.

Vivian Airs Her Opinions.

Chief among Booth's virtues was his undeviating loyalty to a set purpose. He went back to America with the firm intention to clear up the mystery surrounding Hetty Castleton, no matter how irksome the delay in achieving his aim or how vigorous the methods he would have to employ. Sara Wrandall, to all purposes, held the key; his object in life now was to induce her to turn it in the lock and throw open the door so that he might enter in and become a sharer in the secrets beyond.

A certain amount of optimistic courage attended him in his campaign against what had been described to him as the impossible. He could see no clear reason why she should withhold the secret under the new conditions, when so much in the shape of happiness was at stake. It was in this spirit of confidence that he prepared to confront her on his arrival in New York, and it was the same unbounded faith in the belief that nothing evil could result from a perfectly just and honorable motive that gave him the needed courage.

He stayed over night in New York, and the next morning saw him on his way to Southlook. There was something truly ingenuous in his desire to get to the bottom of the matter without fear or apprehension. At the very worst, he maintained, there could be nothing more reprehensible than a passing infatuation, long since dispelled, or perhaps a mildly sinister episode in which virtue had been triumphant and vice defeated with unpleasant results to at least one person, and that person the husband of Sara Wrandall.

Pat met him at the station and drove him to the little cottage on the upper road.

"Ye didn't stay long," said he reflectively, after he had put the bag up in front. He took up the reins.

"Not very," replied his master.

After a dozen rods or more, Pat tried again.

"Just siventeen days, I make it."

"Seems longer."

"Perhaps you'll be after going back soon."

"Why should you think that, Patrick?"

"Because you don't seem to be takin' much interest in your surroundin's here," said Pat loftily. He delivered a smart smack on the crupper with his stubby whip, and pursed his lips for the companionship to be derived from whistling.

"I suppose you know why I went to Europe," said Booth, laying his hand affectionately on the man's arm.

"Sure I do," said Pat, forgetting to whistle. "And was it bad luck you had, sor?"

"A temporary case of it, I'm afraid."

"Well," said the Irishman, looking up at his employer with the most profound encouragement in his wink, "if it's anny help to you, sor, I'll say that I've never found bad luck to be anything but timporary. And, believe me, I've had plinty of it. Mary was dom near three years makin' up her mind to say yis to me."

"And since then you've had no bad luck?" said Booth, with a smile.

"Plinty of it, begob, but I've had some one besides meself to blame for it. There's a lot in that, Mr. Brandon. Whin a man marries, he simply divides his luck into two parts, good and bad, and if he's like most men he puts the bulk av the bad luck on his wife and kapes to himself all he can av the good for a rainy day. That's what makes him a strong man and able to meet trouble when it comes. The beauty av the arrangement is that bad luck is only timporary and a woman enjoys talking about it, while good luck is wid us nine-tenths of the time, whether we know it or not, and we don't have to talk about it."

This was fine philosophy, but Booth discerned the underlying motive.

"Have you been quarreling?"

"I have not," said Pat wrathfully. "But I won't say as much for Mary. The point av me argument is that I have all the good luck in havin' married her, and she claims to have had all the bad luck in marryin' me. Still, as I said before, 'tis but timporary. The good luck lasts and the bad don't. She'll be after tellin' me so before sundown. That's like all women. You'll find it out for yourself wan o' these days, Mr. Brandon, and ye'll be dom proud ye're a man and can enjoy your good luck when ye get it. The bad luck's always fallin' behind ye, and ye can always look forward to the good luck. So don't be downhearted. She'll take you, or me name's not what it ought to be."

Booth was inclined to accept this unique discourse as a fair-weather sign.

"Take these bags upstairs, Pat," said he on their arrival at the cottage, "and then come down and drive me over to Mrs. Wrandall's."

"Will ye be after stayin' for lunch with her, Mr. Brandon?" inquired Pat, climbing over the wheel.

"I can't answer that question now."

"Hiven help both av us if Mary's good luncheon goes to waste," said Pat ominously. "That's all I have to say. She'll take it out av both av us."

"Tell her I'll be here for lunch," said Booth, with alacrity. From which it may be perceived that master and man were of one mind when it came to considering the importance of Mary.

Pat studied his watch for a moment with a calculating eye.

"It's half-past eliven now, sor," he announced. "D'ye think ye can make it?"

Booth reflected. "I think not," he said. "I'll have luncheon first." Whereupon he leaped from the trap and went in to tell Mary how happy he was to be where he could enjoy home cooking.

At four he was delivered at Sara's door by the astute Patrick, announced by the sedate Watson and interrogated by the intelligent Murray, who seemed surprised to hear that he would not have anything cool to drink. Sara sent word that she would be down in fifteen minutes, but, as a matter of fact, appeared in less than three.

She came directly to the point.

"Well," she said, with her mysterious smile, "she sent you back to me, I see." He was still clasping her hand.

"Have you heard from her?" he asked quickly.

"No. But I knew just what would happen. I told you it would prove to be a wild-goose chase. Where is she?"

He sat down beside her on the cool, white covered couch.

"In Switzerland. I put her on the train the night before I sailed. Yes, she did send me back to you. Now I'm here, I want the whole story, Sara. What is it that stands between us?"

For an hour he pleaded with her, all to no purpose. She steadfastly refused to divulge the secret. Not even his blunt reference to Challis Wrandall's connection with the affair found a vulnerable spot in her armor.

"I shan't give it up, Sara," he said, at the end of his earnest harangue against the palpably unfair stand both she and Hetty were taking. "I mean to harass you, if you please, until I get what I'm after. It is of the most vital importance to me. Quite as much so, I am sure, as it appears to be to you. If Hetty will say the word, I'll take her gladly, just as she is, without knowing what all this is about. But, you see, she won't consent. There must be some way to override her. You both admit there is no legal barrier. You tell me today that there is no insanity in her family, and a lot of other things that I've been able to bring out by questioning, so I am more than ever certain that the obstacle is not so serious as you would have me believe. Therefore, I mean to pester you until you give in, my dear Sara."

"Very well," she said resignedly. "When may I expect a renewal of the conflict?"

"Would tomorrow be convenient?" he asked quaintly.

She returned his smile. "Come to luncheon."

"Have I your permission to start the portrait?"

"Yes. As soon as you like."

He left her without feeling that he had gained an inch along the road to success. That night, in the gloaming of his starlit porch, he smoked many a pipeful and derived therefrom a profound estimate of the value of tact and discretion as opposed to bold and impulsive measures in the handling of a determined woman. He would make haste slowly, as the saying goes. Many an unexpected victory is gained by dilatory tactics, provided the blow is struck at the psychological moment of least resistance.

Forged Antiques.

Arabic enameled glassware is prized as one of the finest productions of the glassmaker's art. Damascus is the principal point for the discovery of Arabic antiques, and undoubtedly much of it was made in that city in ancient times; but United States Consul John D. Whiting at Jerusalem has discovered that the business of manufacturing forgeries of the genuine article has assumed large proportions in Damascus.

SENATE CONFIRMS RESERVE BOARD

TWO OUT OF THE FIVE MEMBERS OF THE BOARD ARE HELD UP.

WARBURG MAY WITHDRAW

Thomas D. Jones of Chicago Tells Committee of His Relations With Alleged Trusts.

Washington. — The nominations by President Wilson of three of the five members of the Federal reserve board —Charles S. Hamlin, W. P. G. Harding and A. C. Miller—were confirmed by the Senate.

The nominations of Paul M. Warburg of New York and Thomas D. Jones of Chicago, have not been acted upon by the banking and currency committee and probably will not be before the end of the week. It was stated that Mr. Warburg would ask the president to withdraw his nomination, but Acting Chairman Hitchcock of the banking committee telegraphed an invitation for him to appear and submit to the committee's questions. It was suggested, however, that Mr. Warburg probably would decline the invitation and that this would be followed by an announcement from the White House that the nomination had been withdrawn.

Mr. Hamlin, Mr. Miller and Mr. Harding take the oath of office within a few days and the work of setting in motion the new federal banking system can begin at once. The secretary of the treasury and the comptroller of the currency are ex-officio members of the board, which consists of seven members. The five will constitute a quorum to do practically all preliminary business.

Mr. Jones was before the committee for nearly four hours to tell about his relations with the International Harvester Company and the New Jersey Zinc Company, both so-called trusts. He was questioned at length by the members. No proposal was made to vote on a report to the Senate on his nomination, but is regarded as probable that if approval is given it will be a close vote.

Senator Hitchcock was authorized to give out information secured from Mr. Jones. His report in substance was.

Mr. Jones was asked about his relations to two large business enterprises, one of which was the International Harvester Company. Mr. Jones said he became a director of that company in April, 1909, purchasing one share to qualify, at the request of Cyrus H. McCormick, an old friend. He said he fully approved all the actions of the company since he became a director and believed that they were proper and within the law. Mr. Jones also announced he is in accord with the company's policy and said he had nothing to lose or gain by the decisions of the courts in the anti-trust suit in the Harvester case.

Prior to 1897, Mr. Jones told the committee he owned and was president of a zinc company at Mineral Point, Wis., capitalized at $400,000, which came to him and his brother in satisfaction of a debt. This company was taken over by the New Jersey Zinc Company, then capitalized at $4,000,000, and the Jones brothers were given $900,000 in stock of the New Jersey company for their $400,000 in the Wisconsin company. The New Jersey company acquired other properties and increased its captial to $10,000,000.

KILLS FOUR WITH AXE.

Crime Committed in Suburb of Chicago.

Chicago. — A family of four was wiped out by blows from an axe in their home in the German settlement at Blue Island, a suburb. The victims were Jacob Neslesla, 72 years old, street sweeper; Mrs. Anna Neslesla, wife of Jacob, 65; Mrs. Martha Mansfield, 24 years old, daughter of above; 2-year-old daughter of Mrs. Mansfield. Bloody finger prints on the axe handle were photographed, showing a thumb. Searches were instituted for Richard Mansfield, husband of Martha Mansfield, who is alleged to have deserted one year ago, and for Michael Cherewinkle. The latter was compelled to vacate the Neslesla house three weeks ago by the landlord in order to make way for the new tenants. He is said to have uttered threats against the landlord and Neslesla. Mansfield has not been seen in Blue Island since he left his wife.

Twenty-nine persons have been murdered in the last three years in Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Iowa and Illinois by blows from axes.

Refuses to Aid Fire Sufferers.

Washington. — The $200,000 appropriation for the aid of the Salem fire sufferers asked by President Wilson in a message to Congress was refused by the House appropriations committee. The majority of the committee contended that Massachusetts was able to take care of the situation and that federal appropriations were unnecessary. Repersentatives Phelan and Gillett, the Massachusetts members of the committee, and five others voted for it.

IS TOO MUCH "PORK"

Extravagance in River and Harbor "Improvements."

Surely Is Time to Call a Halt on Extravagant Expenditure of Public Funds for Purely Selfish Political Reasons.

River and harbor "improvements" are only a part of the pork barrel. Public buildings are more pork. Against this phase of the great pork barrel graft the June issue of the Journal of the American Institute of Architects contains some vigorous remarks. Quoting Postmaster General Burleson's protest against expeditures in this field, the Journal says:

"Mr. Burleson presents tables from which we quote five instances as exhibiting gross inconsistencies in the matter of appropriations:

	Area, square feet.	App'tion.
Wilkesboro, N. C., post office and court house	4,500	$58,000
Opelika, Ala., post office and court house	4,500	105,000
Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, post office and court house	7,000	86,800
Amarillo, Tex., post office and court house	7,000	199,999
Corpus Christi, Tex., post office and court house	10,000	131,000

"It must be equally evident to the architect and business man that appropriations so widely at variance for structures of the same accommodation are not rational."

But it is rational—most carefully reasoned—only the reasons are selfish political reasons. The inequalities of expenditure on public buildings are inequalities of "pull." The hands of the stronger or greedier or more ruthless get the larger pieces of pork.

It is time to make an end of the pork barrel graft.

Crops vs. Congress.

It will require skilful maneuvering on the part of the Democrats in congress to prevent an early return of prosperity. Winter wheat, already "made," will surpass all records. The hay crop, now nearly mature, promises to be enormous. And few Americans realize the value of hay, as a basic product, even in this age of gasoline. The entire crop situation looks good, and upon that does the condition of general business usually depend. Of all crops corn, which is yet to be heard from, is king, because of its fundamental relation to beef and pork and other inhabitants of the barnyard.

The country is growing, and popular needs are on the increase. The Fifth avenue motor bus line in New York, for example, carried in May 1,500,000 passengers. This is the record. It has recently increased its equipment with an order for 25 new buses. While this is only typical of the growth of everything that concentrates on Manhattan island, it shows how essentially eager the American people are to go forward.

If congress would only adjourn, giving business a rest for a while from further regulation and the threat of it, the president and all concerned would be surprised with the rapidity with which industry would revive. The potentialities of prosperity are here. Only the threat of disturbing legislation interferes with its largest realization.—Boston Herald.

Warning to Democrats.

Unless what one reads of comment on all sides is not in fact a reflection of public sentiment, the president and his party are no longer in the enjoyment of that widespread confidence which Mr. Wilson especially held during the first year of his term. This being the situation, the house's determination to proceed with a program of conservation legislation and the president's insistence upon consideration by the senate of trust bills before adjournment is inexplicable. . . . It cannot be demonstrated that there is any special exigency demanding legislative action, tariff, and currency having been disposed of, and the Democratic party is simply running the risk unnecessarily of new dangers to itself. Already it has more than enough to keep it busy explaining and apologizing during the congressional campaign. Even the members of other parties who last year did not hesitate to express their personal admiration for President Wilson, and who resented partisan criticism of him and wished him well, are beginning seriously to doubt whether he is wise in pressing so many large and controverted propositions to passage.—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

A Casual Thought.

Wilson playing petty politics appointed a wholly unfit man to be secretary of state. The country must pay the penalty. Bryan is not to blame: he didn't know he was unfit. But Wilson knew, and Wilson made the appointment.—Kansas City Journal.

Muckraking of the Past.

Criminal indictments against Editors Charles A. Dana and Whitelaw Reid for libeling "Boss" Shepherd of Washington have now been abandoned by the court in the District of Columbia. The indictments were drawn in 1875 and Messrs. Dana and Reid are dead. They were never prosecuted. It is a pity to have the indictments abondoned. They should have been allowed to stand as a memorial to some excellent muckraking a generation ago.—Springfield Republican.

Bluecoats Rescue Kitten.

A report was telephoned to the West One Hundred and Sixty-second street police station by Mrs. Emanuel Levy of 7 Hamilton place that some one had fallen into a culvert opposite her home. Patrolman Nieand and two other policemen were hurried to the place. When they looked into the sewer they saw a kitten swimming about in the water ten feet below the street level. It had fallen through a four-inch opening while chasing a ball. The patrolmen spent half an hour fishing for the kitten with a rake. When they finally got it to the sidewalk it ran between the patrolmen's legs and disappeared around the corner.—New York Times.

LAUGH ON OLD CAL CLAY

Jack London Makes a Comparison in Story That Has the Elements of Humor.

Jack London said in Vera Cruz, where he was sojourning as a war correspondent:

"Some of these young war correspondents whom I see about me are as ignorant of war correspondenceship as old Cal Clay was ignorant of astronomy.

"I found old Cal Clay sitting in his shirt sleeves on his front stoop one day, puffing like mad on his pipe, and never getting a puff of smoke from it.

"As I drew near he struck three matches and held them to the bowl; he sucked and sucked till his cheeks seemed to meet inside; still never a puff of smoke.

"And burnt matches lay all round his chair. There must have been a boxful of them.

"'Why, Cal,' said I, 'what on earth are you doing?'

"'That chump of a Wash White's been tryin' to fool me, I expect,' said he, and he took another futile puff and put his pipe down in disgust. That chump Wash told me if I smoked a bit of glass I could see the spots on the sun.'"

RESINOL CURED AWFUL ITCHING IN ONE NIGHT

New York, April 26.—"The skin on my hand got red and rough. It itched and I began to scratch it. It itched so that sometimes I could not sleep all night. I was suffering very much. I used ——— salve and ———, but they did not seem to help me. This went on for six or seven months. Then I tried resinol ointment and resinol soap. I used them one night. The speaker was Mayor Rockwell of Akron. He resumed:

"There are a number of ways to shut these travel bores up. A good way is the Coliseum one.

"'And in Rome I saw the Coliseum by moonlight. Um-m-m, wasn't it fine!'

"'The Coliseum?' you answer, calmly. 'Which one?'

"Of course, there's only one Coliseum in Rome. But the bore isn't sure about it, and if there are two, he doesn't want to expose his ignorance. While he hems and haws and stutters, very red in the face, you easily make your escape from him."

He even urged me to write a poem for him—to dash a poem off while he looked on. This failing, he would not go till I had read him a half dozen selections from my works."

Mr. Noyes sighed.

SAYS GET BACK TO YOUTH

Advice of Physical Director to Tired Business Men About to Take Vacation Worth Heeding.

Business men about to start on their summer vacations are advised to read dime novels, smoke cornsilk cigarettes and act like "kids" again, by Dr. Louis R. Welsmiller, physical director of the West side Y. M. C. A. of New York. His prescription for the rejuvenation of business-worn members of the association has been posted all over the association's building. It reads:

"Forget your dignity, throw away your staidness, and be a kid again—a wholesome, fun-loving, boisterous, dime-novel reading kid—during your vacation. Many of you men, when youngsters, used to think it great fun to sneak out behind the barn, with a cigarette made of cornsilk and brown wrapping paper. It won't hurt you to try the same thing again. You won't be able to smoke enough to hurt yourself, and there's no danger of contracting the cornsilk habit.

"Dime novels make good summer reading. They are next to the Bible for vacation reading, but take the Bible along, of course. Many great men read Nick Carter, Jesse James and like writings for relaxation. Most of you men have come to New York and have made good. Help yourselves to make good again next winter by being a boy on your vacation."

The Same Thing.

Vincent Astor, at a dinner in New York, said of the French evening gowns that have caused so many shocked women to unite in protest:

"I heard a story about one of these gowns. A headstrong girl had purchased it in the Rue de la Paix without her mother's knowledge, and she insisted on wearing it, the evening it came home, at Armenonville for dinner and at the opera afterwards for the Russian ballet. Her mother, however, protested. But the girl, in her headstrong way, declared:

"'I'll wear that gown or nothing.'

"With a shrug and a faint smile, her mother answered:

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, the brilliant suffragist, said, at a luncheon at the Colony club in New York, in answer to an "anti:"

"The hen is no great hand to swagger and strut, but at least she's never been known to cackle before she's laid the egg."

A Stitch in Time

Colds, fevers, congestion and germ diseases are pretty sure to overwork the kidneys and leave them weak. In convalescence, in fact at any time when suspicion is aroused by a lame, aching back, rheumatic pains, headache, dizziness or disordered urine, the use of Doan's Kidney Pills is a stitch in time that may avoid serious kidney disease.

Doan's Kidney Pills command confidence, for no other remedy is so widely used, so freely recommended or so generally successful.

A Mississippi Case

George Magee, barber, Dale St., Columbia, Miss., says: "Kidney trouble about used me up and I kept getting worse steadily. The pains in the small of my back kept me from sleeping and I lost forty pounds in weight. My limbs swelled and the doctor said I couldn't live. When I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, I used some and they helped me right away. Three boxes removed the pain and soreness and fixed me up in good shape. I have had little trouble since."

Gentlemen:—I beg to submit my report for the month of June as required by law, I inspected the county jail and found it in good condition. I visited the poor-house and found the same to be in good condition with the exception of the wells, one of which should have the inner curbing completed.

All the doctors have reported births and deaths except the following:—Dr. J. J. DuBose, Stanton, Ala., and Dr. A. M. Wooley Jemison, Ala. All midwives have reported.

The vital statistics are as follows:—Births, White 56 Colored 7 Total 63. Deaths, White 15 Colored 5 Total 20.

There has been several cases of typhoid fever reported during the month, most of which seems to have been in Beat 9. The county nurse, Miss Harlan, was detailed to inspect those cases in that vicinity, and reports that proper precaution were not being taken.

Free Springs

The farmers are all busy, laying by their crops. With the exception of our corn needing rain, the farms in this vicinity are reasonably good.

Lumon Brantley, who just returned home from the infirmary at Birmingham a few days ago, is improving nicely.

The all-day singing here Sunday was a great success. Everybody seemed to enjoy it fine. We enjoyed the presence of a good class and a house full of listeners. We especially thank the boys for the unusual thing, that nobody was here drunk; we are sure that drinking whiskey was left entirely out. Several visitors were here from Montevallo, Rondolph, Mars Hill, Pleasant Grove, Shady Grove and other places. We were glad to have them with us.

The singing school, taught by Prof. C. N. Oden, will begin on July 31, and continue twenty days. We are expecting a good school; and we want every one to attend, who can do so conveniently. Board can be obtained reasonably.

A Well Wisher.

Teacher's Examination

The next state examination for teachers will be held at Clanton Court house, beginning at 10 a. m. on the third Monday in July, 1914 All applicants should be present by 9 a. m. for registration except those who intend to file a Second grade and take for First grade, and they must be present by noon Tuesday.

CHILTON COUNTY SINGING CONVENTION

The Chilton County Singing Convention as before annouced met with Chestnut Creek church at Coopers July 4 and 5 the following program was rendered.

9:30 Called to order by President with song. Devotional exercises by R. T. Grant. The importance of vocal music was very ably discussed by M. C. Crumpton who showed its importance both physically and morally. He said if we would get up in the morning with a song on our mind and sing it and continue singing throught the day we would be cheerful and happy and the lungs would be expanded we would develop a strong physical body. But he said the greatest importance of vocal music will be realized only when we reach the Pearly Gates and hear the angels singing. The importance of more sight singing and ear training being taught was very ably discussed by Prof. H. M. Eagle; no one can describe this great subject better than he did, as sight singing and ear training goes hand in hand. He said we must see with our ears and hear with our eyes to become a good singer. Besides these interesting subjects we had some of the best singing we have ever had in Chilton county since I have been a member of the convention. The whole seat room was all the time filled with good singers and the house was crowded with listeners all the time for both days which has never been done before. Resolution committee consistin of A. H. Glasscock R. A. Smith and F. I. Popwell reported:

1st We desire to thank the good people of Chestnut Creek and Cooper communities for the hospitality and kindness shown us during the 1914 session of Chilton conty singing convention, and especially do we wish to thank the people for providing water for the convention.

2nd We wish to thank the visiting singers for their help and co-operation during this meeting and extend to them a most hearty invitation to attend other sessions of the Chilton Singing convention,

3rd We believe this to be the best session of the convention that were ever held and ask the prayers of the convention that Gods richest blessings may rest upon us in our future efforts.

After the above resolutions were passed the President directed "Abide with me" and the convention was dismissed by Chaplain.

F. Iven Popwell, Secretary.

THE UNION-BANNER

Published Every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton County, Alabama.

UNION PUBLISHING CO.

W. M. WYATT, Editor.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.00.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

We view with interest the steady progress that is being made in the construction of Clanton's waterworks system, and will hail the day when same is put into operation.

Crops in Chilton county are badly damaged by lack of rain. Old corn is almost ruined, and cotton is suffering severely. Gardens and truck are generally a complete failure.

Wilson still hopes for peace in Mexico, even after the mediators have given it up as a hopeless job. Huerta and all of the revolutionists don't believe it posible also. But nobody can convince Wilson. Neither can you convince a mule.—Mobile Tribune.

The Republicans of Shelby county last Saturday endorsed the Bull Moose candidates in that county, intending thereby to eliminate all hopes of Democratic majority. Such a condition practically exists in this county, only it has not been so expressed. The Repablicans of Chilton had rather see the Bull Moose ticket elected than the Democrats.

Mr. J. N. Dennis informs us that from a five acre plat of land he has just harvested 11 1-2 bushels of wheat, 295 bushels of oats, and baled 11,000 pounds of straw. Although Mr. Dennis has to give his time to a county office, he has enough spare moments to demonstrate his ability as a farmer, which taken from the above data, surely is excellent.

There has recently been more or less discussion regarding the financial condition of Chilton county. Speaking of this matter, we would invite your attention to the report of the county treasurer, which we are publishing this week. It is in plain figures, and conveys a correct impression of conditions as they actually are.

The new executive committee of the Progressive party, which was elected Apr. 21, is called to nave a conference on Aug 1, at Clanton and oiganize for the purpose of taking charge of the affairs of the party. A Chairman and Secretary are to be chosen, and general plans launced for the coming campaign. Two members from each precinct were elected and all are urgently requested to be present and get in the harness from the start.

If our county must borrow money at all, let it be after the people have signified their approval by a vote to that effect. A secondary consideration is the method to be employed in obtairing the money. But if the people in the first place are to say whether or not we shall borrow money, that will end it. It will not give anybody any trouble to say how the money shall be secured then; our voters if given a chance, will clear the atmosphere by a stamp of disapproval on the whole affair.

Every indication points to a successful observance of Good Roads Days, August 14—15th. The press of the State are widely advertising these days. President John Craft of the Alabama Good Roads Association has sent out a special appeal to the good roads advocates and the various county good roads association urging them to observe these days. Gov. O'Neal has issued a proclamation calling upon the probate judges and the road officials to work the roads. The Courts of County Commissioners and Boards of Reyenue in the various counties have passed resolutions endorsing these days and in many of the counties they have issued orders that every male citizen, who is subject to road duty to work the roads on these days.

The Alabama Press Association, the Alabama Rural Letter Carriers Association and the Alabama Farmer's Union have all passed strong resolutions commending these days and urging the people to co-operate in making Good Roads Day a success. Every mail brings letters to Mr. J. A. Rountree, Secretary of the Association, from good roads advocates and road officials stating that they are heartily in accord with the movement and they will observe these days in their respective counties. It is to be hoped that this year 100,000 citizens will do volunteer work on the roads of Alabama

The Tennessee Press Association, in recent session at Memphis, passed a resolution calling upon Congress to adjourn and give business a chance. Whereupon the Lawrenceburg (Tenn.) Union remarks:

If the association had added, "Also repeal, before adjournment, the Tariff and Currency laws enacted," the editors would have voiced the sentiment of these business concerns.

The idea is good. If press associations generally and, newspaper editors as well, would unite in urging, first, repeal, and then adjournment, the "psychological" effect would be emphatic. Nothing more effective could be devised to help business.—American Economist.

Notice the call this week for a Progressive mass meeting at Clanton on August 1st. This should attract the attention of every voter in the county. It is a wide open meeting, and all white voters who believe in the principles of the Progressive party, and who are in favor of popular government as opposed to ring rule and machine politics are invited to participate. It is probable that some speaker prominent among the state leaders of the party will be present to address the assembly.

Remember it is to be August 1st and don't fail to come. The business of the meeting is to select delegates to the state convention in Birmingham Auguit 5th.

NOT WISE TO TAKE CALOMEL.

Dodson's Liver Tone is just as sure in rsalts and always safe, pleasant in taste and has no bad after-effects. As a remedy for a torpid liver calomel has more than met its match in Dodson's Liver Tone. This medicine does not roughly force the liver on to perform its work. It acts gently but surely.

Calomel depends for its power upon exciting the liver to do more work, and often the liver is too weak to stand such treatment, and after taking calomel you are as a result sometimes worse off than before.

Dodson's Liver Tone cannot cause any of the dangerous effects that often follow the use of calomel. It is entirely vegetable and pleasant to the trste and is suitable for children and grown people.

Get a large bottle for fifty cents at Alred Drug Co., under the guarantee that if it doesn't satisfy you that it perfectly takes the place of calomel you will be given your money back with a smile right at the store where you bought Dodson's medicine.

Rheumatic Throat Is Common Trouble

Should Be Treated in Blood To Prevent Recurrence.

There are successful gargles that stop soreness in the throat, but to prevent their incessant return, the blood must be put in order. The best remedy is S. S. S., as it influences all the functions of the body to neutralize the irritants or waste products and to stimulate their excretion through the proper channels.

Rheumatic sore throat is a dangerous indication, as it means that the blood is loaded with more uric acid than the kidneys can excrete, and may thus lead to serious general disturbance.

The action of S. S. S. stimulates cellular activity. It prevents the accumulation of irritants in local spots. It enables the arteries to supply quickly the new red blood to replace worn-out tissue.

For this reason uric acid that finds the throat an easy prey to its breaking-down influence, is scattered and eliminated. In other words, S. S. S. prevents chronic conditions by enabling all the mucous linings of the body to secrete healthy mucus. Its influence is shown in a marked improvement of the bronchial tubes, whereby the huskiness of voice with thick, grayish expectorations is overcome. S. S. S., well diluted with water, means a blood bath, since it is welcome to any stomach and at once gets into the blood.

S. S. S. is free of all minerals and contains ingredients wonderfully conducive to well-balanced health.

You can get it at any drug store, but do not accept anything else. There is danger in substitutes. S. S. S. is prepared only by The Swift Specific Co., 528 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Our Medical Dept. will give you free instruction by mail on any subject of blood disorders. Write today.

Corinth

The singing at Corinth on last Sunday, the 12th of July was a source of entertainment to all present. The singing was fine; and the general conduct on the church ground was all that could be expected.

The refreshments were plentious and well enjoyed.

The house was called to order at 9:00 o'clorck by W. B. Jones, after which S. M. Yates was elected Chairman, and H. Connell, E. L. Jones, and T. L Robinson, were elected as Arranging Committee. The program which the Committee arranged was splendid. Each leader filled his time with music that could not have been surpassed.

We are sure that every one present would say that, that day was one well spent.

SYNOPSIS.

Challis Wrandall is found murdered in a road house near New York. Mrs. Wrandall is summoned from the city and identifies the body. A young woman who accompanied Wrandall to the inn and subsequently disappeared, is suspected. Mrs. Wrandall starts back for New York in an auto during a blinding snow storm. On the way she meets a young woman in the road who proves to be the woman who killed Wrandall. Feeling that the girl had done her a service in ridding her of the man who though she loved him deeply, had caused her great sorrow, Mrs. Wrandall determines to shield her and takes her to her own home. Mrs. Wrandall hears the story of Hetty Castleton's life, except that portion that relates to Wrandall. This and the story of the tragedy she forbids the girl ever to tell. She offers Hetty a home, friendship and security from peril on account of the tragedy. Sara Wrandall and Hetty return to New York after an absence of a year in Europe. Leslie Wrandall, brother of Challis, becomes greatly interested in Hetty. Sara sees in Leslie's infatuation possibility for revenge on the Wrandalls and reparation for the wrongs she suffered at the hands of Challis Wrandall by marrying his murderess into the family. Leslie, in company with his friend Brandon Booth, an artist, visits Sara at her country place. Leslie confesses to Sara that he is madly in love with Hetty. Sara arranges with Booth to paint a picture of Hetty. Booth has a haunting feeling that he has seen Hetty before. Looking through a portfolio of pictures by an unknown English artist he finds one of Hetty. He speaks to her about it. Hetty declares it must be a picture of Hetty Glynn, an English actress, who resembles her very much. Much to his chagrin Leslie is refused by Hetty. Booth and Hetty confess their love for each other, but the latter declares that she can never marry as there is an insurmountable barrier in the way. Hetty admits to Sara that she loves Booth. Sara declares that Hetty must marry Leslie, who must be made to pay his brother's debt to the girl. Hetty again attempts to tell the real story of the tragedy and Sara threatens to strangle her if she says a word. Sara insults Hetty by revealing that all this time she has believed Hetty to have sinned in her relations with Challis Wrandall. Later she realizes that Hetty is innocent. Leslie again proposes to Hetty and is rejected. Hetty prepares to leave Sara, declaring that after what has happened she can remain no longer. Hetty starts for Europe. At sea she receives a message from Booth that he has started on a faster steamer and will be waiting for her on the other side. Booth meets her and accompanies her to London. In an attempt to escape from him Hetty starts for Paris, but finds Booth on the same boat. She persists in her refusal to tell him the secret which keeps them apart. She declares that Sara alone can tell him. Booth leaves for America determined to get the story from Sara.

CHAPTER XVI.—Continued.

The weeks slipped by. He was with her almost daily. Other people came to her house, some for rather protracted visits, others in quest of pillage at the nightly bridge table, but he was seldom missing. There were times when he thought he detected a tendency to waver, but each cunning attempt on his part to encourage the impulse invariably brought a certain mocking light into her eyes and he veered off in defeat. Something kept telling him, however, that the hour was bound to come when she would falter in her resolution; when frankness would meet frankness, and the the veil be lifted.

There were no letters from Hetty, no word of any description. If Sara knew anything of the girl's movements she did not take Booth into her confidence.

Leslie Wrandall went abroad in August, ostensibly to attend the aviation meets in France and England. His mother and sister sailed in September, but not before the entire colony of which they were a part had begun to discuss Sara and Booth with a relish that was obviously distasteful to the Wrandalls.

Where there is smoke there is fire, said all the gossips, and forthwith proceeded to carry faggots.

A week or so before sailing, Mrs. Redmond Wrandall had Booth in for dinner. I think she said en famille. At any rate, Sara was not asked, which is proof enough that she was bent on making it a family affair.

Good Heavens, Viv!" He Cried, Uncomfortably.

After dinner, Booth sat in the screened upper balcony with Vivian. He liked her. She was a keen-witted, plain-spoken young woman, with few false ideals and no subtlety. She was less snobbish than arrogant. Of all the Wrandalls, she was the least self-centered. Leslie never quite understood her for the paradoxical reason that she thoroughly understood him.

"You know, Brandon," she said, after a long silence between them, "they've been setting my cap for you for a long, long time." She blew a thin stream of cigarette smoke toward the moon.

He started. It was a bolt from a clear sky. "The deuce!"

"Yes," she went on in the most casual tone, "mother's had her heart set on it for months. You were supposed to be mine at first sight, I believe. Please don't look so uneasy. I'm not going to propose to you." She laughed her little ironic laugh.

"So that is the way things stood, eh?" he said, still a little amazed by her candor.

"Yes. And what is more to the point, I am quite sure I should have said yes if you had asked me. Sounds odd, doesn't it? Rather amusing, too, being able to discuss it so unreservedly, isn't it?"

"Good heavens, Viv!" he cried uncomfortably. "I—I had no idea you cared—"

"Cared!" she cried, as he paused. "I don't care two pins for you in that way. But I would have married you, just the same, because you are worth marrying. I'd very much rather have you for a husband than any man I know, but as for loving you! Pooh! I'd love you in just the way mother loves father, and I wouldn't have been a bit more trouble to you than she is to him."

"Gad, you don't mind what you say!"

"Failing to nab you, Brandy, I dare say I'll have to come down to a duke or, who knows? maybe a mere prince. It isn't very enterprising, is it? And certainly it isn't a gay prospect. Really, I had hoped you would have me. I flatter myself, I suppose, but, honestly now, we would have made a rather nice looking couple, wouldn't we?"

"You flatter me," he said.

"But," she resumed, calmly exhaling, "you very foolishly fell in love with some one else, and it wasn't necessary for me to pretend that I was in love with you—which I should have done, believe me, if you had given me the chance. You fell in love, first with Hetty Castleton."

"First?" he cried, frowning.

"And now you are heels over head in love with my beautiful sister-in-law. Which all goes to prove that I would have made just the kind of wife you need, considering your tendency to fluctuate. But how dreadful it would have been for a sentimental, loving girl like Hetty!"

He sat bolt upright and stared hard at her.

"See here, Viv, what the dickens are you driving at? I'm not in love with Sara—not in the least—and—" He checked himself sharply. "What an ass I am! You're guying me."

"In any event, I am right about Hetty," she said, leaning forward, her manner quite serious.

"If it will ease you mind," he said stiffly, "I plead guilty with all my heart."

She favored him with a slight frown of annoyance.

"And you deny the fluctuating charge?"

"Most positively. I can afford to be honest with you, Viv. You are a corker. I love Hetty Castleton with all my soul."

She leaned back in her chair. "Then why don't you dignify your soul by being honest with her?"

"What do you mean?"

For a half-minute she was silent. "Are you and I of the same stripe, after all? Would you marry Sara without loving her, as I would have done by you? It doesn't seem like you, Brandon."

"Good heaven, I'm not going to marry Sara!" he blurted out. "It's never entered my head."

"Perhaps it has entered hers."

"Nonsense! She isn't going to marry anybody. And she knows how I feel toward Hetty. If it came to the point where I decided to marry without love, 'pon my soul, Viv, I believe I'd pick you out as the victim."

"Wonderful combination!" she said with a frank laugh. "The quintessence of 'no love lost.' But to resume! Do you know that people are saying you are to be married before the winter is over?"

"Let 'em say it," he said gruffly.

"Oh, well,' she said, dispatching it all with a gesture, "if that's the way you feel about it, there's no more to be said."

He was ashamed. "I beg your pardon, I shouldn't have said that."

"You see," she went on, reverting to the original topic, "people who know Sara are likely to credit her with motives you appear to be totally ignorant of. She set her heart on my brother Challis, when she was a great deal younger than she is now, and she got him. If age and experience count for anything, how capable she must be by this time."

He was too wise to venture an opinion. "I assure you she has no designs on me."

"Perhaps not. But I fancy that even you could not escape as St. Anthony did. She is most alluring."

"You don't like her."

"Obviously. And yet I don't dislike her. She has the virtue of consistency, if one may use the expression. She loved my brother. Leslie says she should have hated him. We have tried to like her. I think I have come nearer to it than any of the others, not excepting Leslie, who has always been her champion. I suppose you know that he was your rival at one time."

"He mentioned it," said Booth drily.

"I should have been very much disappointed in her if she had accepted him,"

"Indeed?"

"I sometimes wonder if Sara spiked Leslie's guns for him."

"I can tell you something you don't know, Vivian," said he. "Sara was rather keen about making a match there."

Vivian's smile was slow but triumphant. "That is just what I thought. There you are! Doesn't that explain Sara?"

"In a measure, yes. But, you see, it developed that Hetty cared for some one else, and that put a stop to everything."

"Am I to take it that you are the some one else?"

"Yes," he said soberly.

"Then, may I ask why she went away so suddenly?"

"You may ask, but I can't answer."

"Do you want my opinion? She

Her Eyes Were Moody, Her Voice Rather Lifeless.

went away because Sara, failing in her plan to marry her off to Leslie, decided that it would be fatal to a certain project of her own if she remained on the field of action. Do I make myself clear?"

"Oh, you are away off in your conclusions, Viv."

"Time will tell," was here cabalistic rejoinder.

Her father appeared on the lawn below and called up to them.

"You are wanted at the telephone, Brandon. I've just been talking to Sara."

"Did she call you up, father?" asked Vivian, leaning over the rail.

"Yes. About nothing in particular, however."

She turned upon Booth with a mocking smile. He felt the color rush to his face, and was angry with himself.

He went to the telephone. Almost her first words were these:

"What has Vivian been telling you about me, Brandon?"

He actually gasped. "Good heavens, Sara!"

He heard her low laugh. "So she has been saying things, has she?" she asked. "I thought so. I've had it in my bones tonight."

He was at a loss for words. It was positively uncanny. As he stood there, trying to think of a trivial remark, her laugh came to him again over the wire, followed by a drawling "good night," and then the soughing of the wind over the "open" wire.

The next day he called her up on the telephone quite early. He knew her habits. She would be abroad in her gardens by eight o'clock. He remembered well that Leslie, in commenting on her absurdly early hours, had once said that her "early bird" habit was hereditary: she got it from Sebastian.

"What put it into your head, Sara, that Vivian was saying anything unpleasant about you last night?"

"Magic," she replied succinctly.

"Rubbish!"

"I have a magic tapestry that transports me, hither and thither, and by night I always carry Aladdin's lamp. So, you see, I see and hear everything"

"Be sensible."

"Very well. I will be sensible. If you intend to be influenced by what Vivian or her mother said to you last night, I think you'd be wise to avoid me from this time on."

Prepared though he was, he blinked his eyes and said something she didn't quite catch.

She went on: "Moreover, in addition to my attainments in the black art, I am quite as clever as Mr. Sherlock Holmes in some respects. I really do some splendid deducing. In the first place, you were asked there and I was not. Why? Because I was to be discussed. You see—"

"Marvelous!" he interrupted loudly.

"You were to be told that I have cruel designs upon you."

"Go on, please."

"And all that sort of thing," she said sweepingly, and he could almost see the inclusive gesture with her free hand. He laughed but still marveled at the shrewdness of her perceptions.

"I'll come over this afternoon and show you wherein you are wrong," he began, but she interrupted him with a laugh.

"I am starting for the city before noon, by motor, to be gone at least a fortnight."

"What! This is the first I've heard of it."

Again she laughed. "To be perfectly frank with you, I hadn't heard of it myself until just now. I think I shall go down to the Homestead with the Carrolls."

"Hot Springs?"

"Virginia," she added explicitly.

"I say, Sara, what does all this mean? You—"

"And if you should follow me there, Vivian's estimate of us will not be so far out of the way as we'd like to make it."

True to her word, she was gone when he drove over later on in the day. Somehow, he experienced a queer feeling of relief. Not that he was oppressed by the rather vivacious opinions of Vivian and her ilk, but because something told him that Sara was wavering in her determination to withhold the secret from him and fled for perfectly obvious reasons.

He had two commissions among the rich summer colonists. One, a full length portrait of young Beardsley in shooting togs, was nearly finished. The other was to be a half-length of Mrs. Ravenscroft, who wanted one just like Hetty Castleton's, except for the eyes, which she admitted would have to be different. Nothing was said of the seventeen years' difference in their ages. Vivian had put off posing until Lent.

The Wrandalls departed for Scotland, and other friends of his began to desert the country for the city. The fortnight passed and another week besides. Mrs. Ravenscroft decided to go to Europe when the picture was half-finished.

"You can finish it when I come back in December, Mr. Booth," she said. "I'll have several new gowns to choose from, too."

"I shall be busy all winter, Mrs. Ravenscroft," he said coldly.

"How annoying," she said calmly, and that was the end of it all. She had made the unpleasant discovery that it wasn't going to be in the least like Hetty Castleton's, so why bother about it?

Booth waited until Sara came out to superintend the closing of her house for the winter. He called at Southlook on the day of her arrival. He was struck at once by the curious change in her appearance and manner. There was something bleak and desolate in the vividly brilliant face: the tired, wistful, harassed look of one who has begun to quail and yet fights on.

"Will you go out with me tomorrow, Brandon, for an all-day trip in the car?" she asked, as they stood together before the open fireplace on this late November afternoon. Her eyes were moody, her voice rather lifeless.

"Certainly," he said, watching her closely. Was the break about to come?

"I will stop for you at nine." After a short pause, she looked up and said: "I suppose you would like to know where I am taking you."

"It doesn't matter, Sara."

"I want you to go with me to Burton's inn."

"Burton's inn."

"That is the place where my husband was killed," she said, quite steadily.

He started. "Oh! But—do you think it best, Sara, to open old wounds by—"

"I have thought it all out, Brandon. I want to go there—just once. I want to go into that room again."

CHAPTER XVII.

Once More at Burton's Inn.

Again Sara Wrandall found herself in that never-to-be-forgotten room at Burton's inn. On that grim night in March she had entered without fear or trembling because she knew what was there. Now she quaked with a mighty chill of terror, for she knew not what was there in the quiet, now sequestered room. Burton had told them on their arrival after a long drive across country that patrons of the inn invariably asked which room it was that had been the scene of the tragedy, and, on finding out, refused point-blank to occupy it. In consequence he had been obliged to transform it into a sort of store and baggage room.

Sara stood in the middle of the murky room, for the shutters had long been closed to the light of day, and looked about her in awe at the heterogeneous mass of boxes, trunks, bundles and rubbish, scattered over the floor without care or system. She had closed the door behind her and was quite alone. Light sneaked in through the cracks in the shutters, but so meagerly that it only served to increase the gloom. A dismantled bedstead stood heaped up in the corner. She did not have to be told what bed it was. The mattress was there too, rolled up and tied with a thick garden rope. She knew there were dull, ugly blood stains upon it. Why the thrifty Burton had persevered in keeping this useless article of furniture, she could only surmise. Perhaps it was held as an inducement to the morbidly curious who always seek out the gruesome and gloat even as they shudder.

For a long time she stood immovable just inside the door, recalling the horrid picture of another day. She tried to imagine the scene that had been enacted there with gentle, lovable Hetty Glynn and her whilom husband as the principal characters. The girl had told the whole story of that ugly night. Sara tried to see it as it actually had transpired. For months this present enterprise had been in her mind: the desire to see the place again, to go there with old impressions which she could leave behind when ready to emerge in a new frame of mind. It was true that she meant to shake off the shackles of a horrid dream, to purge herself of the last vestige of bitterness, to cleanse her mind of certain thoughts and memories.

Downstairs Booth waited for her. He heard the story of the tragedy from the innkeeper, who crossly maintained that his business had been ruined. Booth was vaguely impressed, he knew not why, by Burton's description of the missing woman. "I'd say she was about the size of Mrs. Wrandall herself, and much the same figger," he said, as he had said a thousand times before. "My wife noticed it the minute she saw Mrs. Wrandall. Same height and everything."

A bell rang sharply and Burton glanced over his shoulder at the indicator on the wall behind the desk. He gave a great start and his jaw sagged.

"Great Scott!" he gasped. A curious grayness stole over his face. "It's—it's the bell in that very room. My soul, what can—"

"Mrs. Wrandall is up there, isn't she?" demanded Booth.

"It ain't rung since the night he pushed the button for— Oh, gee! You're right. She is up there. My, what a scare it gave me." He wiped his brow. Turning to a boy, he commanded him to answer the bell. The boy went slowly, and as he went he removed his hands from his pockets. He came back an instant later, more swiftly than he went, with the word that "the lady up there" wanted Mr. Booth to come upstairs.

She was waiting for him in the open doorway. A shaft of bright sunlight from a window at the end of the hall fell upon her. Her face was colorless, haggard. He paused for an instant to contrast her as she stood there in the pitiless light with the vivid creature he had put upon canvas so recently.

She beckoned to him and turned back into the room. He followed.

"This is the room, Brandon, where my husband met the death he deserved," she said quietly.

"Deserved? Good heavens, Sara, are you—"

"I want you to look about you and try to picture how this place looked on the night of the murder. You have a vivid imagination. None of this rubbish was here. Just a bed, a table and two chairs. There was a carpet on the floor. There were two people here, a man and a woman. The woman had trusted the man. She trusted him until the hour in which he died. Then she found him out. She had come to this place, believing it was to be her wedding night. She found no minister here. The man laughed at her and scoffed. Then she knew. In horror, shame, desperation she tried to break away from him. He was strong. She was a good woman; a virtuous, honorable woman. She saved herself."

He Dropped Suddenly Upon the Trunk.

He was staring at her with dilated eyes. Slowly the truth was being borne in upon him.

"The woman was—Hetty?" came hoarsely from his stiffening lips. "My God, Sara!"

She came close to him and spoke in a half-whisper. "Now you know the secret. Is it safe with you?"

He opened his lips to speak, but no words came forth. Paralysis seemed to have gripped not only his throat but his senses. He reeled. She grasped his arm in a tense, fierce way, and whispered:

"Be careful! No one must hear what we are saying." She shot a glance down the deserted hall. "No one is near. I made sure of that. Don't speak! Think first—think well, Brandon Booth. It is what you have been seeking for months—the truth. You share the secret with us now. Again I ask, is it safe with you?"

"My God!" he muttered again, and passed his hand over his eyes. His brow was wet. He looked at his fingers dumbly as if expecting to find them covered with blood.

"Is it safe with you?" for the third time.

"Safe? Safe?" he whispered, following her example without knowing that he did so. "I—I can't believe you, Sara. It can't be true."

"It is true."

"You have known—all this time?"

"From that night when I stood where we are standing now."

"And—and—she?"

"I had never seen her until that night. I saved her."

He dropped suddenly upon the trunk that stood behind him, and buried his face in his hands. For a long time she stood over him, her interest divided between him and the hall, wherein lay their present peril.

"Come," she said at last. "Pull yourself together. We must leave this place. If you are not careful they will suspect something downstairs."

He looked up with haggard eyes, studying her face with curious intentness.

"What manner of woman are you, Sara?" he questioned, slowly, wonderingly.

"I have just discovered that I am very much like other women, after all," she said. "For awhile I thought I was different, that I was stronger than my sex. But I am just as weak, just as much to be pitied, just as much to be scorned as any one of my sisters. I have spoiled a great act by stooping to do a mean one. God will bear witness that my thoughts were noble at the outset; my heart was soft. But come! There is much more to tell that cannot be told here. You shall know everything."

They went downstairs and out into the crisp autumn air. She gave directions to her chauffeur. They were to traverse for some distance the same road she had taken on that ill-fated night a year and a half before. In course of time the motor approached a well-remembered railway crossing.

"Slow down, Cole," she said. "This is a mean place—a very mean place." Turning to Booth, who had been sitting grim and silent beside her for miles, she said, lowering her voice: "I remember that crossing yonder. There is a sharp curve beyond. This is the place. Midway between the two crossings, I should say. Please remember this part of the road, Brandon, when I come to the telling of that night's ride to town. Try to picture this spot—this smooth, straight road as it might be on a dark, freezing night in the very thick of a screaming blizzard, with all the world abed save—two women."

In his mind he began to draw the picture, and to place the two women in the center of it, without knowing the circumstances. There was something fascinating in the study he was making, something gruesome and full of sinister possibilities for the hand of a virile painter. He wondered how near his imagination was to placing the central figures in the picture as they actually appeared on that secret night.

At sunset they went together to the little pavilion at the end of the pier which extended far out into the sound. Here they were safe from the ears of eavesdroppers. The boats had been stowed away for the winter. The wind that blew through the open pavilion, now shorn of all its comforts and luxuries, was cold, raw and repelling. No one would disturb them here.

With her face set toward the sinking east, she leaned against one of the thick posts, and in a dull, emotionless voice, laid bare the whole story of that dreadful night and the days that followed. She spared no details, she spared not herself in the narration.

Humility.

We tell this story because it seems to us a beautiful story that ought to be told. It concerns General Bell and the opening of the gigantic amphitheater in Manila that follows the lines of the land. The general was much praised for having built this imposing and enormous structure. He pointed to the savage Igorrotes that were standing about, trying to understand what was going on. "I did not build it," he said. "God Almighty built it, but if you want to take building in a different sense, to consider what we did, using the great plans of nature, those poor fellows built it."—Harper's Weekly.

Not Properly Equipped.

Little Gardner, whose big brother had been presented with a bicycle, asked his mother if he could not have one, too. "You're not old enough," she replied, "but I will buy you a velocipede." "I can't use a velocipde on these rough roads," he exclaimed. "The motor cars use the rough roads every day." The youngster thought for a moment, then with a look of scorn remarked: "Do you think I am filled with gasoline?"—New York Times.

DON'T SUFFER WITH ITCHING

My, what relief!—The moment resinol ointment touches any itching skin, the itching stops and healing begins. With the aid of resinol soap, it quickly removes all trace of eczema, rash, tetter, ringworm, pimples or other ugly, tormenting eruption, and leaves the skin clear and healthy. It is equally effective for sunburn, insect bites, sores, boils, burns, red, rough hands, dandruff and falling hair.

You need never hesitate to use resinol. It is a doctor's prescription that has been used by other physicians for the past 19 years in the treatment of most sorts of skin affections. Unlike many other remedies, it contains absolutely nothing that could injure the tenderest skin. Resinol ointment and resinol soap are sold by all druggists. Look out for worthless imitations.—Adv.

Marriage Causes False Fire Alarm.

Seven minutes of blasts from the whistle of the Passaic Metalware company, in honor of the marriage of the daughter of the superintendent, recently turned out five volunteer fire departments. The fog made the whistle audible in Rutherford, Nutley, Belleville, Garfield and Clifton and the firemen rushed to headquarters at the alarm.

It took half an hour to determine where the whistling came from. The wedding which caused the commotion united Miss Sallie Karp, 217 Brook avenue, Passaic, to Michael F. Bernan.—New York Mail.

Bless the Ladies.

"Our congressional committee heard 30 ladies in two hours. That many men could have kept us listening for several days."

"That shows that women can transact public business. But how did they manage to crowd 30 speeches into two hours?"

"Oh, they spoke three and four at a time."—Kansas City Journal.

WRONG BREAKFAST.
Change Gave Rugged Health.

Many persons think that for strength, they must begin the day with a breakfast of meat and other heavy foods. This is a mistake as anyone can easily discover for himself.

A W. Va. carpenter's experience may benefit others. He writes:

"I used to be a very heavy breakfast eater but finally indigestion caused me such distress, I became afraid to eat anything.

"My wife suggested a trial of Grape-Nuts and as I had to eat something or starve, I concluded to take her advice. She fixed me up a dish and I remarked at the time that the quality was all right, but the quantity was too small—I wanted a saucerful.

"But she said a small amount of Grape-Nuts went a long way and that I must eat it according to directions. So I started in with Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft boiled eggs and some crisp toast for breakfast.

"I cut out meats and a lot of other stuff I had been used to eating all my life and was gratified to see that I was getting better right along. I concluded I had struck the right thing and stuck to it. I had not only been eating improper food, but too much.

"I was working at the carpenter's trade at that time and thought that unless I had a hearty breakfast with plenty of meat, I would play out before dinner. But after a few days of my "new breakfast" I found I could do more work, felt better in every way, and now I am not bothered with indigestion."

WHY BUSINESS HALTS

Men of Affairs Are Plagued With Uncertainty.

Democratic Legislation Directly Responsible for the Hard Times That Are Universal — People Are Asking "How Long?"

Business never is, but always to be, blessed. Which fact is making business tired.

First, the tariff. Business was assured that everything would be all right as soon as revision of the Payne law was out of the way. It would then have no difficulty in adjusting itself to the new schedule. So business waited, hoping for the best. But the revision did not produce the promised effect. Business did not feel a spur to renewed activity.

Second, the currency. Business was assured that everything would be all right as soon as a new currency law was on the books. Then nothing could prevent a return of confidence, and everything would be in full swing again. So business, as it could do no other, continued to wait. But the new currency law did not produce the promised effect. In fact, there is much uneasiness about how it is going to work.

Third, the trusts. Business must not expect too much, if anything, before additional regulation of the trusts had been attended to. That had been promised at Baltimore, and the promise must be redeemed. Business must remember that Rome was not built in a day. Republican misrule had continued for sixteen years running, and the fruits were with us. Give the democracy a little time. Heavens above! After trust legislation had been added to tariff and to currency legislation nothing could longer hinder a return of prosperity.

Remembering its two disappointments, business is asking itself about the proper course if it meets with another disappointment. The new trust regulation may not produce what is being promised in its name. If it should not; if the great trilogy—tariff revision, currency revision, and additional trust regulation—should not light the fires in the darkened furnaces, start the still wheels to turning again, and guide pay envelopes into tens of thousands of empty pockets, what then? Upon what other measure must business wait? And how long will it be before the sun shines again, and business be able to "rake the meadows, sweet with hay?"

Except that the matter is so momentous and far-reaching, one might drop into slang and exclaim, "It is to laugh!" But what affects business calamitously is no laughing matter, however absurd it makes political prophets and certain legislators appear. The interests of business are the interests of the whole people.

Business and the President.

In the name of common sense and fair play, why not a combination of business interests? What can be more appropriate, more logical, more useful? Must business alone be silent and supine when business interests are involved in legislation?

Why should not the president himself pay close heed to this business dissent from his plans? Why should he threaten to stay all summer in Washington to fight down business opposition and force his program through despite the hostility of the business world? Does he mean it to be understood that he is at war with business and determined to crush it at any cost?—New York Sun.

The War on Incomes.

Now that the income tax, which was to yield between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 this year, is giving promise of little more than $30,000,000, Secretary McAdoo is talking about haling the rich men into court and putting them on the stand to explain under oath why their incomes are not so large as the administration believed they were. He had better pause before he embarks on any such rash course, for there are thousands of malefactors of great wealth who would be delighted to explain in public just how many hundred thousand dollars the policy of meddling with business has cost them in the last twelve months.—Public Ledger.

Looking to the Future.

Following Mr. Wilson's smug assertion that business depression is purely psychological a bill has been introduced to create a department of psychology. If it can be held up a matter of three years it would offer an opportunity to place an ex-president who is professorially inclined.

Might as Well Claim It.

Perhaps that shrinkage in income tax returns reported by Son-in-Law McAdoo is also merely "psychological."—New York Herald.

Political Opportunity.

The more the political situation is analyzed the more interesting it becomes. The approaching campaign will have as many angles as a well-developed story. The Democrats are anxious to get out upon the stump and try to straighten out some of the crooked lines. What a pity that they are kept to put more shackles upon business! If the Republicans have any political sense they will discuss the anti-trust bills ad infinitum and keep congress in session until the leaves begin to turn.

Real Tragedy of the Stage.

A beautiful actress, Fraulein Darmer, was killed by accident recently, while playing at the Theater of Varieties at Berne, Switzerland. The last act of the comedy. "The Pride of the Third Company," was coming to an end when Fraulein Darmer fell through a defective stage trap to a distance of six feet and fractured her skull. The actress was carried unconscious to her room and a doctor was in prompt attendance, but the case was beyond his help, and as the curtain fell on the comedy on the stage the girl died. Neither the members of the company who took the final "call" nor the public, who wondered why the actress did not appear, had the slightest idea of the tragedy that had occurred behind the scenes.

HOW HE TURNED THE TRICK

After This, Mr. Mordicai Hammerfest Must Be Credited With Knowing a Thing or Two.

Mrs. Mordecai Hammerfest turned pale as her husband entered the dining-room for breakfast.

"Mordy!" she gasped. "Do you—don't you feel well?"

"Perfectly," he replied in seeming surprise.

"But—but, are you in your—your underduds!"

"Tell me something I don't know. Pass the butter, please," said Mr. Hammerfest.

She passed the butter, remarking nervously: "But, Mordy, dear, as you came in I saw you didn't have any shoes on."

"Well, what of it. Your hair is in curl papers, isn't it?"

"Why—y-yes."

"And you have on a wrapper, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Very well, then."

And he went on eating his breakfast in silence except when he asked her to pass the butter. Then he went upstairs and finished dressing, and the next morning and on succeeding mornings she reported for breakfast in regular clothes.

Sporting Instinct Aroused.

The street-corner orator had gathered around him a group of urchins. Why they listened so attentively he didn't understand; nor probably did they know themselves. Simply nothing doing. But the orator took full advantage of his opportunity and delivered an improving lecture on the value of kindness to dumb animals. At the end he sought for some illustration to point the moral and adorn the tale. It was there at hand. Across the way walked a lady, leading two little dogs in leash. The one was black and the other white. "Now," exclaimed the tub-thumper, "after what I have said, supposing those two dear little dogs were to start fighting, what would be the first thing you would do?" No answer came at first; but one little arab turned to look at the dogs critically and thoughtfully. "Well guv'nor," he answered, at last, "I fink I'd 'ave tuppence on the little black 'un!"

Suspicious.

"Too bad Jinx and his wife don't get along well together."

"Why, I always understood that they were an ideal couple."

"So did I, but they must have had a dreadful scrap before he started for work this morning."

"Did he have a black eye?"

"No, but he stopped in when we were on our way home and bought her a five-pound box of candy."

Ingenious Smuggling Device.

A museum of criminology has been founded in Paris by M. Charles Perchard, formerly chief of the police Anarchist brigade. Among its curious contents are a hollow wax baby which was used to smuggle brandy into Paris. A woman carried a baby into the city every day, but as it never grew any bigger the authorities examined it and discovered the fraud.

Not So Much to Blame.

"I didn't know you were so accomplished a linguist," he remarked as he glanced at the paper she was reading.

"I don't make any pretentions in that direction," she answered.

"But that is a Russian newspaper you have picked up."

"Why, so it is," she answered in surprise. "I thought it was a dialect story."

An Apposite Choice.

Bishop Evans Tyree at a dinner in Nashville was asked if he had any idea of preaching on the new fashions—the backless evening gown, slashed skirt and so forth.

"No," said the bishop; "such an idea has not occurred to me. If, however, I should preach on the new fashions I would assuredly choose my text from Revelation."

No Kick Coming From Mule.

"Is that your mule?" asked the man going fishing.

"Yassir," said the colored man, who was sitting on a log by the road.

"Does he kick?"

"'Deed, mistuh, he ain't got no cause to kick. He's gittin' his own way right along. I'm de one dat's havin' de worry an' difficulty."

FURNISHED BOND OF AMITY

Discomfited "Good Samaritan" the Unwilling Means of Bringing Rival Humorists Together.

Once upon a time two humorists dwelt in the same small town and both contributed to the Sunday Star. As was but natural, they became wildly jealous of each other, and when one would win a little more prominence than his fellow the other would have seven kinds of fits. "Your Pleasant Valley Items give me a pain!" quoth one. "Your prose rhymes make me ill!" retorted the other. As they were about to come to blows there appeared on the scene a Good Samaritan, and to him they appealed. "Which of us is the funnier?" they asked. "Neither!" was the prompt reply. "You are both as unfunny as wart hogs, and as tiresome as a trip across the Sahara!" Thereat they both set upon the gentleman from Samaria and beat him full sore, and dwelt together in amity forever after.

Moral: From this we should learn that while humorists delight in quarreling among themselves, they frequently resent criticism from outsiders.—Kansas City Star.

Modern Greek.

A stranger came into our office and graciously offered us some fruit which he said he purchased downstairs in the Greek grocery store. We asked him what Greek grocery, and he said the one right under us, in Holpos' place. We have been here some time and knew nobody of that name, and to satisfy our curiosity we went downstairs to have a look.

Sure enough, there was what did look like "Holpos" on the end of the awning, at least there were the letters "H Q L P O S" standing out in bold relief. We have learned since that it is an abbreviation used by the store which, when translated, means "Highest quality, lowest prices, our standard." To the average reader it's all Greek and would easily pass for a Hellenic name.—Quincy Ledger.

SCALY DANDRUFF ON HEAD

Shiner, Texas.—"I had dandruff so badly my head would itch and when I scratched it would hurt. My head was full of scaly dry dandruff and it became so thick that it scaled off and showed plainly. My head was almost white with it. It crusted and itched terribly. It got so bad I could hardly rest at night. My hair began to fall out, and it was lifeless.

"I tried a bottle of ——, but it did me little good. I saw an advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment so I sent for a sample. I applied the Cuticura Ointment to my scalp and frequently shampooed my head with the Cuticura Soap. After using one cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment my head was cured. Now I am free from dandruff and my hair is growing." (Signed) Miss Ida Ringhoffer, Mar. 28, 1914.

COULD NOT STAND ON FEET

Mrs. Baker So Weak—Could Not Do Her Work—Found Relief In Novel Way.

Adrian, Mich. — "I suffered terribly with female weakness and backache and got so weak that I could hardly do my work. When I washed my dishes I had to sit down and when I would sweep the floor I would get so weak that I would have to get a drink every few minutes, and before I did my dusting I would have to lie down. I got so poorly that my folks thought I was going into consumption. One day I found a piece of paper blowing around the yard and I picked it up and read it. It said 'Saved from the Grave,' and told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for women. I showed it to my husband and he said, 'Why don't you try it?' So I did, and after I had taken two bottles I felt better and I said to my husband, 'I don't need any more,' and he said 'You had better take it a little longer anyway.' So I took it for three months and got well and strong." —Mrs. ALONZO E. BAKER, 9 Tecumseh St., Adrian, Mich.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

HEALTH PAST FIFTY

Careful diet is of utmost importance to men and women past fifty years of age; it keeps up their strength, and the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion is a nourishing food, a curative medicine and a sustaining tonic to regulate the functions.

It contains the medicinal fats of pure cod liver oil and science proves that they furnish twice as much energy as other foods—then too, it creates pure blood, sharpens the appetite, relieves rheumatism, strengthens the body and alleviates the ailments due to declining years.

Scott's is free from wines, alcohol or harmful drugs. Beware of substitutes.

COURAGE

All mankind honors the courageous individual. The world pays willing homage to the men who stood aside on the ill-fated Titanic that the women and children might be saved.

Nations have for centuries dedicated memorials to the heroic dead. Tributes in prose and verse have been poured out unsparingly.

Physical courage commands the admiration of the world.

But there is another and equally as important courage,—moral courage.

The man who stands for the right in the face of public clamor; the man who from inherent courage is strong enough to mete out justice tempered with mercy.

Such a man is an invaluable asset to a city, state or nation. He is the kind of man who, after being correctly informed, will ask of himself what is right, and being convinced will do the right.

The L. & N. shares the public admiration for such men. Having had its work of supplying service and conducting development rewarded by ignorance, prejudice and selfishness, the L. & N. knows the value of courageous manhood, and the danger of moral weakness to the public welfare.

Ridicule is a dreadful weapon. Men dread it. Men, big men, crave understanding and sympathy. The absence of these and the presence of ridicule prove their bigness. If, in the face of ridicule and without understanding and sympathy, a man performs his duty, he is truly great.

And the performance of that duty not alone enhances his reputation,—which means to promote him in the esteem of his fellow man,—but it strengthens his character, which means to make him an even better man.

The L. & N. talks of these things because we want the understanding and sympathy of the morally courageous men. We want their help and co-operation in our efforts to do what is for the general public good.

We want your moral support and sympathetic co-operation. We will endeavor to at all times merit the confidence reposed in us by the morally courageous.

Men Pay Homage to Mother's Friend

"I am not surprised to observe the number of men who come into the store to purchase 'Mother's Friend,'" remarked a leading druggist.

The expectant mother if she hasn't heard of this splendid embrocation is probably not reading the papers to much extent. And if she does it is a happy thought to send hubby to the drug store. "Mother's Friend" is applied externally over the abdominal muscles.

It is a gentle, soothing lubricant, penetrates to the fine network of nerves beneath the skin and has a marked tendency to relieve the muscular strain to which these broad, flat abdominal muscles are subjected. The cords, tendons and ligaments are thus permitted to stretch without the corresponding surface strain so often involved during the period of expectation. And particularly to young mothers is this remedial application of inestimable value, since in thus keeping the muscles firm but pliant it enables them to go through the ordeal without laceration of the epidermis often the case when this gentle attention is neglected.

"Mother's Friend" is highly recommended by a host of women. Write Bradfield Regulator Co., 408 Lamar Bldg. Atlanta, Ga., and we will send you a valuable [illegible] to expectant mothers.

GOOD ROADS DAYS, AUGUST 14-15TH.

State wide interest is being aroused in the observance of Good Roads Days, August 14-15. The Alabama Good Roads Association is making an active effort to secure the co-operation of Chilton County in this movement. Secretary J. A. Rountree has written the following letter to Judge E. B. Deason, which is self explanatory.

Birmingham, Ala. July 14th, 1914
Judge E. B. Deason,
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Judge:—August 14th-15th are Good Roads Days. We hope that you have everything organized in your county to observe these days. Reports from nearly 60 counties, stating that they will observe Good Roads Days have been received. We are glad to know that you are deeply interested in the good roads movement and hope that you will lend every aid possible to make the days a success.

Every indication points that at least 100,000 citizens in Alabama will turn out and work the roads on these days. Think of the splendid work that will be accompliseed by these volunteer workers and the great enthusiasm that will be aroused by the working of the highway of the State.

Already resolutions endorsing Good Roads Days have been passed by the Alabama Good Roads Association, the Alabama Press Association, the Alabama Rural Letter Carriers Association and the Alabama Farmers Union.

Governor O'Neal has issued a proclamation appealing to the people to observe Good Roads Days, also calling upon the probate judges and county commissioners to see that the same is put into effect.

The Alabama Good Roads Association, which inaugurated this movement in 1911 shall be the greatest days in the history of the State and we hope that you will leave no stone unturned to make the same a great success. Our Association stands ready to assist you in every way possible in your splendid work.

With very high regards, we are
Yours very truly
Alabama Good Roads Assn.

Two two-horse wagon loads left home Saturday morning for Shelby to begin the game early in the afternoon. The game was called at 1:30 o'clock with a large crowd to witness the proceedings. The scores, 5 to 3, in favor of Shelby closed the game, which lasted a little less than an hour. At the last half of the fifth inning was the scores 3 to 0 in favor of U. S. A. Unity-Chilton Baptist High School

At the Fifth Sunday Meeting at Stanton, a rousing interest was manifested when the discussion of the Baptist High School for central Alabama came up. Although everything has not been as we might have wished, the first year's work was reasonably successful, and we trust we are facing a successfull future. A Strong faculty has been provided for the coming session with Rev. John A. Pool, Ph. D., as President. Dr. Pool is from Georgia, and has successful experience in the Baptist school work in that state, and under his leadership we expect a great years work. We appeal to the Baptists of this section to rally to the support of the school, and make for this part of Alabama a great and needed institution.

HUERTA ARRIVES SAFELY AT COAST

FALLEN DICTATOR MAKES LEISURELY TRIP FROM CAPITAL TO PUERTO MEXICO.

TRIP WAS WITHOUT INCIDENTS

British Consul Gemmil Meets Huerta and Offers Him Refuge on Board the Cruiser Bristol—Germans Offer to Help Huerta.

Puerto Mexico.—Gen. Victoriano Huerta, who recently resigned as provisional president of Mexico, arrived here, accompanied by Gen. Blanquet, his minister of war.

When he expects to leave his country and share the exile of Gen. Porfirio Diaz, whom he escorted to the coast three years ago, is yet unknown except perhaps to himself. Capt. Kohler of the German cruised Dresden offered him his ship "for any use he cared to make of her," but Gen. Huerta merely thanked him, adding that he would return his call soon.

The trip to this port was without incident or unpleasantness other than that occasioned by the terrible heat of the tropical lowlands. With Huerta and Blanquet were the general staff. The party occupied a train of nine sleeping cars, four of which were given over to troops. Two other trains loaded with nothing but troops preceded Gen. Huerta's train and arrived here an hour before the Huerta train. Behind him came another train, also loaded with soldiers.

Capt. Kohler and staff, in formal dress uniform, were at the station and were officially presented to Gen. Huerta. Answering inquiries as to his health, Gen. Huerta assured the officers he felt very well, although somewhat tired from the heat.

British Vice-Consul Gemmil also officially called on Huerta and presented him a message, presumably an offer of refuge on the British cruiser Bristol. Huerta read it and expressed pleasure at the consideration being shown him.

Local officials calling on Gen. Huerta were few in number, the only one of importance being Gen. Rincon, commander of the local garrison. Commander Gabriel A. Carvallo of the Mexican gunboat Zaragoza with his staff also called, but Huerta asked to be excused.

All arrangements were made for the reception of Huerta and Blanquet and the stage was so set that they could board the Dresden or Bristol and put out to sea so quickly and quietly as to rob their flight of all dramatic elements. Tracks were laid so that the special train could be pulled along the wharf.

MEXICO CITY IS NOW QUIET

Huerta and Blanquet Leave for Coast. Huerta Would Dispense With Guard.

Mexico City.—Gen. Huerta and Gen. Blanquet, the erstwhile ministers of instruction and communication, and several other high officials of the former administration, left the capital in several automobiles for the Los Reyes station on the Interoceanic railway, where they boarded a special train. It is believed they are going to Salina Cruz.

When informed that the people shouted "Viva Huerta," when his resignation was read to the chamber, Huerta smiled and remarked that he was glad they regarded it that way. He intimated that he would much rather dispense with the guard, which by courtesy is due to him, and at the strong behest of his friends, has been thrown around him. He shows no anxiety whatever regarding his safety, and made it plain that he would much rather go about openly.

At a late hour the city was quiet. Most of the cafes were open as usual and no sound could be heard except the whirr of an automobile or the rumble of carriages and the measured tramp of the guards. The government of Mexico may have been wrested from the hands of the stern dictator, by the combined force of almost the western hemisphere, but Mexico City does not seem to mind it. The city sleeps.

Washington.—News of Gen. Huerta's resignation as provisional president of Mexico was hailed by official Washington as the first practical step toward a quick solution of the Mexican problem. Constitutional diplomats and officials of the United States were elated over Gen. Huerta's voluntarily withdrawing and predicted an era of peace in his country.

Would Prevent Disorder.

El Paso, Texas.—In case of a sudden fall of the Huerta government, constitutionalist troops can enter Mexico City within a few hours. This would prevent the much feared reign of disorder at the national capital.

Huerta Must Surrender.

Saltillo, Mexico.—Unconditional surrender is the only condition on which Carranza will treat with Huerta and his party. This was emphasized by high constitutionalists in discussing the proposed resignation of Huerta.

HUERTA QUITS PRESIDENCY

Mexican Congress Accepts Resignation of Dictator—Carbajal Made President by Congress.

Mexico City.—General Victoriano Huerta resigned from the provisional presidency of the Mexican republic, and his resignation was accepted by the senate and chamber of deputies by a vote of 121 to 17.

Francisco Carbajal then was appointed president and took the oath of office at the joint session of the deputies and senators.

Huerta's resignation was submitted through the department of foreign relations. It was read in the house and was greeted with cries of "Viva Huerta." It then was referred to the joint committees of gobernacion. After brief consideration the committees reported, accepting the resignation in the following terms:

"Article 1. We accept the resignation presented by General Victoriano Huerta as president of the Mexican United States.

"Article 2. We call Licentiate Francisco Carbajal, minister of foreign relations, to assume the presidency."

A ballot was taken and the joint session approved the report.

President Carbajal proceeded to the national palace under an escort of presidential guards, and all along the way was greeted with tumultuous cheering.

The text of General Huerta's resignation follows:

"Deputies and Senators: Public necessity admitted by the chamber of deputies, by the senate and by the supreme court called me to the supreme magistracy of the republic. Later when in this same hall I had the honor of addressing you in compliance with the constitutional precept I promised at all costs to bring about peace.

"Seventeen months have passed, and in that brief period of time I have formed an army with which to carry out that solemn promise. You all know the immense difficulties which my government has encountered, owing to a scarcity of funds, as well as to the manifest and decided protection which a great power of this continent has afforded to the rebels—so that when the revolution has been broken up, seeing that its chief leaders were and continued to be divided, the power in question sought a pretext to intervene directly in the conflict and the result of this was the outrage committed at Vera Cruz by the American fleet.

"Success was had, as you know, in adjusting honorably through our delegates at Niagara Falls the petty Tampico incident, but the revolution continued, with the support of whom we all know.

"Yet after the highly patriotic work achieved by our delegates at Niagara Falls, there still are some who say I, come what may, seek my personal interest and not that of the republic. And as I need to rebut this allegation with facts I tender my formal resignation of the presidency of the republic.

"The national congress must know that the republic, through its government, has labored in entire good faith and with the fullest energy, having succeeded in doing away with the party which in the United States calls itself democratic and having shown how the right should be defended.

"To be more explicit, I will say that the action of the government of the republic during its short life has dealt death blows to an unjust power. Later on, stronger workers will come, using implements that undoubtedly will end that power which has done so much harm and committed so many outrages on this continent.

"In conclusion, I will say that I abandon the presidency of the republic, carrying with me the highest sum of human wealth, for I declare that I have arraigned at the bar of universal conscience the honor of a puritan, whom I, as a gentleman, challenge to wrest from me that possession.

"May God bless you and me."

The galleries of the chamber of deputies were packed before the beginning of the session. Intense excitement characterized the gathering, and at the close of the reading of Huerta's resignation the deputies and spectators broke into loud and continued applause.

After the acceptance of Huerta's resignation a commission was appointed by the president of the chamber to escort Senor Carbajal to the floor of the house. Senor Carbajal soon appeared in front of the chamber, passing through files of soldiers. He entered and as he walked to the platform the deputies stood. Speaker Manuel Mercado then administered the oath.

Two deputies spoke vigorously against the acceptance of Huerta's resignation, one calling it "weak submission to the United States."

Huerta Sees French Fete.

Mexico City.—President Huerta attended the French fete in celebration of the 125th anniversary of the fall of the bastile. He was accompanied by his daughters and son.

Huerta Debts Invalid.

Monterey, Mex.—"General Caranza will not recognize the validity of the debts of Huerta after he enters Mexico City and establishes a Constitutionalist government there" was the statement made here by high Constitutionalist officials.

Lind Will Not Talk.

Duluth, Minn.—"Events and results will show for the administration and for the nation," said John Lind when asked what he thought of Huerta's resignation.

HUERTA A PROTEGE OF GENERAL DIAZ

Former President of Mexican Republic Early Recognized Possibilities of Man Who Practically Succeeded Him in Power.

Has Seen Hard Service, and From the First Has Been Recognized as a Ruthless and Determined Man—Seemingly Knows No Quality of Mercy.

Once intended by old Porfirio to be a second Diaz in Mexico, now, like his former chief, a fugitive from the wrath of his compatriots, Victoriano Huerta sees himself at sixty forced to resign the presidency of his country. He will, it is believed, go to Europe, where, like other Latin American presidents, he will end his days with little enjoyment save that of reminiscence.

Huerta was born to wealth. Unlike Diaz, who is of plebeian origin, a mongrel, mostly Indian, Huerta comes of one of the most aristocratic families in Mexico.

He was born in Chihuahua, with which state the Huertas have long been identified, in 1854, or 1857, reports differ. At the age of seventeen the aristocrat was appointed by Diaz, then ruling Mexico with an iron hand, to the military school of Chapultepec.

Huerta served his four school years passably well. He was neither at the head nor the foot of his class. He was graduated with honors, being about the tenth in a class of nearly a hundred, and immediately went to join a regiment on the west coast as a second lieutenant of engineers.

When President Diaz began his reorganization of the Mexican army Huerta was promoted captain of engineers, and while holding this rank devised the plan for a Mexican general staff corps. He was an active member of the military map commission created to draft a staff map of Mexico on a large scale, and he had charge of all the topographical work of the commission, leading exploring and surveying parties over the wildest regions of the republic.

President Diaz soon after began to place confidence in Huerta. He believed he saw in the lieutenant colonel of engineers, to which rank the soldier had succeeded, traits which would make him a worthy successor in the executive chair. Huerta was placed in charge of a station in Matanzas, far removed from the capital. There plots could be easily hatched, and Diaz was loath to leave in charge any officer in whom he had not implicit trust.

Huerta was barely thirty-five when this incident occurred. One afternoon while he was riding with an escort of but three men through a mountain pass in the vicinity of his station, six or seven masked men stepped from the roadside and covered his little party. Naturally they threw up their hands.

The highwaymen proved to be members of the band of Flores Zegaza, the bandit who kept the community on the feather edge. It was his habit to descend on the towns along the coast and levy toll whenever hunger or caprice impelled him to do so. Huerta soon stood in front of Zegaza's hut, an adobe dwelling, much dilapidated, far up the mountain.

There Zegaza made the proposition which was not at all unusual in Mexico then, and which is, in fact, quite the vogue today. He proposed that Huerta should keep him informed as to the days when the military force would be marching in a direction opposite from the town.

On such days Zegaza would make it a point to call, with his followers, and collect from the natives such stores of money and clothes and food and wine and tobacco as had accumulated since the last visit.

Zegaza was not at all surprised to have Huerta accept his proposition to receive in return for the promised information a share of whatever loot fell to the bandits.

Ten days later Huerta sent word to Zegaza that he would be away from the station on the following Thursday.

Promptly on Thursday the bandits rode into Matanzas, confident there would be no opposition except from the sporadic popguns of the overfrightened storekeepers. As they turned into the main street, discharging their revolvers to frighten every one away, a squad of Huerta's soldiers closed in on their rear and another squad appeared in their front.

A number of Zegaza's men were killed in the street. The remainder, with the bandit chief himself, surrendered. A week later Zegaza was shot in the cuartel of the prison attached to the station.

Huerta is no drawing room soldier. He has seen much active service. In 1901 he took command of the infantry in the campaign against the Yaqui Indians. After this campaign he was again put in charge of the general staff's topographical work in Sonora. He participated in subsequent Yaqui campaigns and also in the campaign in Yucatan against the Maya Indians.

Huerta commanded all the detached government forces in the state of Guerrero at the beginning of the Madero revolution. When Madero succeded to the presidency, General Huerta was sent back into Morelos with a force to put down the Zapata rebellion. As a result of ill feeling growing out of this campaign, Huerta was recalled. Subsequently he led the army sent against Orozco, and was in command at the battle of Bachimba. For this service he was promoted to major general.

In the second Felix Diaz revolution, which resulted in the overthrow of the Madero government, Huerta was immediately called to active command as the senior ranking general then in the capital. He escorted Madero from Chapultepec castle to the palace on the first of the ten days' fighting and was placed in entire command of the forces of the government. He directed the government troops during all the subsequent fighting, and the conduct of these operations led to severe criticism on the part of Madero's friends.

It was charged that he did not carry out the operations with any spirit and that he disobeyed the commands of President Madero. It is said that before Blanquet entered the city the generals had a conference at which the fate of the Maderos was sealed.

Huerta was the moving spirit in the consummation of the plot that resulted in the seizure of the person of President Madero, his brother, Gustave, and Vice President Jose Pino Saurez. The assassinations of the Maderos and Saurez followed, and in the meantime Huerta, with the military behind him, had been recognized as the provisional president.

Huerta at once sought recognition of the United States, for it is understood in Latin-American countries that none of their presidents can hold office long without being recognized by the American government. President Wilson, however, refused to treat Huerta as chief executive of Mexico.

In the meantime, General Carranza, the successor of Madero in the dream of a justly governed Mexico, was winning over the North. His military commander, General Villa, repeatedly defeated the federal forces. Practically all of the North came under the constitutionalist sway. In the South Zapata held out against Huerta.

Then the United States came down upon him, seizing the city of Vera Cruz as a result of an affront to the Stars and Stripes. Mediation at the instance of Argentina, Brazil and Chile followed with no satisfactory results.

HAVE FAITH IN CARBAJAL

Huerta's Successor a Civilian and a Man of Acknowledged Probity—His Honorable Career.

Mexico City.—Francisco Carbajal is forty-four years old, a native of the state of Campeche, and a lawyer.

Almost ever since the start of his career he has occupied posts in the judiciary. In the Madero administration he was a senator, but relinquished his post to re-enter the supreme court, of which he was chief justice at the time General Huerta appointed him minister of foreign relations.

When General Porfirio Diaz determined in 1911 to treat with the Madero revolutionists, Senor Carbajal proceeded to Juarez as his commissioner.

Senor Carbajal has a reputation for possessing considerable intellectual force and independence of character. His demeanor is quiet. He shuns the exuberance in verbiage and gesticulation to which Latin-Americans are prone. He is courteous, but a man of few words and little given to elaborate compliments.

Besides, he is neat and well groomed in appearance. His features indicate pure European descent, without any admixture of Indian blood.

Altogether he is a man who conveys an impression of reserve power. He is a good man of business.

His probity has never been questioned. He has been sagacious and successful in investments and, while not rich, is a man of independent means. He is a man of family.

Fight Fog by Wireless.

Clearing away fogs by hurling into the mist great bolts from a wireless apparatus has been demonstrated to be feasible by the North Railroad company of France. The electric waves dissolve the water particles which constitute the fog.

As much as 600 feet can be cleared in front of the antennae. With improved machinery it is confidently believed that the discovery will prove of great benefit to ships at sea and will do much to prevent such accidents as the ramming of the Empress of Ireland and the drowning of hundreds.

Two Regrets.

"I s'pose John is still takin' life easy?" said the woman in the tram.

"Yes," answered the woman who was carrying a bundle of clothes. "John has only got two regrets in life. One is that he has to wake up and eat, an' the other is that he has to give up eatin' to sleep."—Pearson's (London) Weekly.

INDICT MRS. CARMAN ON MURDER CHARGE

WIFE OF FREEPORT PHYSICIAN ACCUSED OF MANSLAUGHTER. TRIAL SET FOR FALL.

SHE PLEADS NOT GUILTY

Weeps Hysterically After She Had Been Arraigned—Great Crowd of Curious Throng Courtroom to Hear Jury's Report.

Freeport, N. Y.—Mrs. Florence Conklin-Carman, a woman as remarkable as the tragedy in which she has starred, was released from Nassau county jail under $20,000 bond to appear in court some time this fall and answer to the charge of killing Mrs. Louise Duryea Bailey.

A tense woman she was when she faced Justice Van Syclen in the supreme court in Mineola and was told that the grand jury had decided that she had killed Mrs. Bailey "in the heat of passion," and was therefore indicted for manslaughter in the first degree.

She strode into the courtroom like a woman walking to her death. She was very pale, as pale as the soft muslin shirtwaist that she wore. Her hands were clenched so tightly that her knuckles protruded, sharp and white.

Her lips were clamped until her mouth was nothing but a scratch across an absolutely colorless face.

Directly after she had been informed that the indictment had been found and her attorney had agreed with District Attorney Smith that $20,000 was all right as bail, Mrs. Carman retired into the ante-room where Smith Cox and Ernest Randall, her wealthy neighbors, signed the bond. With Cox and Randall back of her she strode into the courtroom with the same swaying stride and clenched hands. She raised her hand and was sworn with her bondsmen.

She retired to the rear room to surrender to the irrepressible desire to collapse. She fell into a chair and began to weep hysterically. Ten minutes later in a curtained limousine she left for a trip over the hard, sun-broiled roads of Long Island.

SEEK RETURN OF FORTUNE

Appointment of Some One to Push the New Haven Claims Asked. $306,000,000 Involved.

Boston.—The appointment of a receiver, special master or other official to prosecute claims aggregating $306,000,000 against defendant directors and estates of directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad is asked in a suit filed in the supreme court. The action is brought by Whipple, Sears & Ogden, representing minority stockholders of the company.

The suit in which the attorneys recently demanded that the directors join is designed to force restitution from those responsible for funds alleged to have been illegally expended in building up the New Haven system.

Judge Brady issued an order of notice returnable next week to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed and why an injunction against the disposition of the defendants' stock should not be issued.

CHAFLIN COMPANY WINS SUIT

Shebar Loses Contention Against Co.—Deposit Based on Credit Which Was Accepted.

New York.—The contention that the H. B. Claflin company illegally engaged in a banking business in accepting money deposits and paying interest thereon was disposed of in favor of the Claflin company by Judge Hand in federal district court. This point was raied in a suit brought by Emmanuel Shebar of Aberdeen, Miss., to compel the Claflin receivers to return to him the balance of $10,000 deposited with the firm last January and drawing interest at 4½ per cent.

The court held that the transaction was based on the credit of the Claflin company, which Shebar accepted when he made the deposit.

SIX ARE KILLED IN WRECK

Norfolk, Va.—A checking up of the dead and injured in the collision at a crossing near this city between an electric train on the Virginia Railway and Power company's lines and a coal train on the Virginia railroad, showed that six persons were killed and 19 injured. BOAT ROCKED—FIVE DROWN

Attempt of Woman to Get Into Boat Was Cause of Disaster at Naticook Lake.

Manchester, N. H.—The attempt of Miss Annie Burrans while in swimming to climb into a rowboat, in which were her sister, Mrs. Minnie Mills of South Merrimack, the latter's two small children and her young niece, Dorothy Burrans, caused the drowning of all five in Naticook Lake, South Merrimack.

DEBATE ON FUTURES BILL

Acceptance of House Measure Now a Possibility, According to Rumor. Opposition Weakens.

Washington.—The conferees on the cotton futures bill made what is believed to be good progress toward an acceptance of the House measure, the one that imposes a nominal tax on contracts made in accordance with the terms of the proposed law and a prohibitory tax upon other kinds.

The committee had before it experts from the Department of Agriculture, explaining the technical part of the measure and their reasons for the parts of it that were inserted upon the suggestion of the department so as to assure the growers of cotton that the largest possible percentage of the crop will be delivered on contracts.

Senator Smith of Georgia, who is regarded as the keystone in the arch of opposition on the subject, said that he was becoming more favorably impressed by the arguments in favor of the Senate receding than it seemed possible for him to be when the conference committee was appointed. It would not be at all surprising if within a short time he would be recommending to his senatorial colleagues the substitution of the House bill for the Senate measure, which is something that is seldom done in the clashes between the two houses.

MEDIATION PLAN IS REFUSED

Western Trainmen Accuse Roads of Prolonging Negotiations to Gain Their Point.

Chicago.—Representatives of the enginemen and trainmen of the Western railroads who have voted to strike unless their demands for wage increases are granted refused a request of the general managers' committee that the United States government be asked to mediate. The men charged the committee with seeking to defeat the purpose of the employes by prolonging negotiations.

"As we have stated to you on several occasions," the letter of refusal also says, "we will not accept arbitration, because in our past arbitrations the railroads have refused to place the awards into effect."

MME. CAILLAUX TO BE TRIED

GOOD CHANGE.
Coffee to Postum.

The large army of persons who have found relief from many chronic ailments by changing from coffee to Postum as a daily beverage, is growing each day.

It is only a simple question of trying it for oneself in order to know the joy of returning health as realized by an Ills. young lady. She writes:

"I had been a coffee drinker nearly all my life and it affected my stomach—caused insomnia and I was seldom without a headache. I had heard about Postum and how beneficial it was, so concluded to quit coffee and try it.

"I was delighted with the change. I can now sleep well and seldom ever have headache. My stomach has gotten strong and I can eat without suffering afterwards. I think my whole system greatly benefited by Postum.

"My brother also suffered from stomach trouble while he drank coffee, but now, since using Postum, he feels so much better he would not go back to coffee for anything."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled—15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly—30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

ALABAMA TO SELL SOUVENIR DOLLARS

MEANS OF RAISING FUNDS FOR MAINTENANCE OF STATE'S FRISCO EXHIBIT.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Souvenir Panama-Pacific Exposition dollars will be placed on sale in every part of Alabama in order to aid in the raising of funds to pay for the erection of an Alabama building at San Francisco, and the maintenance of an Alabama exhibit at the exposition, according to a statement issued by Lee Cowart, who was recently appointed by Governor O'Neal as chairman of the commission that will have charge of the Alabama exhibit.

These dollars will be of bronze and will have on one side the seal of the State and on the other side the inscription, "Alabama at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, 1915." Commissions will be paid to persons who sell the souvenirs.

$15,000 From School Lands.

More than $15,000 was placed in the State treasury from the sale of school lands in Jefferson and Walker counties. The sale was made through Superintendent of Education William F. Feagin, and the transaction had been pending for several months. The State sold to the Woodward Iron company 161½ acres in Jefferson county for $6400. The Walker county lands, 350 acres, were sold to the Tennessee Land company, the purchase price being $9669.

Prison Inspector Aroused.

Severe criticism of the treatment accorded convicts in the Mobile county convict camp near Mobile was made here by Dr. W. C. Oates, state prison inspector, who declares that conditions in the camp are not satisfactory, that the cooking outfit is filthy and dirty, garbage accommodations are inadequate and that ventilation given to the convicts in the cages is insufficient.

Dr. Oates has returned from a trip of inspection which included the Mobile county camp, the Jefferson county jail at Birmingham and the Conecuh county jail at Evergreen.

There are 94 convicts in the Mobile camp, 18 of whom are white. They are confined in three portable cages that are well ventilated and a fourth cage that has little ventilation. He found 14 convicts confined in the fourth cage with ventilation sufficient for two people. He has recommended radical improvements.

At Birmingham Dr. Oates discussed with the members of the Jefferson county board of revenue plans for the construction of a new jail and also plans for the remodeling and renovation of the present structure.

No Institutes This Week.

Because teachers' examinations are being held throughout the State this week no county institutes are being held. The examinations are being held in every county in the State and there will be an unusually large number that will apply for teachers' licenses according to informatioin received at the department of education. Many teachers take advantage of the midsummer vacation to stand the examinations in order to obtain higher grade certificates and this is one of the reasons why there will be a large number to take the examinations, according to Mr. Feagin.

Investigate Homicides in Jefferson.

Urging a special grand jury investigation of the recent homicides in Jefferson county and asking that the guilty persons be tried as early as possible, the governor of Alabama wrote to Judge E. C. Crow of Birmingham, judge of the Jefferson circuit court, and requested that he call a special grand jury into session and order a special term of the circuit court.

W. B. Goodwin of Montgomery will be a candidate for the position of doorkeeper of the House of Representatives during the next session of the legislature. This place was held for more than 20 years by the late John Hasson of Gadsden. The doorkeeper will be named by the legislature, and the statute provides that he shall receive a salary of $3.50 a day for 90 days. Goodwin is a Confederate veteran. It is understood that several other veterans will apply for the position.

Several state officials attended the annual barbecue given at the Canebrake Experiment Station at Uniontown, July 22. Capt. Reuben F. Kolb, Capt. John C. Cheney and Capt. Alva Fitzpatrick of the department of agriculture were among those who attended.

Montgomerian Freed.

Governor O'Neal has granted a parole to John Price of Montgomery county, who was convicted in 1910 on a charge of miscegenation.

Paroles Issued to Five.

Governor O'Neal issued five paroles to convicts serving terms in the State penitentiary on various charges.

All the paroles were recommended by the State board of pardons at its recent meeting. The board considered almost 50 cases but action was taken by the governor in only five.

Those paroled were Robert H. Martin, Chilton county; Willie Pelligrew, Shelby; John George, Wilcox; Aubrey Howard, Elmore, and Jim Allen, Cherokee.

Pilligrew was serving a 25-year sentence on a charge of second degree murder. It was shown that he has served seven years and has been a model prisoner. Judge John Pelham, now a member of the State Court of Appeals, was the trial judge in the case and he recommended that the parole be granted.

Robert Martin was paroled for 20 days in order that he could obtain evidence to show why he should be permanently paroled. The governor has written to the trial judge about the matter.

Aubrey Howard was convicted of violating the prohibition law in two cases. Jim Allen was convicted on a charge of burglary and sentenced to four years. He has already served half of his term.

Bigger Market for Coal.

That Alabama's coal production would never reach its maximum capacity until an outside market of great power of consumption was acquired, and that Birmingham operators in realizing this fact are at present endeavoring to secure a richer field, were statements expressed by C. H. Nesbitt, State mine inspector.

"Business," said the inspector, "is on the upgrade, although, of course, ideal conditions do not yet prevail. The mines are working more days per week at the present time than sometime back. The output continues to be normal with indications of resumption of marked activity in the fall.

"Alabama has for some years mined a sufficient amount of coal to satisfy its consumers. Before we can mine coal up to our capacity we will have to acquire a permanent market which can buy regularly in great quantities Operators realize that fact, and are feeling out for the buyers of other states and countries. The opening of the canal will offer great opportunities to Alabama and its products. The probability of a settlement of the Mexican revolution will revive development in that country and local products will be in demand. Birmingham is mining annually about 18,000,000 tons of coal. Were there a sufficient market, this amount could be increased tenfold. There is plenty of coal in Alabama. In the long run we will be up to our capacity. The opening of the Warrior river and confluent streams and the cheap rates of transportation to be obtained will result in the establishment of a coaling station out from Mobile, and this will be the largest in the world.

"The future is bright; the present is good. But when operators begin furnishing coal to foreign countries regularly and in large quantities, our output will be increased as rapidly as that of Pennsylvania was. It is not generally known that Pennsylvania, which now mines such a quantity of coal that one wonders how the world consumes it, mined in 1840 about the same quantity that Alabama mines—17,500,000 tons per year."

Southern Field Trials in December.

Field events of the Southern Field Trials Club will be held at Letohatchie during the week of December 14, according to an announcement made by John H. Wallace, Jr., secretary of the club.

Two prizes of $750 each will be offered during the trials. One $750 prize will go to the winner of the all-age stakes and the other to the winner of the derby stakes.

It is expected that dogs will be entered in the trials this year from all parts of the United States. Sportsmen in several distant states have written Mr. Wallace for information abou the trials.

Alleged Moonshiner Bound Over.

William Poole, a Randolph county negro, was bound over to the federal grand jury under bond of $500 for illicit distilling when arraigned before Commissioner John A. Elmore. One witness testified to seeing the negro operating a distilling outfit which Deputy Marshal H. B. Reid had charged him with operating.

Fails to Establish Innocence.

John W Portevant, an elderly man of Mobile, who was convicted of criminal assault upon a woman of that place, and who was recently returned home from the penitentiary in order that the case might be further investigated, was brought through Montgomery en route back to the prison. Portevant was sent up from Mobile county last December and was in the penitentiary until a few weeks ago, when he was allowed to return home to seek further evidence of his innocence.

Escaped Arrest Two Years.

Two years after he had been indicted for killing Chester Butler near Montgomery, Henry Harmon, a negro, was arrested on a capias by Deputy Sheriff Tucker, and carried to the county jail. Harmon had never been captured since Butler was killed on the Hill plantation near the city early in 1912 Harmon was indicted for the murder at the February term of the grand jury in 1912. His case will come up for trial at the next session of court.

HINDUS IN BATTLE WITH POLICEMEN

OVER 20 REPORTED SHOT IN FIGHT AT VANCOUVER—COAL AND HATCHETS USED.

WERE DENIED ADMITTANCE

Hindus Would Not Allow Immigration Officials to Board Japanese Vessel, and They Retire—Canadian Government Firm.

Vancouver, B. C.—Scores among a party of 175 policemen and constables were injured, several seriously, in a battle with several hundred infuriated Hindus on board the Japanese steamer Komataga Maru in the harbor here.

Showers of coal and other missiles rained from the ship on the official force which attempted to board the steamer from a tug. In the face of the fire, the attacking party retreated and the attempt to board the steamer temporarily was abandoned. The Hindus braved the stream from a big hose the tug turned on them and mercilessly pelted the officers with lumps of coal. Fire bricks and pieces of iron from what is believed to have been the wreckage of the engine room on the steamer followed.

The battle grew out of an attempt to rid the harbor of the Japanese steamer on which 350 Hindus came to this port three months ago, only to have the Canadian immigration officials refuse them admission to the country. Their claim of a right to land as British subjects was overruled by the courts and the steamer was ordered to sail with them on board.

The Hindus had been rebellious and several times attempted to land, but were prevented.

SHIP BURNS IN N. Y. HARBOR

100,000 Persons See Spectacular Battle Against Flames—900 Aboard Doomed Ship.

New York.—More than 100,000 persons gathered on the Battery and the Brooklyn and Manhattan bridges and watched the most spectacular steamship fire New York has seen since the burning of the Gen. Slocum in the East river in 1904, with its record of 1,000 deaths.

The passenger steamer Massachusetts, with 700 passengers and a crew of more than 200, an oil-burner, had cleared from her pier in the North river and swung into New York bay shortly after 5 o'clock, when there came a sudden burst of flames through the upper works amidships, where the after funnel rose from the oil tank room in the hold.

The passengers, frightened nearly into hysterics, were kept from panic only by heroic work of the squads detailed to look after them, but as the smoke grew denser and settled about the decks, it became apparent it would be unable to control them for any great length of time. At last the steamer crawled into the Wallabout Market, directly between the Manhattan and Brooklyn bridges, and made fast. The smoke soon died down, and when the fire boat crews had joined their efforts to those of the seamen on the Massachusetts the blaze was soon extinguished.

CROP CONDITIONS ONLY FAIR

Improvement in Carolinas, Louisiana and Oklahoma — Many Sections Dry—Damage in Texas.

Washington.—Cotton crop conditions over the belt are decidedly spotted, owing to the scattered nature of the rains of the past fortnight. In the west the weather has been decidedly hot and dry, except that good rains have fallen in Louisiana and portions of Arkansas. In Louisiana the crop improved, normal progress was made in Oklahoma, Arkansas showed very irregular conditions, by reason of the scattered rains, and in Texas there was some loss, due largely to damage done to young cotton by the dry weather and high temperatures.

Boll weevil are still numerous in infested areas, but damage to date is small.

Wilson on Street.

Washington.—President Wilson took a short walk through the business section of the city and attended to some business at his bank. His appearance, following his recent slight illness, attracted much attention.

Waiting on Lever.

Washington.—Final action by the senate and house conferees upon the bill regulating dealings in cotton futures will be taken up on the return here of Representative Lever, one of the conferees, from South Carolina.

WILL BUILD BRIDGE AT CAIRO

Mobile & Ohio Has Big Fund With Which to Build Structure. $5,000,000 Raised.

Cairo, Ill.—The announcement of Vice-President R. V. Taylor of the Mobile & Ohio, that his company has set aside $5,000,000 to build a bridge across the Ohio river at Cairo, marks a split between the Mobile & Ohio and the Illinois Central, whose bridge the M. & O. used to cross the river here. Under the existing contract the M. & O. pays the Illinois Central a cent a hundred for all freight crossing the bridge. The M. & O. has always interpreted this contract to mean revenue producing freight and not to include company freight, which they termed supplies. The Illinois Central learned of the practice, it is said, through a discharged clerk of the M. & O. and presented the claim for $500,000 back pay. The Mobile & Ohio refused to pay the claim, and resorted to the arbitration agreement in the contract. The matter was submitted to a commission consisting of President L. E. Johnson of the Norfolk & Western, President F. A. Delano of the Wabash and Comptroller F. Nay of the Rock Island, who heard testimony and decided for the M. & O., holding, however, that the wording of the contract was not clear and that the Illinois Central could collect bridge tolls on Mobile & Ohio freight after notifying them of its intention to do so. The Illinois Central immediately advised the Mobile & Ohio to this effect. For the past seven years it is said that the money paid the Illinois Central by the Mobile & Ohio for the use of the bridge would pay 6 per cent interest on their whole investment. The Mobile & Ohio recently made soundings of the river here to determine if a suitable crossing could be found.

THAW GETS A BIG INCOME

Awarded Income From Estate of Father After Legal Battle—Trust Company Beaten.

Pittsburgh.—After a six months' legal battle, Harry K. Thaw, in a court decision, was awarded the income from his father's estate, denied him by the trustees since he was adjudged insane for slaying Stanford White.

By the decision Thaw gets $160,773. Judge James W. Over held that Thaw is entitled to the money, despite the fact that alienists declare Thaw is suffering from an exaggerated sense of self which would make it unwise to commit any large sums of money into his personal charge.

The fight for the income began last January, when Thaw filed a petition asking for $30,000 to defray legal expenses. The Fidelity Title & Trust company of Pittsburgh, trustees, took exception. The court allowed the petition. The trust company then was permitted to send alienists to examine Thaw, claiming he was insane. Thaw refused to submit to an examination, it is said. The trust company then asked that Thaw be compelled to submit. The demurrer to this motion, filed by Thaw's attorneys, was sustained.

Marble Windows.

Remarkably beautiful effects are secured by the use of marble as a means of transmitting light instead of glass. This has been accomplished by a new process which has been devised by an engineer of Hamburg, W. Engle. He has succeeded in making plates of marble no more than three millimeters in thickness and for the use designated it is available up to 20 millimeters thick. The suitability of marble for this purpose was realized some time ago, but the difficulty encountered was that of securing the marble in slabs of sufficient thinness. These plates permit of the passage of a greater amount of light than frosted glass does, and at the same time imparts to the rays a much pleasanter color. Most opal glass imparts to the light an undesirable greenish tinge, while the light which passes through the marble has a reddish violet which is much pleasanter. After the marble has been ground down to the desired thickness it is subjected to an immersion in oil under high pressure, and the effects secured in this manner are said the superior to those of stained glass.

BODY COVERED WITH ECZEMA

R. F. D. No. 1, Tazewell, Tenn.—"My disease started on my legs in a small patch and kept spreading until my entire body was covered. It would itch and burn till I could not sleep at night. I would scratch till the blood would ooze out and run down my body and legs. The eruption came out in small red pimples and when I scratched the whole surface of the skin became irritated, red and ugly looking. My clothing seemed to irritate it. The pimples were on my hands, arms, legs, feet and entire body, especially between my fingers and toes. I also had dandruff on my head until my hair was all falling out.

"I was told it was eczema and took a treatment, but all remedies failed. Then I got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I first washed with Cuticura Soap and warm water, dried well and then applied the Cuticura Ointment. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me, and they also cured my dandruff and falling hair." Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

We were pleased to have as our visitor one day last week, Mr. L. R. Neel, editor of the Southern Agriculturist of Nashville. Mr. Neel is an interesting conversationalist, and his wide range of knowledge and information is ably displayed in the columns of the splendid paper which he publishes.

Has the commissioners court issued those time warrants on the county? Is it a fact that they have actually voted in favor of putting the county in debt, over the wishes of the people? Have not the people a right to say whether or not they desire the county to go in debt to build a highway?

It seems that the time has come in this county when the tax payer has no voice at all in the management of the county affairs. But on the other hand, it seems that their wishes are absolutely ignored, and an effort in some cases is made to keep them from knowing just what is going on. Why is there so much secrecy about somethings that are going on in Clanton?

Last week the Clanton Press devoted a large space in giving figures showing comparative gains and losses of Republicans and Progressives respectively "from Maine to California." But somehow they omitted the figures of the Democratic vote. We do not understand why the Press preferred to "tell on" the other fellow, and hide their own part of the story, unless it was because that part which related the Democratic side of the affair, was the "bad" part and they did not want it made known.

A few days ago we received a letter from a subscriber, desiring to know what disposition had been made of the case of Leo M. Frank charged with the murder of Mary Phagan. For the information of the party who made the inquiry, and all others who may be interested to know, we will state that Frank is in jail in Atlanta with a sentence of death hanging over him, as rendered by the court jury some time ago. He is awaiting action on petition for new trial, which is being urged before the supreme court by his lawyers.

The Montgomery Advertiser observes that the state of Georgia has returned to the use of the famous old Blue Back Speller in its common Schools; it also suggests that such an action on the part of Alabama would be welcomed. This old Book carries with it the recollection of a time and influence in this country that no other text-book will ever claim, and it matters not how many states return to using it, they will never be able to bring back the real days of the old Blue Back Speller.

We wish to urge the voters of Chilton to come to the Progressive mass meeting at Clanton on Saturday, August 1st. At this meeting delegates will be elected to attend the state convention at Birmingham, August 5. Hon. M. W. Howard of Birmingham will be here to address the meeting, and every voter in the county should hear him. He has some information on the issues of the day and future of the Progressive party that will arouse every citizen to action, and create within the voters a greater zeal for Progressiveism. Be sure to come and spend the day and hear all the discussion. Others besides Mr. Howard will be on for speeches.

If the county is put in debt fifty or sixty thousand dollars, how can they pay the current expense of the county? They have failed for the last three years to even pay the current expense of the county. How can they do more now? Doesn't the county now owe several thousand dollars, on accounts that have not been passed by the commissioners court? Shall the people remain silent on these questions, or rise and demand their rights. We say that there are too many things being done in Clanton these days, where the people's tax money is being used, and the tax payers not knowing anything about it. We say that when the people's money is being used for any purpose they should have some voice in the matter.

PROGRESSIVE FARMING

The bool weevil damaged last year's cotton crop in Alabama to a considerable extent, and yet the crop was next to the largest ever picked in this state.

The wecvil is destroying more cotton now than it did a year ago. In some counties it is said that the pest has ruined fully 25 per cent of the crop. Nevertheless, Alabama is producing a bumper crop, larger even than that of last year.

This remarkable prospect despite the ravages of the boll weevil is due not to increased acreage, but to the intelligence and industry of the farmer. Intensive farming has been worth millions of dollars to this state. A great deal more cotton is being produced to the acre than in former years. No ambitious farmer is satisfied with making a third or a half bale to the acre as in years past. With many of them a bale to the acre is the rule.

As bad as the boll weevil is, therefore, this modern farming not only minimizes the damage to the crop, but in many cases makes it a negligable quantity.—Age-Herald.

Among the Democrats who believe that theirs is the only doctrine that will ever "take" in the South, and among the Republicans, who are deeply remorsed at any kind of success among the Progressives, there seems to be much speculation as to the real motive behind the action of the Democrats in Louisiana who have come over to the ranks of Bull Moose party. The true explanation of the action lies in the fact that these Louisiana Democrats have seen in the Progressive party what other southern men are going to see sooner or later, viz: Relief from the old petrified unchanging ring rule of Democracy; a party of protection, free from those old Republican traditions that are and ever will be repulsive to southern born men; a party that stands for things that concern progress and prosperity of to-day; a party that is destined to break the solid South by the perpetuating of a second party, thus insuring for our people better conditions of law and government, and a true and popular rule of the people.

Last week's issue of the Clanton Press said: "And all this candycoated talk about the Bull Moose grazing in the South this Fall is the variest rot and nonsense."

We call attention to the following article clipped from the Atlanta Constitution, a Democratic paper. "'Louisiana Democrats bolt to Progressives.' Old Party leaders stunned by desertion of Third District Committeemen. Washington, July 13,—Democratic leaders from the South were stunned by news from the third Louisiana District where last week the Democratic congressional committee went over to the Progressive party in a body.

Louisiana Democrats are out of tune with the Wilson administration and are ripe for a revolt. The split is expected to extend throughout the state and may result in the election of three Progressive congressmen from Louisiana.

Leaders in the Progressive movement in Louisiana heretofore have been affiliated with the Democrats. They are: W. H. Price, L. C. Roger, Edwin Brossard, John Marks, Samuel Lee Blanc, and W. T. Peterman. Mr. Brossard is a brother of Senator-elect Brossard.

The third district leads the revolt, it was explained here today, because the democratic sugar tariff has caused ruin to the industry in that section."

The above clipping is from a democratic paper, and shows that the Clanton Press must be mistaken in its statement in last week's issue.

Many of the democratic papers predict that the Progressives will elect a full state ticket in Louisiana this year.

Watermelons Being Shipped.

Last Monday marked the opening of an industry in Clanton that has heretofore been undeveloped in this community, when Mr. Lum Wilson shipped the first car load of watermelons that have ever been sent to foreign market from here. Farmers of Chilton have always raised watermelons, but not for the market; they have never raised them except for home consumption, until this year, when several men planted large amounts with the idea of placing them on the foreign markets. Mr. Wilson has the honor of being the first to ship from Clanton. Mr. J. H. Duncan shipped a car from Lomax Tuesday. The success with which these men are meeting should be an incentive to our farmers to unite on diversification, and cause them to break away from the old worn out custom of cotton and corn one year and corn and cotton the next.

you have the first symptom of a run-down system, and nervous people too often conceal their aches and pains and suffer in silence, while, if neglected, this condition often foreruns more serious trouble.

Most Skin Trouble Readily Overcome

The Active Principle of a Famous Remedy Works Wonders.

Many people have marveled the way S. S. S. overcomes skin troubles. The explanation is the fact that S. S. S. works in the blood and the blood is reaches a most intricate and extraordinary maze of arteries and veins.

When you come to realize that the skin and the flesh beneath are composed of a network of tiny blood vessels you solve the mystery.

There are wonderful medicinal properties in S. S. S. that follow the course of the blood streams just as naturally as the most nourishing food elements.

It is really a remarkable remedy. It contains one ingredient, the active purpose of which is to stimulate the tissues to the healthy selection of its own essential nutriment. And the medicinal elements of this matchless blood purifier are just as essential to well-balanced health as the nutritious elements of the meats, grains, fats and sugars of our daily food.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and just insist upon having it. And if you desire skillful advice and counsel upon any matter concerning the blood and skin, write to the Medical Department, The Swift Specific Co., 529 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Do not allow some zealous clerk's eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. to foist you with the same old mineral drugs. Beware of all substitutes. Insist upon S. S. S.

GO WHERE YOU PLEASE EAT WHAT YOU PLEASE

That is what you can do if you take Dodson's Liver Tone. Many people know the danger of calomel, yet they take it because they know of nothing better. Other people are not afraid of calomel, because they do not understand what a dangerous drug it is. Because it has never hurt them they believe it never will.

No one need to take dangerous calomel (which is just another form of mercury).

Alred Drug Company sell Dodson's Liver Tone for fifty cents a bottle and guarantee that it takes the place of calomel.

Dodson's Liver tone is a pleasant-tasting vegetable remedy that livens up the liver without causing any restriction of habit or diet. It has none of the many bad after-effects of calomel and is safe for children as well as grown-ups.

You don't run a single risk when you try Dodson's Liver Tone, because if you aren't entirely satisfied all you need to do is go right back to where you bought it and have your money cheerfully refunded to you with s smile. Isn't that fair?

The Hollow of Her Hand

COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON : COPYRIGHT, 1912, BY DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

He did not once interrupt her. All the time she was speaking he was studying the profile of her face as if fascinated by its strange immobility. For the matter of a full half-hour he sat on the rail, his back against a post, his arms folded across the breast of the thick ulster he wore, staring at her, drinking in every word of the story she told. A look of surprise crept into his face when she came to the point where the thought of marrying Hetty to the brother of her victim first began to manifest itself in her designs. For a time the look of incredulity remained, to be succeeded by utter scorn as she went on with the recital. Her reasons, her excuses, her explanations for this master stroke in the way of compensation for all that she had endured at the hands of the scornful Wrandalls, all of whom were hateful to her without exception, stirred him deeply. He began to understand the forces that compelled her to resort to this Machiavellian plan for revenge on them. She admitted everything: her readiness to blight Hetty's life forever; her utter callousness in laying down these ugly plans; her surpassing vindictiveness; her reflections on the triumph she was to enjoy when her aims were fully attained. She confessed to a genuine pity for Hetty Castleton from the beginning, but it was outweighed by that thing she could only describe as an obsession! . . . How she hated the Wrandalls! . . . Then came the real awakening: when the truth came to her as a revelation from God. Hetty had not been to blame. The girl was innocent of the one sin that called for vengeance so far as she was concerned. The slaying of Challis Wrandall was justified! All these months she had been harboring a woman she believed to have been his mistress as well as his murderess. It was not so much the murderess that she would have foisted upon the Wrandalls as a daughter, but the mistress! . . . She loved the girl, she had loved her from that first night. Back of it all, therefore, lay the stern, unsuspected truth: from the very beginning she instinctively had known this girl to be innocent of guile. . . . Her house of cards fell down. There was nothing left of the plans on which it had been constructed. It had all been swept away, even as she strove to protect it against destruction, and the ground was strewn with the ashes of fires burnt out. . . . She was shocked to find that she had even built upon the evil spot! . . . Almost word for word she repeated Hetty's own story of her meeting with Challis Wrandall, and how she went, step by step and blindly, to the last scene in the tragedy, when his vileness, his true nature was revealed to her. The girl had told her everything. She had thought herself to be in love with Wrandall. She was carried away by his protestations. She was infatuated. (Sara smiled to herself as she spoke of this. She knew Challis Wrandall's charm!) The girl believed in him implicitly. When he took her to Burton's inn it was to make her his wife, as she supposed. He had arranged everything. Then came the truth. She defended herself. . . .

"I came upon her in the road on that wild night, Brandon, at the place I pointed out. Can you picture her as I have described her? Can you picture her despair, her hopelessness, her misery? I have told you everything, from beginning to end. You know how she came to me, how I prepared her for the sacrifice, how she left me. I have not written to her. I cannot. She must hate me with all her soul, just as I have hated the Wrandalls, but with greater reason, I confess. She would have given herself up to the law long ago, if it had not been for exposing me to the world as her defender, her protector. She knew she was not morally guilty of the crime of murder. In the beginning she was afraid. She did not know our land, our laws. In time she came to understand that she was in no real peril, but then it was too late. A confession would have placed me in an impossible position. You see, she thought of me all this time. She loved me as no woman ever loved another. Was not I the wife of the man she had killed, and was not I the noblest of all women in her eyes? God! And to think of what I had planned for her!"

This was the end of the story.

The words died away in a sort of whimpering wail, falling in with the wind to be lost to his straining ears. Her head drooped, her arms hung limply at her side.

For a long time he sat there in silence, looking out over the darkening water, unwilling, unable indeed, to speak. His heart was full of compassion for her, mingling strangely with what was left of scorn and horror. What could he say to her?

At last she turned to him. "Now you know all that I can tell you of Hetty Castleton—of Hetty Glynn. You could not have forced this from me, Brandon. She would not tell you. It was left for me to do in my own good time. Well, I have spoken. What have you to say?"

"I can only say, Sara, that I thank God for everything," he said slowly.

"For everything?"

"I thank God for you, for her and for everything. I thank God that she found him out in time, that she killed him, that you shielded her, that you failed to carry out your devilish scheme, and that your heart is very sore today."

"You do not despise me?"

"No. I am sorry for you."

Her eyes narrowed. "I don't want you to feel sorry for me."

"You don't understand. I am sorry for you because you have found yourself out and must be despising yourself."

"You have guessed the truth. I despise myself. But what could be expected of me?" she asked ironically. "As the Wrandalls would say, 'blood will tell.'"

"Nonsense! Don't talk like that! It is quite unworthy of you. In spite of everything, Sara, you are wonderful. The very thing you tried to do, the way you went about it, the way you surrender, makes for greatness in you. If you had gone on with it and succeeded, that fact alone would have put you in the class with the great, strong, virile women of history. It—"

"With the Medicis, the Borgias and—" she began bitterly.

"Yes, with them. But they were great women, just the same. You are greater, for you have more than they possessed: a conscience. I wish I could tell you just what I feel. I haven't the words. I—"

"I only want you to tell me the truth. Do you despise me?"

"Again I say that I do not. I can only say that I regard you with—yes, with awe."

"As one might think of a deadly serpent."

"Hardly that," he said, smiling for the first time. He crossed over and laid his hand on her shoulder. "Don't think too meanly of yourself. I understand it all. You lived for months without a heart, that's all."

"You put it very gently."

"I think I am right. Now, you've got it back, and it's hungry for the sweet, good things of life. You want to be happy. You want to love again and to be loved. You don't want to pitied. I understand. It's the return of a heart that went away long months ago and left an empty place that you filled with gall. The bitterness is gone. There is something sweet in its place. Am I not right?"

She hesitated. "If you mean that I want to be loved by my enemies, Brandon, you are wrong," she said clearly. "I have not been chastened in that particular."

"You mean the Wrandalls?"

"It is not in my nature to love my enemies. We stand on the same footing as before, and always shall. They understand me, I understand them. I am glad that my project failed, not for their sake, but for my own."

He was silent. This woman was beyond him. He could not understand a nature like this.

"You say nothing. Well, I can't ask you to understand. We will not discuss my enemies, but my friends. What do you intend to do in respect to Hetty?"

"I am going to make her my wife," he said levelly.

She turned away. It was now quite dark. He could not see the expression on her face.

"What you have heard does not weaken your love for her?"

"No. It strengthens it."

"You know what she has done. She has taken a life with her own hands. Can you take her to your bosom, can you make her the mother of your own children? Remember, there is blood on her hands."

This Woman Was Beyond Him.

"Ah, but her heart is clean!"

"True," she said moodily, "her heart is clean."

"No cleaner than yours is now, Sara."

She uttered a short, mocking laugh. "It isn't necessary to say a thing like that to me."

"I beg your pardon."

Her manner changed abruptly. She turned to him, intense and serious.

"She is so far away, Brandon. On the other side of the world, and she is full of loathing for me. How am I to regain what I have lost? How am I to make her understand? She went away with that last ugly thought of me, with the thought of me as I appeared to her on that last, enlightening day. All these months it has been growing more horrible to her. It has been beside her all the time. All these months she has known that I pretended to love her as—"

"I don't believe you know Hetty as well as you think you do," he broke in. "You forget that she loved you with all her soul. You can't kill love so easily as all that. It will be all right, Sara. You must write and ask her to come back. It—"

"Ah, but you don't know!" Then she related the story of the liberated canary bird. "Hetty understands. The cage door is open. She may return when she chooses, but—don't you see? —she must come of her own free will."

"You will not ask her to come?"

"No. It is the test. She will know that I have told you everything. You will go to her. Then she may understand. If she forgives she will come back. There is nothing else to say, nothing else to consider."

"I shall go to her at once," he said resolutely.

She gave him a quick, searching glance.

"She may refuse to marry you, even now, Brandon."

"She can't!" he cried. An instant later his face fell. "By Jove, I—I suppose the law will have to be considered now. She will at least have to go through the form of a trial."

She whirled on him angrily. "The law? What has the law to do with it? Don't be a fool!"

"She ought to be legally exonerated," he said.

Her fingers gripped his arm fiercely. "I want you to understand one thing, Brandon. The story I have told you was for your ears alone. The secret lives with us and dies with us."

He looked his relief. "Right! It must go no farther. It is not a matter for the law to decide. You may trust me."

"I am cold," she said. He heard her teeth chatter distinctly as she pulled her thick mantle closer about her throat and shoulders. "It is very raw and wet down here. Come!"

As she started off along the long, narrow pier, he sprang after her, grasping her arm. She leaned rather heavily against him for a few steps and then drew herself up. Her teeth still chattered, her arm trembled in his clasp.

"By Jove, Sara, this is bad," he cried, in distress. "You're chilled to the marrow."

"Nerves," she retorted, and he somehow felt that her lips were set and drawn.

"You must get to bed right away. Hot bath, mustard, and all that. I'll not stop for dinner. Thanks just the same. I will be over in the morning."

"When will you sail?" she asked, after a moment.

"I can't go for ten days, at least. My mother goes into the hospital next week for an operation, as I've told you. I can't leave until after that's over. Nothing serious, but—well, I can't go away. I shall write to Hetty tonight, and cable her tomorrow. By the way, I—I don't know just where to find her. You see, we were not to write to each other. It was in the bargain. I suppose you don't know how I can—"

"Yes, I can tell you precisely where she is. She is in Venice, but leaves there for Rome, by the Express."

"Then you have been hearing from her?" he cried sharply.

much: there has not been a day since she landed in England that I have not received news of her. I have not been out of touch with her, Brandon, not even for an hour."

"Good heaven, Sara! You don't mean to say you've had her shadowed by—by detectives," he exclaimed, aghast.

"Not directly. But I will say this "Her maid is a very faithful servant," was her ambiguous rejoinder.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Disturbing News.

He walked home swiftly through the early night, his brain seething with tumultuous thoughts. The revelations of the day were staggering; the whole universe seemed to have turned topsy-turvy since that devastating hour at Burton's inn. Somehow he was not able to confine his thoughts to Hetty Castleton alone. She seemed to sink into the background, despite the absolution he had been so ready, so eager to grant her on hearing the story from Sara's lips. Not that his resolve to search her out and claim her in spite of everything was likely to weaken, but that the absorbing figure of Sara Wrandall stood out most clearly in his reflections.

What an amazing creature she was! He could not drive her out of his thoughts, even when he tried to concentrate them on the one person who was dearest to him of all in all the world, his warm-hearted, adorable Hetty. Strange contrasts suggested themselves to him as he strode along, head bent and shoulders hunched. He could not help contrasting the two women. He loved Hetty; he would always love her, of that he was positive. She was Sara's superior in every respect, infinitely so, he argued. And yet there was something in Sara that could crowd this adored one, this perfect one out of his thoughts for the time being. He found it difficult to concentrate his thoughts on Hetty Castleton.

How white and ill Sara had looked when she said good night to him at the door! The memory of her dark, mysterious eyes haunted him; he could see them in the night about him. They had been full of pain; there were torrents of tears behind them. They had glistened as if burnished by the fires of fever.

Even as he wrote his long, triumphant letter to Hetty Castleton, the picture of Sara Wrandall encroached upon his mental vision. He could not drive it out. He thought of her as she had appeared to him early in the spring; through all the varying stages of their growing intimacy; through the interesting days when he vainly tried to translate her matchless beauty by means of wretched pigments; up to this present hour in which she was revealed, and yet not revealed, to him. Her vivid face was always before him, between his eyes and the thin, white paper on which he scribbled so eagerly. Her feverish eyes were looking into his; she was reading what he wrote before it appeared on the surface of the sheet!

His letter to Hetty was a triumph of skill and diplomacy, achieved after many attempts. He found it hard not to say too much, and quite as difficult not to say too little. He spent hours over this all-important missive. At last it was finished. He read and reread it, searching for the slightest flaw: a fatal word or suggestion that might create in her mind the slightest doubt as to his sincerity. She was sure to read this letter a great many times, and always with the view to finding something between the lines: such as pity, resignation, an enforced conception of loyalty, or even faith! He meant that she should find nothing there but love. It was full of tenderness, full of hope, full of promise. He was coming to her with a steadfast, enduring love in his heart, he wanted her now more than ever before.

There was no mention of Challis Wrandall, and but once was Sara's name used. There was nothing in the letter that could have betrayed their joint secret to the most acute outsider, and yet she would understand that he had wrung everything from Sara's lips. Her secret was his.

He decided that it would not be safe to anticipate the letter by a cablegram. It was not likely that any message he could send would have the desired effect. Instead of reassuring her, in all probability it would create fresh alarm.

Sleep did not come to him until after three o'clock. At two he got up and deliberately added a postscript to the letter he had written. It was in the nature of a poignant plea for Sara Wrandall. Even as he penned these lines, he shuddered at the thought of what she had planned to do to Hetty Castleton. Staring hard at the black window before him, the pen still in his hand, he allowed his thoughts to dwell so intimately on the subject of his well-meant postscript that her ashen face with its burning eyes seemed to take shape in the night beyond. It was a long time before he could get rid of the illusion. Afterwards he tried to conjure up Hetty's face and to drive out the likeness of the other woman, and found that he could not recall a single feature in the face of the girl he loved!

When he reached Southlook in the morning, he found that nearly all of the doors and windows were boarded up. Wagons were standing in the stable yard, laden with trunks and crates. Servants without livery were scurrying about the halls. There was an air of finality about their movements.

"Yes, sir," said Watson, in reply to his question, "we are in a rush. Mrs. Wrandall expects to close the 'ouse this evening, sir. We all go up this afternoon. I suppose you know, sir, we 'ave taken a new apartment in town."

"No!" exclaimed Booth.

"Yes, sir, we 'ave, sir. They've been decorating it for the pawst two weeks. Seems like she didn't care for the old one we 'ad. As a matter of fact, I didn't care much for it, either. She's taken one of them hexpensive ones looking out over the park, sir. You know we used to look out over Madison avenue, sir, and God knows it wasn't hinspirin'. Yes, sir, we go up this afternoon. Mrs. Wrandall will be down in a second, thank you, sir."

Booth actually was startled by her appearance when she entered the room a few minutes later. She looked positively ill.

"My dear Sara," he cried anxiously, "this is too bad. You are making yourself ill. Come, come, this won't do."

"I shall be all right in a day or two," she said, with a weary little gesture. "I have been nervous. The strain was too great, Brandon. This is the reaction you might say."

"Your hand is hot, your eyes look feverish. You'd better see your doctor as soon as you get to town. An ounce of prevention, you know."

"Well," she said, with a searching look into his eyes, "have you written to her?"

"Yes. Posted it at seven o'clock this morning."

"I trust you did not go so far as to—well, to volunteer a word in my behalf. You were not to do that, you know."

He looked uncomfortable. "I'm afraid I did take your name in vain," he equivocated. "You are a—a wonderful woman, Sara," he went on, moved to the remark by a curious influence that he could not have explained any more than he could have accounted for the sudden gush of emotion that took possession of him.

She ignored the tribute. "You will persuade her to come to New York with you?"

"For your sake, Sara, if she won't come for mine."

"She knows the cage is open," was her way of dismissing the subject. "I am glad you came over. I have a letter from Leslie. It came this morning. You may be interested in what he has to say of Hetty—and of yourself." She smiled faintly. "He is determined that you shall not be without a friend while he is alive."

"Les isn't such a rotter, Sara. He's spoiled, but he is hardly to be blamed for that."

"I will read his letter to you," she said, and there was no little significance in the way she put it. She held the letter in her hand, but he had failed to notice it before. Now he saw that it was a crumpled ball of paper. He was obliged to wait for a minute or two while she restored it to a readable condition. "He was in London when this was written," she explained, turning to the window for light. She glanced swiftly over the first page until she found the place where she meant to begin. "'I suppose Hetty Castleton has written that we met in Lucerne two weeks ago,'" she read. "'Curious coincidence in connection with it, too. I was with her father, Col. Braid Castleton, when we came upon her most unexpectedly. I ran across him in Paris just before the aviation meet, and got to know him rather well. He's a fine chap, don't you think? I confess I was somewhat surprised to learn that he didn't know she'd left America. He explained it quite naturally, however. He'd been ill in the north of Ireland and must have missed her letters. Hetty was on the point of leaving for Italy. We didn't see much of her. But, by Jove, Sara, I am more completely gone on her than ever. She is adorable. Now that I've met her father, who had the beastly misfortune to miss old Murgatroyd's funeral, I can readily see wherein the saying "blood will tell" applies to her. He is a prince. He came over to London with me the day after we left Hetty in Lucerne, and I had him in to meet mother and Vivian at Claridge's. They like him immensely. He set us straight on a good many points concerning the Glynn and Castleton families. Of course, I knew they were among the best over here, but I didn't know how fine they were until we prevailed on him to talk a little about himself. You will be glad to hear that he is coming over with us on the Mauretania. She sails the twenty-seventh. We'll be on the water by the time you get this letter. It had been our intention to sail last week, but the colonel had to go to Ireland for a few days to settle some beastly squabbles among the tenants. Next year he wants me to come over for the shooting. He isn't going back to India for two years, you may be interested to hear. Two years' leave. Lots of influence, believe me! We've been expecting him back in London since day before yesterday. I dare say he found matters worse than he suspected and has been delayed. He has been negotiating for the sale of some of his property in Belfast—factory sites, I believe. He is particularly anxious to close the deal before he leaves England. Had to lift a mortgage on the property, before he could think of making the sale. I staked him to four thousand pounds, to tide him over. Of course, he is eager to make the sale. 'Gad, I almost had to beg him to take the money. Terribly proud and haughty, as the butler would say. He said he wouldn't sleep well until he has returned the filthy lucre. We are looking for him back any hour now. But if he shouldn't get here by Friday, we will sail without him. He said he would follow by the next boat, in case anything happened that he didn't catch the Mauretania.'"

Booth Was Startled by Her Appearance.

Sara interrupted herself to offer an ironic observation: "If Hetty did not despise her father so heartily, I should advise you to look farther for a father-in-law, Brandon. The colonel is a bad lot. Estates in the north of Ireland! Poor Leslie!" She laughed softly.

"He'll not show up, eh?"

"Not a bit of it," she said. "He may be charged to profit and loss in Leslie's books. This part of the letter will interest you," she went on, as if all that had gone before was of no importance to him. "'I hear interesting news concerning you, my dear girl. My heartiest congratulations if it is all true. Brandy is one in a million. I have hoped all along to have him as a full-fledged brother-in-law, if that's the way you'd put it. Father writes that every one is talking about it, and saying what a fine thing it is. He has a feeling of delicacy about approaching you in the matter, and I fancy it's just as well until everything is settled. I wish you'd let me make a suggestion, however. Wouldn't it be wise to let us all get together and talk over the business end of the game? Brandy's a fine chap, a corker, in fact, but the question is: has he got it in him to take Challis' place in the firm? You've got to consider the future as well as the present, my dear. We all do. With his artistic temperament he might play hob with your interests, and ours too, for that matter. Wouldn't it be wise for me to sound him a bit before we take him into the firm? Forgive me for suggesting this, but, as you know, your interests are mine, and I'm terribly keen about seeing you get the best of everything. By the way, wasn't he a bit gone on Hetty? Passing fancy, of course, and not deep enough to hurt anybody. Good old Brandy!'"

"There is more, Brandon, but it's of no consequence," she said, tossing the letter upon the table. "You see how the land lays."

Booth was pale with annoyance. "By Jove, Sara, what an insufferable ass he is!"

"The shoe pinches?"

"Oh, it's such perfect rot! I'm sorry on your account. Have you ever heard of such gall?"

"Oh, he is merely acting as the family spokesman. I can see them now in solemn conclave. They think it their indisputable right to select a husband for me, to pass upon him, to accept or decline him as they see fit, to say whether he is a proper man to hang up his hat and coat in the offices of Wrandall & Co."

"Do you mean to say—"

"Let's not talk about it, Brandon. It is too silly."

They fell to discussing her plans for the immediate future, although the minds of both were at work with something else.

"Now that I have served my purpose, I suppose you will not care to see so much of me," she said, as he prepared to take leave of her.

"Served your purpose? What do you mean?"

"I should have put it differently. You have been most assiduous in your efforts to force the secret from me. It has been accomplished. Now do you understand?"

"That isn't fair, Sara," he protested. "If you'll let me come to see you, in spite of what the gossips and Mr. Redmond Wrandall predict, you may be sure I will be as much in evidence as ever. I suppose I have been a bit of a nuisance, hanging on as I have."

"I admire your perseverance. More than that, I admire your courage in accepting the situation as you have. I only hope you may win her over to your way of thinking, Brandon. Goodby."

"I shall go up to town tomorrow, kit and bag. When shall I see you? We have a great deal left to talk about before I sail."

"Come when you like."

"You really want me to come?"

"Certainly."

He studied her pale, tired face for a moment, and then shook his head. "You must take care of yourself," he said. "You are unstrung. Get a good rest and—and forget certains things if you can. Everything will come out all right in the end."

"It depends on what one is willing to accept as the end," he said.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Why She Mourned.

"Boo-hoo!" sobbed the lady.

"What are you crying about?" the man asked.

"You know the bread and the jelly I sent to the fair?"

"Yes. Didn't it take a prize? Well, cheer up—those judges—"

"But it did take a prize—they both took first prizes—boo-hoo!—"

"Well, what are you crying about?"

"The bread took first prize as the best specimen of concrete, and the jelly as the best china cement!"

REVOLT IN LOUISIANA

DEMOCRATS CASTING THEIR LOT WITH PROGRESSIVES.

New Party Attracting The Southerners, Who Never Would Be Republicans, And Movement Is Spreading Rapidly.

Here is an editorial. It is not from any partisan Progressive advocate in the North. It is from a southern journal which has always supported the "one-party" rule which the Democracy forces upon the South.

Apropos of "The Louisiana Revolt" from the Democracy to the new party, the Watchman of the city of Franklin, in that state, says:

"The whole complexion of the political situation in the third district has changed completely.

"All of the Democrats who have followed the faith have left the party to cast their lot with the Progressives. Thirteen of the representatives in the legislature have deserted the old hulk, and those who are still clinging to the wreckage will soon make an attempt to swim to safety.

"Let us be patient with them. They will come across like the others as soon as they can see the disaster wrought by the party holding the seats in Washington.

"The people of the South cannot go into the Republican party. That is impossible. They would rather accept eternal punishment in the lower regions.

"But the new party opens the way for the white men of the South to assume a safe attitude toward the business interests of the country and keep the pay envelope on the move, which is essential to the general welfare. The progressive spirit is sweeping over the southern portion of Louisiana like a prairie fire, and it will eventually awaken the other section when it comes to know that the future of this country depends upon safe and sane methods of doing things."

The shadow of reality grows stronger and stronger in this phantom which has raised itself against Democratic supremacy and the "solidity" of the South.

Not only are Louisiana newspapers talking as the Franklin Watchman talks; Louisiana Democrats are acting desperately in self-defense. To head off the shift to the Progressive party they have devised one of the most oppressive primary laws ever conceived. It makes the outrageous requirement that a voter voting in a primary shall make affidavit that he will vote at the election for the candidate named in the primary. Even Tammany in all its glory never devised a machine device like this.

But the thing has a deadly kickback. Mr. John M. Parker, Progressive committeeman from Louisiana, believes that any punitive action taken by the Democratic legislature virtually "puts the new party on the map." And he is delighted beyond measure at the fact that thirty-one members of an apparently all-Democratic legislature voted against the primary attack on the Progressives. One or two of the more wealthy planters who have been supporting the Progressive movement have announced publicly that they consider it permanently established. In confirmation of this is the savage admission by New Orleans machine Democrats that repressive legislation will only force "bolters" to stay in the new party.

"The Louisiana Revolt" is spreading. The South never can go to the Republican party, but it need not hesitate, and does not hesitate, to make use of a new party.—Chicago Post.

Roosevelt To Fight.

Colonel Roosevelt has never been afraid of work. He has always had a marvelous capacity for being tremendously busy every minute of his waking day and yet being able and eager to take on more activities and expend a greater energy upon them. When he withdraws from the editorial staff of the Outlook, therefore, there is no doubt what it means—a big plunge into politics.

He means to go on with his fight against the bosses whom he has been fighting since the first Chicago convention of 1912. He means to fight President Wilson on the administration's foreign policy. He means to fight Mr. Wilson on the administration's economic and social policy at home. This he himself announces; but, because he is going to put his other work out of the way to make these fights, evidently he means to fight them tooth and nail to the last ditch.—New York Press.

The Real Question.

It Was Beveridge's Plan.

The Republican Philadelphia Ledger says Colonel Roosevelt goes back to the Taft plan for scientific tariff making. Give credit where credit is due. The tariff commission plan was advocated first by Mr. Beveridge when he was in the senate and was afterward approved by Mr. Taft.

How About the Doctors?

Women's Times of Danger

Women suffer a great deal from kidney diseases. Their indoor life, tight clothing and trying work all tend to weaken the kidneys. Woman's life also includes times of danger that are apt to leave the kidneys weak and to start attacks of backache, headache, dizziness, nervousness and urinary ills.

Prompt treatment, however will avert the danger of dropsy, gravel, or fatal Bright's disease.

Take Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended, special kidney remedy. Doan's are used successfully throughout the civilized world—have brought new life and new strength to thousands of tired, discouraged women.

An Alabama Case

Mrs. J. M. Dowling, Union Ave., Ozark, Ala., says: "My kidneys acted irregularly and I felt miserable all the time. I had such bad dizzy spells, I could hardly stand and my sight was affected. I doctored, but kept getting worse. The first day's use of Doan's Kidney Pills made me feel better and while I was finishing the third box, I passed a gravel stone the size of a pea. I have been in good health ever since."

TANGO AS CAUSE OF CRIME

Brooklyn Judge Blames Theft by Two Youths to Nights Given to Modern Dance.

In suspending sentence in the cases of two youths who had pleaded guilty to attempted grand larceny, County Judge Fawcett in Brooklyn listed "white lights and tango nights" in the catalogue of incentives to crime.

"You can't expect to dance all night," he said, "and lie abed half the day, yet always have money for your carousals, unless you steal it. And let me tell you our jails and penitentiaries are full of people with just such ideas. If your family had given you good beatings instead of money to spend, it would have been better for you."

The boys, John Colver, twenty years old, of 487 Hancock street, and Carlton Chapman, sixteen, of 362 Jefferson avenue, had been indicted for stealing money and jewelry from Adelaide Wiston, keeper of a furnished room house, where they lived for a time. They belonged to respectable families of moderate means. Both promised the judge to go home and begin again, Chapman to return to school, and Colver to work. Both wore tango pumps and silk shirts when arraigned.—New York Sun.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES—RESINOL CURED

Atlanta, Ga., April 24.—"My face was covered with pimples which defied creams, soaps and cosmetics. They were a source of constant humiliation to me. By the time I had finished a cake of resinol soap and half a jar of resinol ointment, my skin was soft as velvet, and as smooth. My friends were stunned, and everyone asked me what I had done. When I told them, I think they hardly believed it, for the transformation was simply wonderful. Since then I have been using resinol soap and shall never be without it again, for I have learned the delights of a clear, soft, beautiful complexion that may be attained by its constant use." (Signed) Miss E. P. Gaddis, 284 South Pryor St.

Resinol ointment and resinol soap stop itching instantly and speedily heal eczema, and other skin humors, dandruff, sunburn, sores, burns and piles. Sold by every druggist.—Adv.

One Hundred Years Ago.

The curious modes which women affect now began as far back as 1798, which is a period we should hardly wish to copy in most respects. A dance not at all unlike the tango was in vogue at that time, and had many exponents, who danced in loose bodices opening in a V shape from the shoulders almost to the waist. Skirts were slit and were often made of transparent gauze.

We may return to the gowns of that period, which were without waists, having simply a girdle to the bust, with skirts caught up rather short in front and slightly trained at the back. In 1800 women wore sandals and bare feet. Corset belts were only about two inches wide. Some gowns were caught up to the knee with large cameos. Soon fashion overreached itself, and then came crinolines, pointed footgear and unnaturally small waists. Are we coming to this?

Puzzled the Parson.

At a marriage service performed some time ago in a little country church in Georgia, when the minister said in a solemn tone: "Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband?" instead of the woman answering for herself, a gruff man's voice answered: "I will." The minister looked up very much perplexed, and paused. He repeated the sentence, and again the same gruff voice answered, "I will." Again the minister looked up surprised, not knowing what to make of it, when one of the groomsmen at the end of the row said: "She's deef, parson, an' I'm answerin' for her."

Died With Fortune Near.

That Benjamin Vance, prospector, whose body was found in a gully at the base of a 500-foot cliff near Palo Rito pass recently, was killed after locating a rich mineral vein is the belief of S. J. Vance of Tekemah, Neb., his brother. In the prospector's cabin were a number of high-grade ore samples, cached in a secret passageway.—Crestone (Colo.) Dispatch to Denver Post.

A Beginner.

"Are you a socialist?" "I am." "What do you understand by socialism?" "I haven't got as far along as the understanding part. I picked socialism because I don't like any of the regular brands of politics."

GET WIRELESS BY BEDSPRING

Eastern Amateur Experiments With a Novel Form of Antennae and Is Successful.

Cyrus H. Flandreaux of Peekskill, N. Y., gives the following interesting account of his experiments with a novel form of antennae for wireless telegraphy:

"There are many things used as antennae to catch the mysterious electric wives which carry our wireless messages through space, and I find that the springs of my bed serve as very efficient antennae. My room is on the second story of my house, and by using these springs as antennae I can easily read the signals sent out every night by the wireless station at Sayville, L. I., although they are not by any means so loud as when I use my outdoor antennae, which are 40 feet above ground, 60 feet long and consists of four wires on spreaders, the wires being two feet apart.

"The bedspring antennae are best for use with nearby high power stations. Sayville, L. I., is about fifty miles from Peekskill. With my outdoor antennae I continually hear the Arlington (Va.) naval station when it sends out the correct time signals at 11:55 a. m and at 9:55 p. m.; also the weather reports, Brooklyn navy yard; New London, Conn.; Cape Cod and others, including amateur stations too numerous to mention.

"I have an all-round good apparatus, I hold a station license and an operator's license, both issued by the United States government. My official call is 2 V U."

London Has Ambulances.

London, which has never yet had an ambulance, has at last ordered six of them, and expects them to do all the work for the entire city. In case of past accidents the policemen have had to commandeer the nearest wagon, depending on the generosity of the driver, as they were not able to offer him anything.

THOUGHT SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Unionville, Mo.—"I suffered from a female trouble and I got so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without holding on to something. I had nervous spells and my fingers would cramp and my face would draw, and I could not speak, nor sleep to do any good, had no appetite, and everyone thought I would not live.

Some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had taken so much medicine and my doctor said he could do me no good so I told my husband he might get me a bottle and I would try it. By the time I had taken it I felt better. I continued its use, and now I am well and strong.

"I have always recommended your medicine ever since I was so wonderfully benefitted by it and I hope this letter will be the means of saving some other poor woman from suffering."—Mrs. MARTHA SEAVEY, Box 1144, Unionville, Missouri.

Greatest of All Human Blessings

The most wonderful thing in the world is love expressed in the helpless infant. And among those aids and comforts for expectant mothers is the well known "Mother's Friend."

This is an external application to enable the abdominal muscles to become more pliant, to expand naturally without undue pain from the strain upon cords and ligaments.

In almost every settled community are women who have enjoyed the blessing of this famous remedial and helpful embrocation. Their daughters have grown up to learn of its splendid assistance.

Applied as directed upon those muscles involved it soothes the fine network of nerves with which all the muscles are supplied. Thus a great share of the pains so much dreaded may be avoided and the period of expectancy passed through in ease and comfort.

Anything that adds so much comfort must be counted as a blessing indeed.

In a little book sent by mail much useful information is given to inexperienced mothers. It tells how to use "Mother's Friend" and how to avoid caking breasts. Get a bottle to-day and write for book to Bradfield Regulator Co., 409 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Be sure you get "Mother's Friend."

The First Open Boll of Cotton

The first open boll of cotton for Chilton county was found on the farm operated by Mr. C. C. Baker, obout five miles east of town, last Sunday and was brought to this office Monday. The boll was of the King's Improved variety. It was a mature and well developed boll, showing every sign of normal cotton. Mr. Baker states that within a very short time he will have a whole field of this cotton open for picking.

Editor Union-Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words in regard to the proposed action of our Commissioners court issuing county warrants to the amount of $50,000.00 for the purpose of building the proposed state highway.

First, I wish to say that I do not know of a tax payer in this community who is not opposed to our county being encumbered in debt for generations to come, for any such purposes, and I believe that fully 90 per cent of the people of our county will protest agaiest such action by our commissioners court if they are given a chance to do so. It does seem that in matters of such importance our officials would certainly respect the wishes of the people, and not run things roughshod over them, against their wishes and over their protest.

I want to say in conclusion that I hope every voter in the county will come to the mass meeting at the court house at Clanton on August 1st; everybody come if you can possibly do so.

Respectfully,
W. H. Gillespie.

Upchurch Has A Splendid Opening

The opening of Upchurch's new drug store last Friday was a gala day for the institution, and was a true reflector of the confidence that its worthy management has won with the people in its past career of business activity. For months the public has been anxious to see the doors of this new store opened, and it may be truly said that their high expectations have been left far behind since they have had the opportunity of an actual observation.

The crowds at the opening were large from the beginning in the morning until late at night. Delightful music was rendered by local singers and musicians, and this together with delicious refreshments furnished by the management, made the day one of greatest pleasure for the visitors.

The equipment of the new store is unsurpassed, being strictly in class with the best stores in large cities. Dr. Upchurch, the owner and promoter of the institution, is to be congratulated for the admirable taste displayed in the manner of arrangement, and his efforts to give the highest class service to his patrons and friends will surely bring to him the utmost confidence and satisfaction of the trading public.

Clanton Lady Died Suddenly

On last Friday afternoon the citizens of Clanton were shocked at the audden death of Mrs. J. T. Thompson, wife of one of our prominent business men who lives in east Clanton. Mrs. Thompson seems to have been in ill health for some time prior to her death, but on that particular day had made the remark that she was feeling exceptionally well. She was left alone in the home in the afternoon, with no apprehension of danger, and later her daughter returned to the house to find her mother reposing on the bed lifeless. The remains were interred in the Clanton cemetery Saturday afternoon.

Liberty Hill

There will be singing at this place next Sunday, August 2nd commencing at 1:30. Everybody invited to come and bring your books.

Notice to Teachers

The next teachers' institute for the white teachers of Chilton county will be held at Clanton, beginning on Monday, August 10th and continue five days. Every teacher, except those holding a life certificete, will be required to attend every day, and must be there by twelve o'clock, noon Monday.

You are requested by the instructor, T. W. Smith, to bring the Elementary Manual of the Course of study and Colgrove's "The teacher and the school."

W. T. Bean, Co. Supt. Ed.

SINGING CONVENTION

With your kind permission, Mr. Editor, I will tell your readers something relative to the great Sacred Harp State Convention at Birmingham July 24, 25 and 26. We admit in the outset that it will be impossible to exactly describe every feature of that great gathering of vocalists.

The Convention was held in the Court house. On Sunday the crowd was so large that it became necessary to hold an overflow Convention, so two rooms of the building were used and were just literally packed.

Prof. Worley of Cordova was President; Miss Edna Hood of Birmingham was the Secretary. Among the noted visitors were Prof. L. F. White, of Atlanta, Prof. Cooper of Dothan, and Mrs. Bird, daughter of the well remembered Mayor B. F. White. The Densons were there,—a family of great singers and composers. Mrs. Robinson of Cullman lead a lesson which held the entire congregation spell bound. Other wonderful performances were lessons lead by some sixteen year old boys. The selections of Mrs. Owens of Cleburne county were worthy of any ones attention. But the crowning feature of all was the splendid lesson directed by Miss Isabel Jackson, a member of the Birmingham class. Although Miss Jackson attained most of her musical genius at home by her self, Prof. White admitted that he had never had a pupil that could equal her.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF CITIZENS TO BE HELD AT THE COUNTY COURT HOUSE IN CLANTON

MANY IMPORTANT MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED. SPEAKERS OF ABILITY WILL MAKE ADDRESSES. GENERAL RALLY OF PROGRESSIVE PARTY PRINCIPLES.

This is a clarion call to the citizens of Chilton to rally to the standard that will bring back to them their civil rights, and insure them a voice in matters that vitally concern their own welfare. The purpose of the meeting is primarily to select delegates to the Progrssive state convention in Birmingham August 5th. But there are other things just at this time that demand consideration at the hands of everyone that would pose as a guardian of the principles of civic righteousness, and champion the unselfish administration of popular government.

The Progressive party intends to show its fidelity to the people by giving consideration to these things; by inviting the people themselves to participate in its deliberations; by listening to the mingling voices of the voters in their petition for consideration; by joining in one united effort with the good of all at heart, to realize the best that may come from an honorable government.

There is a broad invitation extended, urging everybody to come to this meeting. It is to your interest to be here and get the sentiment of the meeting; get it firmly fixed in your mind that Pronressiveism is your frien, and go away with the determination to cherish and cultivate this friendship to the ultimate glory of a championship of peoples rights—to ALL THE PEOPLE.

The Alabama Good Roads Association is making every effort possible to see that Good Roads Days, August 14th-15th is observed in every county in the State and the work that is done shall be systematic and of value.

Mr. J. A. Rountree, Secretary of the Alabama Good Roads Association has sent out the following letters of instructions and suggestions for observing Good Roads Days. This letter has been addressed to Probate Judges, mayors, road officials and presidents of good roads organization, etc. It is as follows.

Birmingham, Ala. July 24th, 1914
Judge E. B. Deason
Clanton Ala.

Dear Sir:—we are glad to know that you and the people of your county are taking an active interest in Good Roads Days, August 14th-15th. Hope that you will arouse the people in the various road districts and communities and let them do systematic work on these days.

The Alabama Good Roads Association has the following suggestions to make in regard to observing Good Roads Days.

Let each community organize by road or school districts, appoint the best road builder in the neighborhood as boss for these days and then turn out and work loyally under his directions.

The following suggestions are offered as work that can be done by volunteer workers.

Remove logs, rocks, stumps and stones from the roadway; fill holes, preferably with good earth, cover stretches of sand with clay or gravel; drain wet places in the roadway; scrape off and outwarbs sod margins where they hold the water in the traveled track. When drained and graded clay may be covered with sand or gravel, but the gravel should not contain any clay unless it is to be placed on sand. Culverts may be repaired or new culverts put in. Road drags (of planks or split logs) should be made and arrangements perfected for using them after rains, throughout the season on all clay or loamy soils.

Dont try to do too much.

Dont start more than you can finish. You can not build a macadm road, nor very long stretches of gravel road in two days.

Dont haul gravel onto roads that have not been properly graded or drained.

Dont grade roads that have not been properly staked out on correct lines.

Dont plow long stretches of road and leave them impassable.

Dont scrape sods onto the traveled highway and leave them for passing vehicles to smooth down.

The Alabama Goob Roads Association made these suggestions, hoping that it will be of benefit to the volunteer road workers of the State and that a great success will be made of these days, and swell the enthusiasm for better roads, we are.

Yours very truly
Alabama Good Roads Assn.

Rudolph Cleckler Died Sunday

On last Sunday in Birmingham occurred the death of Mr. Rudolph Cleckler, who lived about five miles north of Clanton. Mr. Cleckler had been suffering with an ailment for some days, and was carried to Birmingham Sunday for an operation. The trouble proved to be appendicitis, and soon after the operation was performed death resulted. His remains were brought to Clanton Monday morning, and interred in New Salem cemetery. Mr Cleckler leaves a wife and small family of children.

Union Springs

Prof Lowery of Montevallo will begin a singing school here next Monday, Aug 3. All are invited to attend. Mr. Lowery's work will mainly be teaching the children the songs of the church.

Some of our people went to Birmingham Saturday to the great Singing Convention.

Mr. Rufus Davenport of Louisiana has been here on a visit; he is a former Chiltonite.

Oh! What a scramble when Mr. Wilson shakes the plum tree in Alabama, but the plums are so few that many will be disappointed. Republicanism gave us high prices, and those prices continue, but we have no complaint from the other party so we guess it is quite satisfactory.

Chilton County S. S. Convention

The chilton county Sunday school convention representing Sunday Schools of all denominations was held at Mulberry church near Thorsby, July 23-24. At the opening session Dr. J. M. Shelburne President of Howard College gave suggestions on "Helping Every Sunday School." The church was filled at the very first session and a large number of superintendents and pastors were present. The reports of the Department Superintendents show 430 miles traveled during the year; 18 Sunday School visited; 26 speeches made; 272 letters written.

The district presidents reports showed district No. 6 a gold star district. Every Sunday school in the district represented at a convention during the year, made a written report and every Sunday school made a contribution, district No.1 lacked 3 school which were re-organized since the district conventiont. The other district reports were not so encouraging. Two of these district presidsnts reported 80 miles traveled; 10 speeches made; 263 letters written.

The state association was represented by Mrs. S. P. Moore, Miss Myra Batchelder and Prof. R. D. Webb Field Secretary of the Alabama Sunday School Association.

Miss Myra Batchelder.

Cotton Crop Condition

The average condition of the cotton crop as compiled from reports of correspondents of date of July 22nd is 79.1 percent of normal. This is a loss since the government's report of June 25th of five tenths of one percent. The average July deterioration is seven tenths of one percent. The ten-year average condition for July 25th is 80 percent of normal.

Reports are in many instances quite at variance. In all parts of the belt there is some excellent cotton, some that is neither good nor bad and some very poor cotton. The point of view often determines a correspondents realy. It is quite evident that the early season's irregularity has not been overcome and probably throughout the season uneven conditions will prevail.

In Georgia, Alabama, and Southern Mississippi the crop is rather early as a whole notwithstanding a considerable percentage of young cotton. In southern parts of these states cotton is begginning to open and southwestern Georgia and southern Alabama will likely contribute liberally to an early movement to market.

Boll weevils are few in numbers and there is a general absence of serious complaint.

In Texas there is much small cotton, some incipient shedding as a result of dry weather, and a general approach toward acute drouth damage which will unquestionably set in without rain at once. The entire western belt is beginning to need rain and will shortly be clamoring for it.

Broadly speaking the territory east of the Mississippi river has a small plant which is well fruited and will thrive with well distributed moderate rains. In Texas and Oklahoma the plant is not generally well fruited for the season and in some instances is very unsatisfactory in this respect.

The twenty percent of June cotton in the Atlantic states is growing well and seems quiet thrifty at this time.

Minooka

There will be an Odd Fellow's picnic at Minooka on Aug. 1st. Everybody invited to come.

PROHI'S LOSE OUT IN TEXAS ELECTION

RESOLUTIONS FOR STATEWIDE PROHIBITION LOSE BY LARGE MAJORITY.

ALL "DRY" ENTRIES LOSE

Ferguson Leads Dry Ticket Nominee for Governor of Texas by 40,000. Hobby Leads for Lieutenant-Governor.

Dallas, Tex.—With more than three-fourths of the total vote cast in the democratic primary election returned here, it was regarded as certain that James E. Ferguson of Temple-anti-prohibitionist, farmer-lawyer-banker, had been nominated for governor by a majority of perhaps 40,000 over Thomas H. Ball of Houston, former congressman, who was chosen by a prohibition state convention to make the race. It also appeared certain that the demand for submission of a statewide prohibition amendment to the state constitution had been defeated by a majority of 30,000.

Returns also showed that no prohibitionist on the state ticket who had an anti-prohibition opponent had been nominated, except as to the two congressmen-at-large, which result is in doubt.

The result also was in doubt as to lieutenant-governor and commissioner of agriculture. In the former race W. P. Hobby, newspaper man of Beaumont, was leading B. B. Sturgeon of Paris. H. A. Halbert of Coleman and Fred W. Davis of Gainesville had almost an even number of votes for commissioner.

Democratic nomination in Texas is equivalent to election.

HOME RULE FIGHT IS ON

Nationalists Clash With Troops at Dublin and Four Are Killed. Woman a Victim.

Dublin.—Three men and one woman are dead and more than 60 persons are in the hospital wounded as the result of a battalion of the King's Own Scottish Borderers firing into a mob in the streets of Dublin. Seven of the wounded are expected to die. Among them are three women and a boy of 10.

The affray was the result of a gun-running exploit of the nationalist volunteers, aided by a mob composed largely of women and youths. A consignment of rifles, said to number 10,000, was landed at Howth, nine miles from Dublin, from a private yacht. The nationalist volunteers cut the telegraph wires and stopped travel on the Dublin roads, and, according to reports, sent away most of the rifles, together with 70,000 rounds of ammunition in motor cars.

A battalion of the King's Own Scottish Borderers was ordered to capture the arms when the authorities heard the volunteers were bringing them into the city. The soldiers encountered a detachment of volunteers at Clonmell bridge. Soon a great crowd collected and followed the troops, jeering them and cheering for John Redmond and home rule.

Finally the mob began throwing bottles and stones, injuring several soldiers. To the attack the battalion replied with a scattered fusillade. In an instant the street was covered with wounded, while terrified men, women and children ran in all directions.

AUSTRIA AND SERVIA SPLIT

Servia's Reply to Austria's Ultimatum May Bring on War—Ministers Given Passports.

London.—Developments appear to furnish new proof that Austria is determined to make war on Servia. The possibilities of a general European war seem greater than ever have confronted the present generation.

The Servian reply to the Austro-Hungarian ultimatum was an acceptance of almost all the imperious demands, except that Austrian officials shall participate in the investigation and fix the responsibility for the anti-Austrian propaganda. Servia proposed an appeal to the powers at The Hague for the settlement of that feature.

Notwithstanding this humiliating surrender, which was more than Europe expected of the proud little nation, the Austrian government gave the Servian minister his passports, which may be construed as a virtual declaration of war

Austria committed an act of war by arresting the chief of the Servian general staff, Gen Putnik, near Budapest.

A formal declaration of war is not expected, because Servia is not a party to The Hague convention, which requires this.

SOUTHERN R. R. IS FLEECED

Useless Branches Are Sold to It—Says V. & S. W. Offered for $5,000,000. Southern Paid $6,500,000.

Washington. — Charges that the Southern railway has been imposed upon, much as the New Haven is said to have been, through the unloading upon it of branches of little worth at fabulous prices, added an unexpected feature to the investigation which a senate subcommittee is making of alleged discriminations against southern ports in coal rates.

B. L. Dulaney of Bristol, Tenn., made the charges in connection with an explanation of why he believed the Morgan interests dominated the Southern railway and directed the action of its officials.

He finished his direct statement to the committee, but will go on the stand to undergo cross-examination by attorneys for the Southern railway.

Mr. Dulaney said he once offered to sell the control of the Virginia & Southwestern railway to the Southern for $500,000. A bond issue of $1,000,000 stood against the line. His offer was refused, he said, but later Henry McHarg sold the line to the Southern for about $6,500,000 with a profit estimated at $4,000,000.

The Knoxville & Bristol railway, sold to the Southern for $500,000, Mr. Dulaney said, was offered for $40,000, and he did not buy because he did not think the line worth that amount.

WOULD TALK ON TREATY

Roosevelt Requests Permission to Appear Before Senate Committee on Colombian Treaty.

Washington.—A request from Col. Theodore Roosevelt for an opportunity to appear before the senate foreign relations committee in opposition to the Colombian treaty was considered by the committee, without action, however, as Chairman Stone was unable to marshal a quorum. Col. Roosevelt wrote Chairman Stone he wanted to tell why he opposes paying $25,000,000 to Colombia for the partition of Panama.

"I replied to Col. Roosevelt's letter personally, saying that I would submit the matter of hearings on the Colombian treaty and his appearance before it to the committee," said Senator Stone.

The Missouri senator said he had not set a date for another meeting of the committee, but that he would try to get the members together soon. The text of Mr. Roosevelt's letter he would not make public, because it was addressed to the committee.

Later Senator Stone made public Col. Roosevelt's letter, in which the former president wrote:

"If there is any intention of your committee to act favorably on the proposed treaty with Colombia, by which we are to pay Colombia $25,000,000 and to express regret for the action taken in the past, I respectfully request to be heard thereon.

"I was president throughout the time of the negotiations by which we acquired the right to build the Panama canal. Every act of this government in that connection was taken by my express direction, or else in carrying out the course of conduct, I, as president, had laid down."

AGREE ON COTTON MEASURE

Washington. — House and senate conferees on the cotton futures bill agreed at a private conference at the home of Senator Hoke Smith on the Lever bill, which permits trading in cotton futures when in standardized grades of cotton, but through a prohibitive tax of one cent a pound or $500 a contract stamps out of existence "future" trading on unstandardized grades.

The secretary of agriculture is to fix the standards, taking middlings as the basis. Cotton exchanges are required to keep exact records of all transactions and to hold such records open to inspection by agents of the department. Heavy fines are imposed for violation of this provision for publicity. The law is to be made to apply to foreign as well as interstate commerce in cotton.

AUSTRIA AND SERVIA ON VERGE OF WAR

CONFLICT MAY INVOLVE ALL EUROPE—SERVIA MUST MAKE AMENDS FOR DEATH.

ULTIMATUM FROM AUSTRIA

Both Germany and Russia Are Preparing to Take Action—May Mean Much Dreaded Conflict of Triple Alliance.

Vienna.—A war which may involve the whole of Europe is threatened as the result of the slaying of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and Austria's peremptory note to Servia demanding that the government of that country, in which the slaying occurred, give a satisfactory apology and disclaimer of all connection with the murder.

The answer must be made soon. There is no notice of its coming; and an extremely grave crisis has been precipitated. Both Germany and Russia are preparing to take action.

Baron von Giesine (Gieslingen, the Austro-Hungarian minister at Belgrade, has been instructed to leave Servia with the entire legation staff if the Servian government has not notified him that it agrees without delay to comply with the demands of Austria's note.

Although the peremptory character of the ultimatum and the brief time allowed to Servia to reply came as a surprise to the Austrian public, the government's action meets with universal approval.

The relations between Servia and Austria were felt to have become intolerable. It was believed in Servia that the time was ripe for the disintegration of the Austro-Hungarian empire and that Austria would suffer anthing rather than run the risk of a European war. Hence Servian statesmen aspired to bring Bosnia and other Austrian Slav provinces under Servian rule.

Germans and Austrians have for several years attributed the bad trade in the monarchy and the crushing taxation caused by repeated mobilizations to Servian hostile intrigues, and there is a feeling of relief, therefore, that matters now have been brought to a head and that Servia will be settled with once, for all.

DEFENSE FALLS INTO TRAP

First Mme. Caillaux Turns Over Letters That Caused Killing—They Prove Harmless.

Paris.—The defense in the trial of Mme. Henriette Caillaux, charged with the murder of Gaston Calmette, editor of the Figaro, was caught in a trap innocently set by Mme. Gueydan, once the wife of the priconer's husband.

The principal argument of Maitre Labori, counsel for Mme. Caillaux, has been that his client was driven to shoot M. Calmette through fear that two letters, of which she was aware photographic reproductions existed, would be published by M. Calmette and the secrets of her inner life thereby made public.

This argument, it is said, will be reduced to nothing by the reading of the letters, which Mme. Gueydan reluctantly gave over to Maitre Labori. She declined to receive them back. Replying to a question by Labori as to what she desired done with them, the former wife of M. Caillaux said:

"I do not care what you do with them. Publish all of them if you wish to do so."

Their reading now is considered as inevitable.

Mme. Gueydan's counsel, S. G. Archibald, said concerning the letters:

"They are innocuous. They contain several disparaging references to Mme. Gueydan, then Caillaux's wife, and consider the possibility of his obtaining a divorce from her. This, however, he says, would have to be after the elections. They are completed by allusions to local politics of no importance whatever."

EXPRESS FEAR OF CIVIL WAR

Trade Stagnated in Ulster While Troops Are Being Armed—Indorse Carson's Plan.

Belfast, Ireland.—Official announcement of the failure of the Buckingham Palace conference on home rule caused no excitement here, as telegrams from the Ulster leaders had been received previously.

The leading business men, clergymen, bankers and manufacturers who had declared for an anti-home rule movement were unanimous in indorsing the uncompromising attitude of Sir Edward Carson and Capt. James Craig in demanding the total and permanent exclusion of Ulster from the workings of the home rule bill.

The business community is suffering severely through stagnation in trade and tight money. There is an unwillingness to order new stocks of goods with the fear of civil war hanging overhead.

CLAFLIN CREDITORS MEET

Will Elect Committee to Consider Report of Receivers on Assets. Judge Holt to Preside.

New York.—When the creditors of the failed H. B. Claflin company meet here to elect a committee which under the courts ruling will have the power to accept or reject any settlement or proposition the receivers may ultimately make, counsel for international banks, trust companies and mercantile houses representing a capital of many millions of dollars will demand representation on this committee.

The Creditors' Audit & Adjustment association, a credit men's protective organization, composed of these international houses and individuals, the statement announced, have engaged as counsel Frederick W. Lehman to conduct the fight for representation. "They have prepared in other ways to fight any attempt to deny them a voice in the make-up of the committee," the statement says. Mr. Lehmann was one of the United States commissioners to the Mexican mediation conference in Niagara Falls, Ontario. He was in New York, conferring with Claflin creditors who will be present or represented at the meeting at which George C. Holt, a former federal judge, appointed as special master, will preside.

MME. CAILLAUX NO. 1 TALKS

Puts Present Mme. Caillaux Upon Rack—Letters in Case Are Given to Labori.

Paris.—Mme. Bertha Gueydan, Joseph Caillaux's first wife, a slender woman with black eyes and wasted cheeks, faced her former husband, the ex-premier of France, and put upon the rack the woman who had won him from her—Mme. Henriette Caillaux, now on trial charged with the murder of Gaston Calmette.

The emotional climax of the trial was reached when other private letters were handed over by Mme. Gueydan to Fernard Labori, counsel for Mme. Caillaux.

"Here is the packet of letters I took at Mamers," said Mme. Gueydan, giving them to M. Labori. "I will consider with Maitre Chenu what shall be done," said M. Labori, "but whatever we decide, the jury may rest assured that they will be apprised of their contents as is their right and duty to expect."

"Among them," added Mme. Gueydan, "are the two letters referred to as the private letters."

Mme. Gueydan then left the box. Her remarkable personality had completely dominated the whole procedure. For three hours she spoke and her voice carried to the remotest corner of the room.

In that time she laid bare many of the secrets of her life with M. Caillaux. She told of his liason and of his throwing himself at her knees to ask her pardon. She described her methods of defense against what she termed "the machiavellian maneuvers of an unfaithful husband." She testified that he even threatened her life.

Then she left him, hoping he would follow her, but he did not, and she added, with a flash of her eyes and a tightening of her lips:

"You know why."

She gained the sympathy of those in the court room with telling phrases. There were murmurs of applause, despite the admonitory rappings of the judge and threats to clear the court.

TO RID NAVY OF UNDESIRABLES

SUMMARY DISMISSAL INSTEAD OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DESERTERS.

DRASTIC ORDER BY DANIELS

The Secretary Believes the New Order Will Raise the Standard of the Navy.

Washington.—Abolition of imprisonment for desertion from the navy in times of peace was ordered by Secretary Daniels. Bluejackets who now overstay their leave or commit similar breaches of discipline will be dismissed summarily instead of being sent to prison while men who become dissatisfied and want to quit may have an honorable discharge by merely refunding certain enlistment allowances.

Secretary Daniels, in a statement announcing the new order said: "Enlistments in the navy always have been for a definite period—at present four years—and it always has been difficult, at times impossible, for men to terminate their contract of enlistment by honorable discharge before the enlistment expired. Absence from his ship or duty after having been granted leave, made a man a deserter and conviction involved a prison sentence.

"After thorough consideration and after a referendum in which the opinion of many of the highest officers were obtained, the secretary became convinced this situation was not in keeping with modern business ideas.

"The old plan involving long imprisonment created among enlisted men a feeling that during their term of enlistment if they desired to leave the navy, they were as if in bondage. Furthermore, this feeling doubtless in a large measure, accounted for more absence over leave or absence without leave, and other offenses which would never be tolerated in any well organized business.

"The secretary recognizes that the navy is in tife of peace a large business organization, that any feeling by enlisted men of compulsory detention or bondage is undesirable, that the service offers so many advantages, especially to those desiring to make of it a life work or secure a practical education, that it can keep fully recruited with men who are willing to obey and the department, therefore, holds that overstayed leave, drunkenness and similar offenses indicate merely that the offender is unfit for the service.

"In order not to be too drastic, the order permits commanding officers to hold a first offender on probation on reduced pay for periods of six months or 12 months, but on repeating the offense he is to be discharged.

"The naval prisons and naval barracks last year cost about $1,000,000. Under the new plan this cost will be greatly reduced, and before a great while will be very small."

VILLAREAL SCORES CHURCH.

Says Confessional and Sacristy Have Become Menace in Mexico.

Tampico, Mex.—A decree limiting the scope of the Roman Catholic church in the State of Nueva Laredo on the ground of public health, morality and justice was issued by Antonio I. Villareal, governor and military commander.

The decree issued in Monterey makes the following orders for the government of Catholic schools and churches.

"1. All foreign Catholic priests and Jesuits of whatever nationality will be expelled from the State of Nuevo Leon.

"2. Of the remaining Catholic priests, those who cannot promise absolute abstemiousness from politics shall be expelled.

"3. Only priests who have permission to do so will officiate.

"4. Confession is prohibited.

"5. The public is prohibited from entering the sacristy.

"6. Church bells shall ring only to celebrate fiestas, in honor of the country, or for triumphs of the arms of the constitutionalists.

"7. All Catholic colleges shall be closed which do not obey programs and texts ordered by officials and which do not have at their head some professor who is a graduate of the normal schools of the country, who will be responsible to the government for any infraction of the rules.

"8. Any infraction of these laws will be punishable by a fine of $100 to $500, and arrest and imprisonment from two to four months, or both fine and imprisonment. In event of a second offense the school will be closed."

Prohibition Loses in Texas.

Dallas, Texas. — Results of the democratic primary election in Texas follow, these returns being incomplete, and as is customary in this State, where the results are known without compiling the full vote, no complete returns will be available until the official returns are made to the democratic State chairman, which will be in two or three weeks. Submission of State wide prohibition was defeated by 15,000 to 20,000 majority. James E. Ferguson, anti-prohibitionist, nominated for governor by 30,000 to 40,000.

ECZEMA ON CHILD'S FACE

Marpleton, W. Va.—"When my little boy was one year old he broke out in little fine pimples all over his face. At times they would dry up and get scaly and peel off, then they would break out fresh again. He would scratch them until his face would be raw. The eczema looked angry and ran blood and corruption. His face was red and disfigured. He seemed restless and I had to be up with him the greater part of the nights.

"I applied various remedies without result. He continued to break out with the eczema until I sent for some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used them and the first application eased him. In ten days he was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. Lizzie Mollohan, Jan. 2, 1914.

Absurd Comment.

Theodore Dreiser, the realist, said of an idealist at the Players' club in New York:

"The man's comments on life are ludicrous and absurd. They remind me of the old lady's comment on the work of the militant suffragettes.

"After the suffragettes in London had slashed a Valesquez, a Bellini and a Gentile, the old lady said, with a kind of saintly expression:

"'But, thank goodness, they're all old pictures that are being slashed.'"

Long-Lived Family.

The record for longevity is held by the Garrett family of Stranraer, Scotland, the oldest member of which, Mr. James Garrett, has just passed away. Mr. Garrett claimed to be the oldest fisherman in Scotland. A native of Stranraer, he was almost a hundred years old. His mother and father, who were also natives of the district, lived until they were one hundred and one hundred and three years respectively. His oldest surviving son is now well over seventy years of age.

Carelessness Cause of Fires.

More than 50 per cent of all fires are caused by simple carelessness, which is unnecessary and criminal. Repairs to dilapidated buildings, the removal of all fire breeding material, care in burning weeds and rubbish, the placing of engines at a safe distance from buildings, the removal of oily waste, proper ventilation—in brief, plain common sense, will minimize the danger from this class of fires.

PRIZE FOOD.
Palatable, Economical, Nourishing.

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for several years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts, I was almost a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

LESSONS IN DOMESTIC SCIENCE

HOW TO MAKE A FIRELESS COOKER.

In all the talk that fireless cooking has recently created throughout the country, there has been little or no mention of the fact that the principle has been known almost as long as cooking itself, and that its application is within the reach of every household. Every woman who wraps a bottle of water in a flannel in order to keep it hot uses the principle, and everyone who has a kettle and a box big enough to put it in, can make a fireless cooker. Its use means less fuel burned and more liberty for the housewife.

Fireless cooking is a convenient but inaccurate term. It does not mean that one can cook without fire, but that one can cook with less fire. The food has first to be well heated in the ordinary way. It is then so thoroughly protected that the heat does not escape for a long time. In consequence the food continues to cook long after the fire is out in the range and the housewife gone about her other affairs.

There are many good fireless cookers—or to speak more accurately, cooking boxes—on the market, but it is quite possible to make one instead of buying it. The first necessity is the kettle to hold the food. The size of this naturally determines the size of the box in which it is to be placed. Between the kettle and the sides of the box there should be plenty of room for the packing which prevents the heat from escaping. For example, a shoe box measuring 15 by 15 by 28 inches is perhaps as easily obtained as any other kind. This may be divided into two compartments each holding a kettle capable of containing six or eight quarts. In general, it may be said that for a kettle of this size, the box should measure about fifteen inches every way.

The question of the material to be used in packing the space between the kettle and the box is an important one. Asbestos and mineral wool are undoubtedly excellent, but they are also undoubtedly expensive. Satisfactory substitutes can be had at little or no cost. After experimenting with hay, excelsior, ground cork and paper, investigators from the United States department of agriculture decided that crumpled paper was the most practical. It not only holds the heat well, but is clean and odorless, and does not require a cloth lining for the box. Single sheets of newspaper should be crushed between the hands and then pounded down until there is a layer at least two inches deep over the bottom of the box. Then the kettle should be placed in the center and crushed paper packed as solidly as possible all around it, a vacant space about two inches high being left at the top of the box. For this space a cushion of some heavy goods like denim and stuffed with paper or excelsior must be provided. If the packing is done carefully and solidly, the "nest" will keep its shape and the kettle can be removed and replaced without trouble.

The box itself should have a hinged cover fastened down securely in front by some kind of clasp. An ordinary clamp window fastener answers this purpose admirably. In order to get the best results the kettles or other utensils should have straight sides and flat covers with deep rims shutting well down, but this is not indispensable. It should be remembered, however, that every little thing, no matter how trivial it may seem, which aids in retaining the heat is an advantage.

It is obvious that the "fireless cooker" is better fitted for long, slow cooking than for articles that need a hot fire. It does particularly well, therefore, with cereals and soups—and soup is a valuable addition to one's diet too much neglected in this country.

Another advantage which the box possesses springs from the fact that the protracted cooking which it makes feasible does much to render the cheaper and tougher cuts of meat as palatable as the more expensive. There is, in fact, no doubt that with a little forethought and experience, a skilful cook can save fuel and time by "fireless cooking."

As in other things, experience is the best teacher. There are, however, one or two fundamental rules which the beginner will do well to bear in mind. In the first place it must be remembered that the more heat that is put into the cooker, the more will be retained to do the cooking. The box, therefore, gives the best results when it is filled to its capacity. If this is not possible other material which holds heat well should be put in to fill the vacant space. Several ways of doing this will readily suggest themselves. For instance, a smaller kettle containing the food may be placed in the large one that is partly filled with boiling water; or a number of dishes may be put in together. When this is done, however, care must be taken to arrange the combination so that all may be cooked at the same time. If the box is opened to take out one, the others must be reheated. Still another thing to remember is that in the fireless cooker there is no chance for liquids to evaporate. Consequently not so much liquid should be put in as in ordinary cooking.

To guide the housewife in her experiments with the cooking box the department of agriculture tested a newspaper-packed box by placing in it a kettle of boiling water at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit. After four hours this had fallen to 172 degrees Fahrenheit, after eight hours to 155 degrees Fahrenheit.

The following recipes, too, are practical examples of what can be done:

For making soup stock or broth with the cooking box, the soup bones should be well split up, or the soup meat should be cut into small pieces. Wash the meat, place it in the kettle, and cover with cold water. Bring to a boil on the stove and boil 15 minutes. Do this at night if the soup is to be used at noon the next day. Place in the cooker overnight. In the morning remove meat and bones from soup. Strain and remove fat. Return soup and meat to kettle, adding whatever seasoning is desired. Bring to a boiling point again and return it to the box and let remain until noon. This stock may be used as a foundation for several soups, such as vegetable soup, clear soup, or noodle soup.

Dried lima beans, peas and lentils make excellent soup without meat. Since they require long-continued cooking, they are well adapted to fireless-cooker methods. These dried vegetables, cooked with less water and no meat, rubbed through a coarse sieve and made into the proper consistency with milk or thin cream, and seasoned to taste, make so-called "cream" soups. Soups made by thinning the cooked legumes with water and seasoning with onion (fried until pale brown), with celery tops, and other vegetables are very palatable also.

Brown Fricassee of Chicken.—Joint the chicken and brown in fat after rolling in flour. As pieces brown pack them in the kettle. When all are browned make a gravy in the skillet where the browning was done. Add this to the chicken with enough boiling water to cover. Salt and pepper. Boil 20 minutes. Place in box over night. Reheat and return to box until noon. This length of time in the box will reduce the toughest old fowl on the farm to a state where the meat will fall from the bones.

Roast Meat.—Prepare a four-pound rib roast as for oven roasting. It can be tied more compactly if the ribs are removed. Place in pan in very hot oven for half an hour, or sear the roast until brown in a frying pan and then place it in the oven for 20 minutes. Have ready a small pail into which the roast will fit as closely as possible. Place the seared and heated roast in this and set it into the large kettle used in the box, with enough boiling water to come well up around the small pail. Place in the box for three hours.

Roasting Tough Poultry.—Many housewives make a practise of stewing chicken or turkey which they think is likely to be tough, and the practise is a good one. It is, however, much easier to boil for 15 or 20 minutes, and then put the fowl, boiling hot, into the cooker and let it remain ten hours. It should then be drained, wiped dry, and stuffed, if stuffing is desired, and roasted long enough to brown it well.

Boiled Dinner.—Cook a piece of corned beef and a piece of salt pork in the cooker overnight. In the morning prepare all the vegetables it is desired to use in the kettle with meat. The greater the variety the better the dinner. Boil ten or fifteen minutes and return to the cooker. It is best to leave potatoes until an hour and a quarter before serving, as they are the only vegetables likely to suffer from too long a time in the cooker. When they are added bring the contents of the kettle to the boiling point again. The liquid from the boiling dinner makes a good soup if the corned beef and salt pork have been parboiled to remove some of the salt.

Boston Beans and Other Dried Vegetables.—In cooking dry beans, the time required either in the oven or the cooking box will vary with the length of time the beans have been kept; the older the beans the more cooking required. Soak one quart of beans overnight; in the morning drain them and cover with cold water and heat to boiling. Let boil until the skins will burst when touched very lightly, adding one-fourth teaspoon of soda a few minutes before taking from the fire. Drain through a colander. Return to the kettle and add one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of mustard, three tablespoonfuls molasses, and one-half pound of salt pork, washed and scraped, and cover with boiling water. Let boil 20 or 30 minutes, then place in the cooking box. If the beans are new, six hours in the box will be long enough. Old beans require longer cooking and should be left in the box overnight, then reheated in the morning, and returned to the box. They will be ready to serve for the midday meal.

Dried vegetables, such as peas, beans, lima beans, lentils or corn may be soaked in cold water several hours, and then after the preliminary boiling of a few minutes kept from six to twelve hours in the cooker. They may be cooked with salt pork, and thus prepared they are liked by many, or they may be cooked with vegetable oil, as olive oil, or they may be cooked plain and seasoned with salt, pepper, and butter or cream. The longer, then, dry vegetables are cooked in the box the more palatable and the more digestible they will be.

EXAMINER MAKES REPORT ON AUBURN

AFFAIRS OF SCHOOL IN GOOD SHAPT—TREASURER'S BOOKS ACCURATELY KEPT.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

Disbursements of the Alabama Polytechnic institute at Auburn for the period extending from June 1, 1911, to May 31, 1914, were $400,105.43, according to the report of Examiner of Public Accounts J. T. Gorman on the books and accounts of Miss Allie Glenn, treasurer of the institution. Examiner Gorman filed his report in the office of the governor.

The examiner reported that the books of the treasurer were accurately kept, the various vouchers having been numbered consecutively and filed for the disbursement of all funds.

The report contains a detailed account of the source from which all revenues are received by the college, the principal sources being the Morril fund, the State college fund and the horticultural fund.

The value of the lands and buildings of the institution is $500,000, according to Examiner Gorman, and the insurance carried on the buildings is $300,000. The examiner declares that the year 1913-14 was the most prosperous and successful in the history of the institution, the enrollemnt being 820, with 16 States, Mexico, Peru, Cuba, Guatemala and China being represented in the student body.

Solvent Credits Taxable.

Declaring that the State of Alabama has a right to collect and ad valorem tax on solvent credits, the supreme court ruled in favor of the State in two test cases brought before the supreme body from the city court of Birmingham. The court decided that the State can collect this tax on all solvent credits except those secured by recorded mortgages, deeds of trust and written contracts of conditional sales, which have paid a privilege tax for their recordation.

This decision was a sweeping victory for the State and will mean that much additional revenue will be forthcoming each year from this source. It will enable the State tax commission to carry on the work of assessing taxes against solvent credits and will give that body a larger field of operation.

All the members of the supreme court, with the exception of Chief Justice J. C. Anderson, concurred in the decision. The case was taken up at the special session of the court, which began last week, and the members of the court spent several days in discussing the case.

Sheriff Lane Not Guilty.

Sheriff John W. Lane, of Chambers county, was not guilty of the charges brought against him by the State and he will continue to discharge the duties of his office, according to a decision announced by the supreme court of Alabama. Sheriff Lane was charged with corruption in office and with the commission of offenses involving moral turpitude. He was tried before the supreme court.

The court was divided on the case, four justices being of the opinion that the State had failed to establish the charges against Sheriff Lane and three dissenting. Justices Sayre, Mayfield, Somerville and Gardner decided in favor of Sheriff Lane, with Chief Justice Anderson and Justices McClellan and deGraffenreid dissenting from the majority of the court.

The impeachment proceedings against Sheriff Lane were brought at the request of the governor, following the filing of information with him charging the Chambers official with the commission of various illegal acts. The most serious charge against him was that he collected money for fines without having issued warrants for arrest. Moreover, it was claimed that this money did not reach the county treasury.

Supreme Court Takes Recess.

The supreme court declared recess until the November term and no more sessions of the body will be held until that time unless an extraordinary situation should arise. Nearly all the members of the court will leave within the next few days for various resorts to obtain recreation and rest. The court has been grinding away longer than usual because of the extra work brought before it recently. Twenty decisions and 19 rulings on applications for re-hearings were handed down on the last day by the court.

H. H. Smith, Assistant Solicitor.

Harry H. Smith, of Mobile, was appointed as assistant solicitor of Mobile county, to succeed T. J. Touart, whose term has expired. The appointment was announced by Governor O'Neal. Mr. Smith is a son of Gregory L. Smith, one of the State's most prominent lawyers. Practically all the members of the Mobile bar endorsed Mr. Smith for the place and in addition many leading citizens of that city recommended that he be appointed. Other applicants for the place were Mr. Touart, incumbent, and J. P. Courtney.

Commission May Attend Dedication.

The Alabama commission appointed recently by Governor O'Neal to raise funds for the purpose of erecting an Alabama building at the Panama-Pacific exposition, which will be held next year at San Francisco, may go to San Francisco during the summer to be present at the dedication of a site for the Alabama building, it was announced by Lee Cowart, secretary of the commission.

J. H. Hicks, of Talladega, is chairman, and if he decides that the commission should go, the trip will be made within the next six weeks. If the whole commission does not go, it is certain that at least three members will make the trip. Governor O'Neal may accompany the commission to California.

The commission is composed of J. H. Hicks, Talladega, chairman; W. L. Henderson, Mobile; G. G. Crawford and O. P. Bartlett, Birmingham; F. G. Salter, Montgomery; Louis B. Farley, Montgomery, treasurer, and Lee Cowart, Birmingham, secretary.

Pensions for Fourth Quarter.

As a result of the labors of the State board of pension examiners in purging the rolls of more than 1,200 illegal pensioners, Confederate veterans this year will receive 45 per cent of the pension money due for the fourth quarter, according to an announcement made at the office of Auditor Brooks Smith.

The paying of pensions to bona fide veterans of the Confederate army for the fourth quarter of this year will mark the first time since 1911 that pensioners have received any money for that quarter, inasmuch as the fund, under an act of the last legislature, has heretofore been exhausted with the payment of pensions for the third quarter.

More than 1,000 other pensioners have been cited by the special master to appear before the State pension board at a special meeting to be held September 7, and show cause why their names should not be dropped from the pension rolls. A regular meeting of the board will be held August 14, but no pensioners have been cited to appear at that meeting.

In the purging of the pension rolls it has been discovered that the State has been paying pensions to 325 men who deserted the Confederate army. It is thought that this number will be doubled by the time the board concludes its work.

$100,000 For Negroes.

Thirty per cent of a fund of $300,000 voted by Congress for the promotion of agricultural education in Alabama will be appropriated to the negro institutions if the recommendations of a special committee that visited the Tuskegee institute are approved by Governor O'Neal. According to the members of this committee, these recommendations will be made, but it is up to the governor to divide the fund.

The committee, it is understood, will suggest that 15 per cent of the fund will be appropriated to the Tuskegee institute and that an equal sum be given other negro agricultural institutes of the State. A report is being formulated by Commissioner of Agriculture R. F. Kolb and will be submitted to the governor. After it has been presented, the remaining 70 per cent of the fund will be apportioned among Auburn and the various agricultural schools for white students.

Says Route Could Be Made Good.

W. S. Keller, State highway engineer, returned from southwest Alabama, where he went on an automobile tour over the old stage route between Montgomery and Mobile. Mr. Keller, accompanied by John Craft, of Mobile, and Prof. G. N. Mitcham, of Auburn, members of the State highway commission, made a trip from Fort Deposit to Burnt Corn over the old mail route between Mobile and Montgomery.

Some of the highway traversed by the Keller party is in good condition, but much of it is rough and uneven, according to Mr. Keller. The route has the advantage of running along the top of the watershed in southwest Alabama and could be put in fine condition.

Text-Book Changes Made.

Members of the county high school commission, which has charge of the work of selecting text-books for the county high schools and State agricultural schools, met in the office of W. F. Feagin, State superintendent of education. The commission cleared up many routine matters that required its attention. Several new text-books were selected and a few changes in old text-books were made.

B. and S. E. Railroad.

Extension of the Birmingham and Southeastern railroad from Eclectic to connect with trains entering Birmingham and Anniston will be made within the near future, according to a statement of W. M. Blount, president of the road.

Mr. Blount made this announcement at Eclectic, where he attended the barbecue and picnic given at that place in honor of the opening of the road, one year ago. President Blount declared that all financial arrangements had been made for the extension.

R. E. Steiner on Executive Board.

Maj. R. E. Steiner of Montgomery has been appointed by the governor a member of the executive committee of the board of trustees of the University of Alabama to succeed the late Col. M. P. LeGrand of Montgomery. Major Steiner was recently elected as Colonel Le Grand's successor by the board of trustees of the university, and his election will be confirmed by the members of the legislature when they meet in session here next year. The appointment of Major Steiner was made by the governor.

Those who were elected on the county executive committee of the Progressive party last primary election should not lose sight of the fact that there has beeu a call issued for them to meet and organize next Saturday at the mass meeting, and get things lined up for taking charge of the party management. We hope everyone of the new members will be present, and get in this work from the beginning. This will insure much better results in the wind up.

Judge A. P. Longshore of Shelby county has been invited to be present at the Progressive mass meeting to be held at the court house in Clanton next Saturday. It is expected that he will be here and deliver an address before the assembly. Numbers of men in this county are acquainted with this gentleman, and are aware of the worth of his opinion in matters of politics and government. We hape all who possibly can will come to hear Judge Longshore and the others who will make speeches at the meeting.

In a very drastic report of the Grand Jury of Montgomery county, rendered Saturday, along with several other timely suggestions, they made the following recommendation that is especially worthy of note: "That no additional roads be built until the financial conditions of the county are improved, and that the practice of borrowing money from the banks be discontinued." It is to be presumed that the county of Montgomery, according to this recommendation that they borrow no more money, has been making a practice of the county debt system, which has recently been discussed in Chilton, and have found it a bad practice. Let us be wise enough to take advantage of the experience of those who have tried this method and found it malicious, and stop it in our own county before it is begnn.

Clanton should be proud of the splendid store recently opened by Upchurch Drug Company. The firm is by no means a new one for Clanton. It has been in operation here for a number of years, and the confidence that the management has at all times held with the public is strongly attested by the success attained. The new place of business is far in advance of the ordinary drug store for towns of this size, and sets a pace for Clanton that will not be surpassed in many years.

It's a pity that with the magnificent record of achievement the present Congress has made—the passage of the currency bill, tariff bill, and now the anti-trust legislation—there has been extravagance of the most flagrant kind. HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Henry Russell Miller, the young Pittsburgh lawyer-novelist, who is known for his political stories which have appeared during the last few years, has distinguished himself again through the production of another story, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt" —a story of social and industrial Pittsburgh—which critics say is far better than either "The Man Higher Up" or "His Rise to Power," his two earlier political stories. We have secured this story as our next serial, and the first installment will appear in an early issue.

For a number of years Mr. Miller has exhibited a great interest in the steel industry. He has made the acquaintance of many of the big men as well as the laborers in the mill towns, and from them has learned a great deal about the game.

"The Ambition of Mark Truitt" is a story that is not only tremendously interesting, but one that will cause readers to stop and think.

Business Man Praises Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

Successful Merchant After Investigation Found a Remedy That Restored His Health.

"This is Thanksgiving day in the state of Pennsylvania, and I want to devote a part of it in writing a letter to you. On the 26th day of November, '10, I was stricken with heart trouble. My family physician called it Angina Pectoris. I had from one to five attacks in 24 hours, in the latter part of December, 1910. I wrote to the Miles Medical Co., for information concerning my case, and in reply I received a very kind and instructive letter, which I handed to my family doctor, and he told me to use your Remedies in connection with the medicine he gave me, so I did. I used five bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and seven bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I was confined to the house for about four months. The action of my heart is now, and has been normal for the last six months. I can truly recommend Dr. Miles' Nervine and Heart Remedy to do what they are intended for, if used according to directions. I thank you kindly for your advice in answer to my monthly reports. I am now sixty-seven years of age, have been in the mercantile business for thirty-five years and lived retired for the last thirteen years." A. B. HOLLINGER, Lincoln, Penna.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Hollow of Her Hand.

When Booth called in the afternoon at Sara's apartment, he was met by the news that she was quite ill and could see no one—not even him. The doctor had been summoned during the night and had returned in the morning, to find that she had a very high temperature. The butler could not enlighten Booth further than this, except to add that a nurse was coming in to take charge of Mrs. Wrandall, more for the purpose of watching her symptoms than for anything else, he believed. At least, so the doctor had said.

Two days passed before the distressed young man could get any definite news concerning her condition. He unconsciously began to think of it as a malady, not a mere illness, due of course to a remark Carroll had dropped when Sara had told him the whole truth of the tragedy and of her own vindictive plans. It was Carroll himself who gave a definite report of Sara. He met the lawyer coming away from the apartment when he called to inquire.

"She isn't out of her head, or anything like that," said Carroll uneasily, "but she's in a bad way, Booth. I'll tell you what I think is troubling her more than anything else. Down in her heart she realizes that Hetty Castleton has got to be brought face to face with the Wrandalls."

"The deuce you say!"

"Today I saw her for the first time. Almost immediately she asked me if I thought the Wrandalls would treat Hetty fairly if they ever found out the truth about her. I said I thought they would. I didn't have the heart to tell her that their grievance undoubtedly would be shifted from Hetty to her, and that they wouldn't be likely to forgive her for the stand she'd taken. She doesn't seem to care, however, what the Wrandalls think of her. By the way, have you any influence over Hetty Castleton?"

"I wish I were sure that I had," said Booth.

"Do you think she would come if you sent her a cablegram?"

"I am going over—"

"She will have your letter in a couple of days, according to Sara, who seems to have a very faithful correspondent in the person of that maid. I shudder to think of the cable tolls in the past few months! I sometimes wonder if the maid suspects anything more than a loving interest in Miss Castleton. What I was about to suggest is this: Couldn't you cable her on Friday saying that Sara is very ill? This is Tuesday."

"I will cable, of course, but Sara must not know that I've done it."

"Can you come to my office tomorrow afternoon?"

"Yes. Tomorrow night I shall go over to Philadelphia, to be gone till Friday. I hope it will not be necessary for me to stay longer. You never can tell about these operations."

"I trust everything will go well, Brandon."

Several things of note transpired before noon on Friday.

The Wrandalls arrived from Europe, without the recalcitrant colonel. Mr. Redmond Wrandall, who met them at the dock, heaved a sigh of relief.

"He will be over on the Lusitania, next sailing," said Leslie, who for some reason best known to himself wore a troubled look.

Mr. Wrandall's face fell. "I hope not," he said, much to the indignation

He Met the Lawyer Coming Away From the Apartment.

of his wife and the secret uneasiness of his son. "These predatory connections of the British nobility—"

"Predatory!" gasped Mrs. Wrandall.

"—are a blood-sucking lot," went on the old gentleman firmly. "If he comes to New York, Leslie, I'll stake my head he won't be long in borrowing a few thousand dollars from each of us. And he'll not seek to humiliate us by attempting to pay it back. Oh, I know them."

Leslie swallowed rather hard. "What's the news here, dad?" he asked hastily. "Anybody dead?"

"Sara is quite ill, I hear. Slow fever of some sort, Carroll tells me."

"Is she going to marry Brandy Booth?" asked his son.

Mr. Wrandall's face stiffened. "I fear I was a little hasty in my conclusions. Brandon came to the office a few days ago and informed me in rather plain words that there is absolutely nothing in the report."

"The deuce you say! 'Gad, I wrote her a rather intimate letter—" Leslie got no farther than this. He was somewhat stunned and bewildered by his private reflections.

Mr. Wrandall was lost in study for some minutes, paying no attention to the remarks of the other occupants of the motor that whirled them across town.

"By the way, my dear," he said to his wife, a trifle irrelevantly, "don't you think it would be right for you and Vivian to drop in this afternoon and see Sara? Just to let her know that she isn't without—"

"It's out of the question, Redmond," said his wife, a shocked expression in her face as much as to say that he must be quite out of his head to suggest such a thing. "We shall be dreadfully busy for several days, unpacking and—well, doing all sorts of necessary things."

"She is pretty sick, I hear," mumbled he.

"Hasn't she got a nurse?" demanded his wife.

"I merely offered the suggestion in order—"

"Well, we'll see her next week. Any other news?"

"Mrs. Booth, Brandon's mother, was operated on for something or other day before yesterday."

"Oh, dear! The poor thing! Where?"

"Philadelphia, of course."

"I wonder if—let me see, Leslie, isn't there a good train to Philadelphia at four o'clock? I could go—"

"Really, my dear," said her husband sharply.

"You forget how busy we are, mother," said Vivian, without a smile.

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Wrandall, in considerable confusion. "Was it a serious operation, Redmond?"

"They cut a bone out of her nose, that's all. Brandon says her heart is weak. They were afraid of the ether. She's all right, Carroll says."

"Goodness!" cried Mrs. Wrandall. One might have suspected a note of disappointment in her voice.

"I shall go up to see Sara this afternoon," said Vivian calmly. "What's the number of her new apartment?"

"You have been up to see her, of course," said Mrs. Wrandall acidly.

He fidgetted. "I didn't hear of her illness until yesterday."

"I'll go up with you, Viv," said Leslie.

"No, you won't," said his sister flatly. "I'm going to apologize to her for something I said to Brandon Booth. You needn't tag along, Les."

At half-past five in the afternoon, the Wrandall limousine stopped in front of the tall apartment building near the park, a footman jerked open the door, and Miss Wrandall stepped out. At the same moment a telegraph messenger boy paused on the sidewalk to compute the artistic but puzzling numerals on the imposing grilled doors of the building.

Miss Wrandall had herself announced by the obsequious doorman, and stood by in patience to wait for the absurd rule of the house to be carried out: "No one could get in without being announced from below," said the doorman.

"I c'n get in all right, all right," said the messenger boy, "I got a tellygram for de loidy."

"Go to the rear!" exclaimed the doorman, with some energy.

While Miss Wrandall waited in Sara's reception hall on the tenth floor, the messenger, having traversed a more devious route, arrived with his message.

Watson took the envelope and told him to wait. Five minutes passed. Miss Wrandall grew very uncomfortable under the persistent though complimentary gaze of the street urchin. He stared at her, wide-eyed and admiring, his tribute to the glorious. She stared back occasionally, narrow-eyed and reproving, her tribute to the grotesque.

"Will you please step into the drawing-room, Miss Wrandall," said Watson, returning. He led her across the small foyer and threw open a door. She passed into the room beyond.

Then he turned to the boy who stood beside the hall seat, making change for a quarter as he approached. "Here," he said, handing him the receipt book and a dime, "that's for you." He dropped the quarter into his own pocket, where it mingled with coins that were strangers to it up to that instant, and imperiously closed the door behind the boy who failed to say "thank you." Every man to his trade!

There was a woman in the drawing-room when Vivian entered, standing well over against the windows with her back to the light. The visitor stopped short in surprise. She had expected to find her sister-in-law in bed, attended by a politely superior person in pure white.

"Why, Sara," she began, "I am so glad to see you are up and—"

The other woman came forward. "But I am not Sara, Miss Wrandall," she said, in a well-remembered voice. "How do you do?"

Vivian found herself looking into the face of Hetty Castleton. Instantly she extended her hand.

"This is a surprise!" she exclaimed. "When did you return? Leslie told me your plans were quite settled when he saw you in Lucerne. Oh, I see! Of course! How stupid of me. Sara sent for you."

"She has been quite ill," said Hetty, non-committally. "We got in yesterday. I thought my place was here, naturally."

"Naturally," repeated Vivian, in a detached sort of way. "How is she today? May I see her?"

"She is very much better. In fact, she is sitting up in her room." A warm flush suffused her face, a shy smile appeared in her eyes. "She is receiving two gentlemen visitors, to be perfectly honest, Miss Wrandall, her lawyer, Mr. Carroll, and—Mr. Booth."

Vivian Found Herself Looking Into the Face of Hetty Castleton.

They were seated side by side on the uncomfortable Louis Seize divan in the middle of the room.

"Perhaps she won't care to see me, after an audience so fatiguing," said Miss Wrandall sweetly. "And so exasperating," she added, with a smile.

Hetty looked her perplexity.

"But she will see you, Miss Wrandall—if you don't mind waiting. It is a business conference they're having."

An ironic gleam appeared in the corner of Vivian's eye. "Oh," she said, and waited. Hetty smiled uncertainly. All at once the tall American girl was impressed by the wistful, almost humble look in the Englishwoman's eyes, an appealing look that caused her to wonder not a little. Like a flash she jumped at an obvious conclusion, and almost caught her breath. This girl loved Booth and was losing him! Vivian exulted for a moment and then, with an impulse she could not quite catalogue, laid her hand on the other's slim fingers, and murmured somewhat hazily: "Never mind, never mind!"

"Oh, you must wait," cried Hetty, not at all in touch with the other's mood. "Sara expects to see you. The men will be out in a few minutes."

"I think I will run in tomorrow morning," said Vivian hastily. She arose almost immediately and again extended her hand. "So glad to see you back again, Miss Castleton. Come and see me. Give my love to Sara."

She took her departure in some haste, and in her heart she was rejoicing that she had not succeeded in making a fool of herself by confessing to Sara that she had said unkind things about her to Brandon Booth.

Hetty resumed her seat in the broad French window and stared out over the barren treetops in the park. A frightened, pathetic droop returned to her lips. It had been there most of the day.

In Sara's boudoir, the doors of which were carefully closed, three persons were in close, even repressed conference. The young mistress of the house sat propped up in a luxurious chaise-lounge, wan but intense. Confronting here were the two men, leaning forward in their chairs. Mr. Carroll held in his hand a number of papers, prominent among them being three or four telegrams. Booth's face was radiant despite the serious matter that occupied his mind. He had reached town early in the morning in response to a telephone message from Carroll announcing the sudden, unannounced appearance of Hetty Castleton at his offices on the previous afternoon. The girl's arrival had been most unexpected. She walked in on Mr. Carroll, accompanied by her maid, who had a distinctly sheepish look in her eyes and seemed eager to explain something but could not find the opportunity.

With some firmness, Miss Castleton had asked Mr. Carroll to explain why the woman had been set to spy upon her every moment, a demand the worthy lawyer could not well meet for the good and sufficient reason that he wasn't very clear about it himself. Then Hetty broke down and cried, confessing that she was eager to go to Mrs. Wrandall, at the same time sobbing out something about a symbolic dicky-bird, much to Mr. Carroll's wonder and perplexity.

He sent the maid from the room, and retired with Miss Castleton to the innermost of his private offices, where without much preamble he informed her that he knew everything. Moreover, Mr. Booth was in possession of all the facts and was even then on the point of starting for Europe to see her. Of course, his letter had failed to reach her in time. There was quite a tragic scene in the seclusion of that remote little office, during which Mr. Carroll wiped his eyes and blew his nose more than once, after which he took it upon himself to dispatch a messenger to Sara with the word that he and Miss Castleton would present themselves within half an hour after his note had been delivered.

The meeting between Sara and Hetty was affecting. . . . Almost immediately the former began to show the most singular signs of improvement. She laughed and cried and joyously announced to the protesting nurse that she was feeling quite well again! And, in truth, she got up from the couch on which she reclined and insisted on being dressed for dinner. In another room the amazed nurse was frantically appealing to Mr. Carroll to let her send for the doctor, only to be confounded by his urbane announcement that Mrs. Wrandall was as "right as a string" and, please God, she wouldn't need the services of doctor or nurse again for years to come. Then he asked the nurse if she had ever heard of a disease called "nostalgia."

She said she had heard of "homesickness."

"Well, that's what ailed Mrs. Wrandall," he said. "Miss Castleton is the cure."

Booth came the next morning. . . . Even as she lay passive in his arms, Hetty denied him. Her arms were around his neck as she miserably whispered that she could not, would not be his wife, notwithstanding her love for him and his readiness to accept her as she was. She was obdurate, lovingly, tenderly obdurate. He would have despaired but for Sara, to whom he afterwards appealed.

"Wait," was all that Sara had said, but he took heart. He was beginning to look upon her as a sorceress. A week ago he had felt sorry for her; his heart had been touched by her transparent misery. Today he saw her in another light altogether; as the determined, resourceful, calculating woman who, having failed to attain a certain end, was now intensely, keenly interested in the development of another of a totally different nature. He could not feel sorry for her today.

Hetty deliberately had placed herself in their hands, withdrawing from the conference shortly before Vivian's arrival to give herself over to gloomy conjectures as to the future, not only for herself, but for the man she loved and the woman she worshiped with something of the fidelity of a beaten dog.

* * * * * * *

At a later conference participated in by Sara, Booth and Mr. Carroll, the old lawyer spoke plainly.

"Now are you both willing to give serious consideration to the plan I propose? Take time to think it over. No harm will come to Miss Castleton, I am confident. There will be a nine days' sensation, but, after all, it is the best thing for everybody. You propose living abroad, Booth, so what are the odds if—"

"I shan't live abroad unless Hetty reconsiders her decision to not marry me," said the young man dismally. "'Gad, Sara, you must convince her that I love her better than—"

"I think she knows all that, Brandon. As I said before, wait! And now, Mr. Carroll, I have this to say to your suggestion: I for one am relentlessly opposed to the plan you advocate. There is no occasion for this matter to go to the public. A trial, you say, would be a mere formality. I am not so sure of that. Why put poor Hetty's head in the lion's mouth at this late stage, after I have protected her so carefully all these months? Why, take the risk? We know she is innocent. Isn't it enough that we acquit her in our hearts? No, I cannot consent, and I hold both of you to your promises."

"There is nothing more I can say, my dear Sara," said Carroll, shaking his head gloomily, "except to urge you to think it over very seriously. Remember, it may mean a great deal to her—and to our eager young friend here. Years from now, like a bolt from the sky, the truth may come out in some way. Think of what it would mean then."

Sara regarded him steadily. "There are but four people who know the truth," she said slowly. "It isn't likely that Hetty or Brandon will tell the story. Professional honor forbids your doing so. That leaves me as the sole peril. Is that what you would imply, my dear friend?"

"Not at all," he cried hastily, "not at all. I—"

"That's all tommy-rot, Sara," cried Booth earnestly. "We just couldn't have anything to fear from you."

With curious inconsistency, she shook her head and remarked: "Of course, you never could be quite easy in your minds. There would always be the feeling of unrest. Am I to be trusted, after all? I have proved myself to be a vindictive schemer. What assurance can you and Hetty have that I will not turn against one or the other of you some time and crush you to satisfy a personal grievance? How do you know, Brandon, that I am not in love with you at this very—"

"Good heavens, Sara!" he cried, agape.

"— at this very moment?" she continued. "It would not be so very strange, would it? I am very human. The power to love is not denied me. Oh, I am merely philosophizing. Don't look so serious. We will suppose that I continued along my career as the woman scorned. You have seen how I smart under the lash. Well?"

"But all that is impossible," said Booth, his face clearing. "You're not in love with me, and never can be. That! for your philosophy!"

At the same instant he became aware of the singular gleam in her eyes; a liquid, oriental glow that seemed to reflect light on her lower lids as she sat there with her face in the shadow. Once or twice before he had been conscious of the mysterious, seductive appeal. He stared back at her, almost defensively, but her gaze did not waver. It was he who first looked away, curiously uncomfortable.

"Still," she said slowly, "I think you would be wise to consider all possible contingencies."

"I'll take chances, Sara," he said, with an odd buoyancy in his voice that, for the life of him, he could not explain, even to himself.

"Even admitting that such should turn out to be the case," said Mr. Carroll judicially, "I don't believe you'd go so far as to put your loyal friends in jeopardy, Sara. So we will dismiss the thought. Don't forget, however, that you hold them in the hollow of your hand. My original contention was based on the time-honored saying, 'murder will out.' We never can tell what may turn up. The best laid plans of men and mice oft—"

Sara settled back among the cushions with a peremptory wave of her hand. The loose, flowing sleeve fell away, revealing her white, exquisitely modeled arm almost to the shoulder. For some strange, unaccountable reason Booth's eyes fell.

"I am tired, wretchedly tired. It has been a most exhausting day," she said, with a sudden note of weariness in her voice. Both men started up apologetically. "I will think seriously of your plan, Mr. Carroll. There is no hurry, I'm sure. Please send Miss Wrandall in to me, will you? Perhaps you would better tell Hetty to come in as soon as Vivian leaves. Come back tomorrow afternoon, Brandon. I shall be much more cheerful. By the way, have you noticed that Dicky, out in the library, has been singing all afternoon as if his little throat would split? It is very curious, but today is the first time he has uttered a note in nearly five months. Just listen to him! He is fairly riotous with song."

Booth leaned over and kissed the hand she lifted to him. "He is like the rest of us, Sara, inordinately happy." A slight shiver ran through her arm. He felt it.

"I am so afraid his exuberance of spirit may annoy Vivian," said she, with a rare smile. "She detests vulgarity."

The men departed. She lay back in the chaise-lounge, her eyes fixed on the hand he had touched with his lips.

Watson tapped twice on the door.

"Miss Wrandall could not wait, ma'am," he said, opening the door softly. "She will call again tomorrow."

"Thank you, Watson. Will you hand me the cigarettes?"

Watson hesitated. "The cigarettes, ma'am?"

"Yes."

"But the doctor's orders, ma'am, begging your pardon for—"

"I have a new doctor, Watson."

"I beg pardon, ma'am!"

"The celebrated Doctor Folly," she said lightly.

CHAPTER XX.

Sara Wrandall's Decision.

"Now, you see what I mean, Brandon, when I insist that it would be a mistake for you to marry me," said Hetty in a troubled voice. "I feel that Sara will not let me go."

"That's pure nonsense, Hetty," he said. "She wants you to marry me, I am positive." He may have thought his tone convincing, but something caused her to regard him rather fixedly, as if she were trying to solve an elusive puzzle.

He took her by the arm and raised her to her feet. Holding her quite close, he looked down into her questioning eyes and said very seriously:

"You are suspicious, even of me, dearest. I want you. There is but one way for you to be at peace with yourself; shift your cares over to my shoulders. I will stand between you and everything that may come up to trouble you. We love one another. Why should we sacrifice our love for the sake of a shadow? For a week, dearest, I've been pleading with you; won't you end the suspense today—end it now—and say you will be my wife?"

The appeal was so gentle, so sincere, so full of longing that she wavered. Her tender blue eyes, lately so full of dread, grew moist with the ineffable sweetness of love, and capitulation was in them. Her warm, red lips parted in a dear little smile of surrender.

"You know I love you," she said tremulously.

He kissed the lovely, appealing lips, not once but many times.

"God, how I worship you," he whispered passionately. "I can't go on without you, darling. You are life to me. I love you! I love you!"

She drew back in his arms, the shadow chasing the light out of her eyes.

"We are both living in the present, we are both thinking only of it, Brandon. What of the future? Can we foresee the future? Dear heart, I am always thinking of your future, not my own. Is it right for me to bring you—"

"And I am thinking only of your future," he said gravely. "The future that shall be mine to shape and to make glad with the fulfilment of every promise that love has in store for both of us. Put away the doubts, drive out the shadows, dearest. Live in the light for ever. Love is light."

"If I were only sure that my shadows would not descend upon you, I—"

He drew her close and kissed her again.

"I am not afraid of your shadows. God be my witness, Hetty, I glory in them. They do not reflect weakness, but strength and nobility. They make you all the more worth having. I thank God that you are what you are, dear heart."

"Give me a few days longer, Brandon," she pleaded. "Let me conquer this strange thing that lies here in my brain. My heart is yours, my soul is yours. But the brain is a rebel. I must triumph over it, or it will always lie in wait for a chance to overthrow this little kingdom of ours. Today I have been terrified. I am disturbed. Give me a few days longer."

"I would not grant you the respite, were I not so sure of the outcome," he said gently, but there was a thrill of triumph in the tones. Her eyes grew very dark and soft and her lips trembled with the tide of love that surged through her body. "Oh, how adorable you are!" he cried, straining her close in a sudden ecstasy of passion.

The doorbell rang. They drew apart, breathing rapidly, their blood leaping with the contact of opposing passions, their flesh quivering. With a shy, sweet glance at him, she turned toward the door to await the appearance of Watson. He could still feel her in his arms.

A drawling voice came to them from the vestibule, and a moment later Leslie Wrandall entered the library, pulling off his gloves as he came.

"Hello," he said glibly. "I told that fellow downstairs it wasn't necessary to announce me by telephone. Silly arrangement, I say. Why the devil should they think everybody's a thief or a book agent or a constable with a subpoena? He knows I'm one of the family. I'm likely to run in any time, I told him, and— Oh, I say, I'm not butting in, am I, Miss Castleton?"

He shook hands with both of them, and then offered his cigarette case to Booth, first selecting one for himself. Hetty assured him that he was not de trop, sheer profligacy on her part in view of his readiness to concede the point without a word from her.

"Nipping wind," he said, taking his stand before the fireplace. "Where is Sara? Never mind, don't bother her.

Booth Kissed the Hand She Lifted to Him.

I've got all the time in the world. By the way, Miss Castleton, what is the latest news from your father?"

"I dare say you have later news than I," she said, a trace of annoyance in her manner.

Are Spices Injurious?

According to Dr. Gigon of Basel, spices are a much abused constituent of the diet. He claims that instead of being injurious they are, as a rule, beneficial to the human system inasmuch as they stimulate the flow of saliva and of the gastric juices, thereby furthering digestion. Besides the aromatic spices—ginger, cinnamon, cloves, pepper, etc.—he adds and recommends salt. This last item is taboo by many dietitians. One of the leading sanatoriums of the country that for years condemned it is now commending it.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Wedlock, indeed hath oft compared been
To public feasts, where meet the public rout,
Where they that are without would fain go in
And they that are within would fain go out.
—Sir John Davies.

SUMMER FOODS.

Let the diet throughout the heated term be largely of vegetables and fruits. Remember that milk is a food and not a beverage; that buttermilk is a most wholesome and cooling drink for hot weather and will take the place of heavy food to our good. It is cooling to the blood and will for a season serve as food.

Chicken and Nut Salad.—Mix two cupfuls of minced chicken with one cupful of finely cut celery and a half cupful of nut-meats, either walnuts or almonds, browned in the oven, with a bit of butter and salt and a dash of red pepper. Moisten with mayonnaise and serve on lettuce.

A bunch or two of small seed onions cooked in boiling water and served in a thin white sauce makes a wholesome vegetable for a noon meal.

Orange Ice.—Make a sirup of four cupfuls of water, two cupfuls of sugar, the grated rind of two oranges and cook 20 minutes, strain and cool, add two cupfuls of orange juice and a fourth of a cupful of lemon juice. Freeze.

Coffee Date Pudding.—Soak half a box of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold water. Add one pint of boiling coffee and half a cupful of sugar. Strain and cool. When almost set add one-half pound of chopped dates and half a cupful of walnut meats. Serve with cream.

Mushroom Omelet.—Cook mushrooms in butter and add to the omelet just before folding. Garnish with some of the mushrooms cooked in butter.

Raspberry Whip.—Beat the white of an egg with a cupful of powdered sugar and one and a half cupfuls of mashed raspberries together 30 minutes. Pile in the center of a platter and heap whipped cream around the edge. Serve with macaroons.

Strawberries or any fruit that will crush may be used for this dessert. The fruit with too much juice should be drained a little.

Luxury and dissipation, soft and gentle as their approaches are, and silently as they throw their silken chains about the heart, enslave it more than the most active and turbulent vices.—Hannah More.

FOR THE FAMILY OF TWO.

So many find that dividing the recipe gives poor results, and that roasts are out of the question unless one desired to spend the week on one kind of meat. There is no reason why a small family should not indulge in a roast if it is given thought before its preparation. This is a good time to have guests to enjoy a juicy roast, and if that is not convenient after serving a roast for Sunday a portion may be warmed in the gravy with the addition of jelly if it is mutton or lamb, and tomato, worcestershire sauce or onion if beef or veal. The mashed potatoes left over may be made into potato patties and served well browned in a little fat.

Most delicious meat balls or croquettes may be prepared from roast of lamb with the addition of chopped parboiled green pepper.

Two carrots or two turnips well cooked will be sufficient for two and may be dressed in different ways. A most appetizing dish is carrots with lemon butter. Chop the carrots after cooking and season with butter and lemon juice with salt and a pinch of sugar. Serve hot and they are good.

Chops and steak may be used for variety after the roast. A good steak will serve several meals. One may have the tenderloin for one meal, the tough portion for brown stew in casserole and the rest for chopped meat, if so desired.

When serving chopped meat or hamburger steak a sauce of tomato will add zest to the meal.

In many shops one is able to buy half a chicken and one need not fear to be called extravagant, as this will make at least two meals and a little broth may then be had for a third day.

A good-sized steak is more economical to buy than a small one for several meals may be prepared from it, with very little waste if the steak is thick.

Nellie Maxwell.

She Filled It.

"Miss Lovely," said he earnestly, "you have noticed these missing word contests in Fun, I know. Well, I have one that I want you to help me with. The sentence is, 'Will you be my ——?' Can you supply the missing word, dear one?" "Yes," said she, meaningly; "'sister.'"

Making a Calendar.

Little Harry (munching fruit of the date tree)—Say, mama, if I eat dates enough will I grow up and be a calendar?

NOT IN THE WRONG

Why the Colombian Treaty Has No Basis.

Secretary Bryan Has Taken a Position Which the Country Will Not Indorse—Main Objection Is Based on Morals.

Secretary Bryan's statement in defense of the proposed Colombian treaty leaves the main objection of its opponents unshaken. The main objection is not based on money. It is based on morals. The main objection is to the covert apology for action of which we are not ashamed. It is to declaring our regret for what we do not regret, to pretending to be sorry for what we do not consider wrong.

In this Secretary Bryan disagrees with the opinion of the majority of his countrymen. That is the difficulty in which he finds himself and the difficulty is insuperable. The sooner he faces that fact the sooner he will be able to give his undivided attention and great influence to matters requiring more urgently his attention. Let him realize that the spirit and conviction of the nation was expressed in the instructions of his predecessor, Secretary Knox, to Minister Du Bois, when he said: "The United States will not for one moment consider the use of any language which in any way impugns the past attitude, acts or motives of this government."

Secretary Bryan's discussion of the financial features of the treaty would be more convincing if his determination that we shall accept the position of a wrongdoer were not evident. If Colombia has any right to compensation from us for the loss of the canal zone let us examine it without sentimentality and pay whatever we owe, because we owe it. But let us not commit the folly of self-humiliation and self-stultification on the theory advanced by Secretary Bryan that "it will give prestige to the United States throughout Spanish America."

The Colombian treaty is based on the assumption that we did a wrong to Colombia. Without that assumption the treaty has no basis. But the American people do not accept any such assumption and they will not approve any treaty based upon it.

More Than "Psychological."

The fact about the matter is, and we are very sorry to have to say so, that the president is wrong in his theory that the trouble with business is merely "psychological." He is right if a feeling of business fear and conservatism may be described as a mere matter of psychology; but does he not recognize that there is such a thing as a just basis for business fear and conservatism? Does he not realize that for years back, the business men of this country have been whacked and pounded and pulled in different directions by the wild men of one political party after the other, and by unending ventures in the direction of Socialism made by politicians in order to catch the favor of the mob? Does he not know what the people of the country now want more than anything else is rest, and that the one sure treatment for all "psychological" conditions of nervous and business depression is quiet and a cessation of the previous annoyances from which the patient has been suffering?

The New York World, one of the president's most friendly critics, made an apt reference the other day when it cited Bismarck's plea that a few reforms should be left to posterity and that no man nor political party could do everything at once.

Why it is that our Democratic friends will persist in rushing upon destruction?

Democrats on the Defensive.

If the new tariff law had actually succeeded in hammering down the cost of living, or if it had opened foreign markets to offset the loss of the American market, or if the Mexican question had been solved successfully, Democrats in congress would be in a far better position to defend their seats. The shrewdest and most experienced among them look with extreme anxiety upon the campaign. They have noticed a change in public sentiment in several by-elections, particularly the election in New Jersey, in which the president himself took a hand, only to see a Republican elected. The house Democrats realize that they cannot expect much help from the national administration in their respective districts, since the administration has an abundance of troubles of its own. They are nonplussed in searching about for subjects to discuss during the campaign. Every issue that is living and awaiting popular judgment places Democrats on the defensive, and old campaigners know only too well that to be on the defensive is to be badly handicapped.

NO EXPERT WITNESS NEEDED

Quite Evident Mr. Miggs Was Right When He Testified as to the Handwriting.

"Libel, indeed!"

Old Miggs repeated the words to himself dully and uncomprehendingly, as he tramped along to the court, where he was to appear as witness in a local libel suit.

Nervously he entered the witness box.

The fierce looking lawyer eyed him calculatingly.

"Do you swear," he asked, "that this is not your handwriting?"

"I don't think so," stammered Miggs.

"Now, be careful," insinuated the lawyer. "Are you prepared to swear that this handwriting does not resemble yours?"

"Yes," answered Miggs trembling.

"You take your oath that this does not in any way resemble your handwriting?" solemnly queried the learned man.

"Y-yes, sir," stammered the witness, now thoroughly frightened.

"Well, then, prove it!" denounced the lawyer, triumphantly, as he thrust his head toward the witness.

This action woke the last spark of drooping courage in poor Miggs, and, thrusting forth his head, he yelled:

"'Cos I can't write!"

The Tango in Church.

Mother, like countless other mothers, had been doing much tangoing and hesitating of late. She had taken dancing lessons. She practiced the various steps at home with father. Little Frances had heard much of the lingo that goes with the tango, and the hesitation. She knew all of the phrases.

A few days ago Frances went to church with her mother. Frances had not learned all of the ceremonials of this church for, after the mother knelt outside the pew, Frances looked up at her and whispered:

Law's Uncertainties.

"That so?" returned young Jay Green, in a noncommittal way.

"Yep. For instance, in the case of Plunk Jarvis, who has jest been tried over at Kickyhasset courthouse for pullin' out his brother-in-law's whiskers by the roots in a fight, the jury discharged Plunk an' fined his brother-in-law 10 cents, the regular price of a shave."—Puck.

Outspoken.

Mrs. Smith's four sons made the life of her old colored servant a burden. "Miss Ella," he said, to the little culprit's mother, "Ah jes' has to tell yu dat dat boy Tawm am de meanes' chile yu got—an' Ah tells you fo' yo' face and tells you behine yo' back!"

Stranger Lost the Confidence of Truthful Fisherman When He made His Inquiry.

Representative Frank Clark, Representative Howard of Georgia, and Superintendent George W. Hess of the botanic gardens, were having a friendly argument at Washington.

"Howard," said Clark, banteringly, "I just want to illustrate to you in a story how little you know about this. There is in my district in Florida an attractive village named Callahan.

"One day a stranger walking along a road in the country near a creek saw a youth fishing.

"'Young man,' said the ministerial-looking individual, 'can you tell me the way to Callahan?'

"'Yes,' replied the boy, 'take the first road to your right.'

"Instead of proceeding on his journed, the stranger gazed intently at the boy a few moments and said: 'My young friends, don't you know you are wasting your time in a way that is dreadful to contemplate? You are fishing, just fishing, when you ought to be a-studyin' of books to prepare yourself for life's struggle. My boy, you're sure on the road to perdition.'

"'Road to perdition,' replied the indignant youth. 'What in blazes do you know about roads? You don't even know the road to Callahan.'"

Revolutionary Patriot.

James Lovell, a distinguished patriot of the Revolution, died 100 years ago in the town of Windham, Me. Mr. Lovell was born in Boston in 1737 and graduated from Harvard college at the age of nineteen. He delivered, April 2, 1771, the oration before the town authorities on the Boston massacre. Because of his display of patriotism he was imprisoned by General Gage immediately after the battle of Bunker Hill. Subsequently he was conveyed to Halifax with the British army, and remained in confinement until exchanged for Governor Skene in the latter part of 1776. From 1776 until 1782 Mr. Lovell was a member of the Continental congress. In later life he filled a number of public offices in Boston.

POWER

Man can view with equanimity the rush of the locomotive, the onward dash of the automobile, the graceful flight of the aeroplane, the majestic progress of the modern floating palace.

He can listen with security to the thunder of a Niagara, the roar of the beasts in the jungle, the crash of burned cities falling.

Because, no matter how great the calamity, man has more power than any of these forces.

He can, through the power of his brain, repair the damage and prevent a repetition. He can, through the power of his brain, control the action of any of these forces.

Occasionally man builds a Titanic vessel. In the darkness, at sea, it jams an iceberg and sinks to the bottom. The horror is great, but the lesson is there.

Man has an object lesson of faulty work and the consequences thereof. His power to overcome obstacles is more deeply stirred. Future generations get the benefit.

The L. & N. reminds the people of these things because the L. & N. is dependent for success upon the power of the people. You, the people, build locomotives, construct automobiles, harness Niagaras, tame wild beasts, fly in aeroplanes, sail in giant ships.

The L. & N. is the product and the servant of the people. Every mile of its rails, every tie on its roadbed, every locomotive in its roundhouses, every coach in its depots, represent the power of the people to create modern freight and passenger traffic.

The officials and employees of the L. & N. represent the mental power of the people in their control of these mechanical forces, and conduct them in such manner as will result in the public good.

Man should take pride in his power, and use it with discretion. His tendencies are constructive, but misdirected, his powers can be destructive.

The L. & N. wants to co-operate with the constructive element in our citizenship for the control of forces and the development of the territory through which the lines operate.

Great Mass Meeting at the Court House

Shows up Well for the Progressives of Chilton County.

Much Interest Displayed, and Harmony Was Keynote of Proceedings; About 600 Voters In Attendance.

Splendid Speech of Col. M. W. Howard Roused the Spirit of all for Vigorous Action. Judge Reynolds Spoke of Conditions in Chilton County.

As previously announced, a general mass meeting of the supporters of the Progressive party in Chilton county was held at the court house in Clanton Saturday. The meeting was in all a completely harmonious one, and revealed the unanimity with which the party supporters are holding together.

In the absence of the Chairman, J. O. Middleton, the meeting was called to order by M. D. Foshee, When Prof. W. T. Bean was elected Chairman, and W. H. Gillespie, Secretary.

As the main business was to appoint delegates to the State, Senatorial and Congressional conventions to be held at Birmingham Wednesday, this matter was taken up and disposed of as follows: The Chairman was empowered to appoint a committee of five to suggest names for the committee.

The nominating committee were, L. O. Vickers, J. M. Grant, M. D. Foshee, J. N. Scott, and W. Y. Nix. In their report to the house the following recommendations for delegates to Birmingham were made, and accepted unanimously by the body:

Delegates to the State Convention—J. N. Scott, J, S. Dennis, J. S. Jones, W. F. Deshazo, M. D. Foshee, L. H. Reynolds, L. O. Vickers, W. L. House, T. L. Robinson, D. H. Gentry, R. L. Clark, J. T. Rockett, W. T. Bean, H. A Harris, W. E. Thomas.

Delegates to the Congressional Convention—J. N. Dennis, J. D. Collins, J. W. Moore, John Mims, J. P. Robinson, Grady Reynolds, W. S. Watkins, L. H. Reynolds, J. N. Scott, W. L. House, H. A. Harris, W. E. Thomas, R. J. Williams, S. E. Waldrup, T. J. Hubbard.

Delegates to the Senatorial Convention—L. H. Reynolds, L. O. Vickers, J. N. Scott, J. N. Dennis, W. T. Bean, J. W. Moore, W. C. Elder, W. M. Wyatt, J. E. Kelley, J. T. Rockett, W. F. Deshazo, W. H. Gillespie, D. H. Gentry, Grady Reynolds, J. M. Grant.

It was moved and carried that the delegates be instructed to vote as a unit on questions that might come before them.

When the Chairman announced that resolutions were in order, the following was introduced and read by M. C. Williams, and adopted by the convention:

Whereas it is the policy of the Democratic party to create debts, to waste the peoples money, and to dis-regard the wishes of the people whose tax money they are spending and wasting wherever they are in power.

Therefore be it resolved by the Progressive Party of Chilton County in mass-meeting assembled, that we are opposed to creating debts on this county by Time Warrants, or by a Bond Issue, except by vote of the people.

Be it further resolved, that we favor good roads, and believe that all the money that can be spared each year out of the County Treasurer should be spent on the various public roads of the County.

The next was a letter to the people introduced and read by W. M. Wyatt, and after some discussion, was voted on and adopted by the convention, and unanimously passed. The letter is as follows.

Clanton, Ala., Aug. 1, 1914.

To the voters of Chilton County:

The people of this county are on the eve of a very important campaign. In the November election, the people of the county will decide who will be their Sheriff, Representative and Commissioners for the next four years. We ask the people to carefully examine the card of the Democratic party, in this county, state and nation, and see if you can afford to endorse the platforms they are promulgating.

New offices have been created and salaries raised by the Democrats until our taxes have become a burden. Tax gatherers have been sent out with instructions to get more taxes from the people. We declaae, if this program inaugurated by the Democrats of our state is to continue, that it will not be long till those wanting to purchase property in our state will stop and consider whether or not they can pay the taxes.

Old soldiers' pensions have been cut off on every technical point because their money has been wasted by extravagance. Graft, corruption and stealing is prominent all over the state. There is not a single act by the Democratic party for years that the people are proud of; not one that they can boast; and yet, the last administrasion was indorsed by the Demoeratic party in their last primary.

We read in Democratic papers all over Alabama where votes were stolen; where they were changed after they were placed in the ballot box. In fact all forms of corruption were practiced in that primary, and yet the party expects you to indorse all this by electing their nominees. We ask the Democratic party what they stand for, and what their platform in Alabama is. Has it come to the place that the leaders can depend on you voting their ticket from prejudice? If there is any platform pledge or promise from the Democratic party in Alabama, we have failed to see it. Do the people know where they stand on any question? Have they promised to reduce the taxes or to raise them? Have they promised any reform? If the people vote for and elect their officers without any promise or pledge, won't they have the right to do as they please? Will it not be reasonable for us to expect the graft, corruption and stealing to continue? Can't we look for our taxes to still be raised?

We, the Progressives of Chilton county, in mass meeting here assembled, do hereby declare that we are opposed to this extravagance and waste of the peoples mneoy. We condemn the wao in which our state taxes have been used and wasted. We appeal to the people of Alabama to stop, look listen before they cast their ballot for the Democratic party this fall.

We appeal to our county officers not to place our county in debt, unless it is for something that we cannot do without. We look around us and find county after county that has gone in debt, their credit no good and paying high prices for what they get. We ask you to investigate the conditions in Shelby county. It is our information that the Democratic Board of Revenue of that county is paying 31 1-4 cents per yard for dirt to be moved on the same highway that is going through our county, where we are paying only 20 cents per pard. Ours is on cash basis and theirs is on time warrants. Just think of the difference.

We appeal to our county commissioners not to let the Clanton Press, by its sweet and nice complements, lead you into the trap, nor let the Judge of Probate lead you into issuing interest-bearing time warrants, contrary to the organic law of our state. The constitution of Alabama provides that before any bonded debt can be put on the people, the question must be submitted to them for their vote.

We ask the voters of our county, regardless of their political affiliations, if all our county officers were Democrats, what rights would the common people have? We ask you if there is not more dissatisfaction, worry and turmoil in our county today than ever before? Is it not a fact that the people are more uneasy about their rights than they have ever been?

We appeal to all qualified voters of our county to consider well before they cast their vote this fall. We believe that we have nominated a good, clean ticket—one that will listen to the people if elected. We opened the doors of our primary to all white men; the Democrats said to all Progressives and Republicans, that they did want them in their primary; but now they have their nominees who are seeking your votes.

Voters, We ask you to harken to the call of right. Listen to the voice that will lead you into that which is most needed just now—a righteous and popular government. And it is the Progressive party that is calling for you, and offering you this.

Short speeches were made by some of those present in the business meeting. Judge Reynolds made a strong answer to some of the arguments that have been put forth by the Democrats regarding matters of our county government.

After all business was concluded, Judge Reynolds introduced Hon. M. W. Howard of Birmingham to address the meeting on whater lines he might choose. Mr. Howard came forward with one of the most powerful speeches ever heard in the defense of the Progressive platform, and its relation to the peoples rights. He covered the subject completely from a national standpoint down to our county affairs. No one can tell the strength of the impressions his speech made. It met with the most hearty approval of all who were so fortunate as to hear him.

Mr. Wallace C. Edler introduced the following resolution at the close of the address, which was voted heartily by the convention: Resolved, that we thank Colonel Howard most cordially for the splendid address he made in behalf of the Progressive cause.

A motion introduced by Judge Reynolds, to the effect that the mass meeting instruct its delegates to Birmingham to vote for Col. M. W. Howard as the Progressive cadidate for Governor, met with a hearty approval and indorsement of the members of the Convention.

After Mr. Howard's speech was concluded, the meeting adjourned. The pleasure of everyone at the enthusiasm which was displayed was indeed encouraging. Our people as attested by their interest in this meeting, are alive to their tasks, and are ready to fight for the cause of the party. Men have been shown the necessity for their action of late, and they are ready and anxious for the chance to show where they stand.

New Committee Is Organized

The new executive committee of the Progressive party which was elected in the primary last April, met Saturday immediately previous to the mass meeting for the purpose of organizing for the coming campaign, and electing the officers of the committee for the coming year.

Mr. W. H. Gillespie of Beat 10 was chosen as chairman, and M. D. Foshee was chosen as Secretary. The new officers take the place of J. O. Middleton and J.P. NanDerveer, Jr., respectfully, whose terms expired.

No other important business was done. General preparations were made far taking charge of the affairs of the party, and the management of the coming campaign.

Mass Meeting of Thorsby Citizens

Thorsby, Ala. August 1, 1914.

Editor Union-Banner:—I enclose report of Thorsby mass meeting which I wish you would print in next week's paper. This report was made out by me last week and I handed it over to Mr. Parnell who acted as Secretary and told him he could copy it for The Clanton Press if he wished, but that the original was for the Union-Banner. He sent his account to the Press, but did not send mine to the Union-Banner. I think it should be printed especially the "platform" as many of our state, county, and municipal officers act "after they get into office" as if they were the whole thing and that the people were not "in it" many men when they run for office can not say too much for the "dear peepul" but after they get the office their actions can only be accounted for by the phrase. "The people be d—d."

Wallace C. Edler.

Persuant to a call from the Mayor and Council of the Town, a mass meeting was held in the Public School house at Thorsby, on Friday, July 24, at 8 p. m.

The meeting was called to order by Mayor Bice and asked to elect a chairman and secretary. Wallace C. Edler was elected chairman and W. M. Parnell Secretary.

Mayor Bice then addressed the meeting reciting his past service as mayor, and asked a re-election to the office. After discussion, a motion was made and carried that the chairman appoint a committee of five to prepare a platform for the nominees to stand on; the committee consisted of Messrs Norton, Soberg, Frazen, J. R. Parnell and Carl C. Peterson. It submited the following report:

"We, the qualified voters of Thorsby, Ala., in mass meeting assembled, do hereby declare the following basis on which we nominate candidates for office of Mayor and Council for the term 1914-16, and require that all officers nominated by this meeting do accept the following, if they accept the nomination:

1st. We deem that the maintenance of good public schools and the protection of the health of the community are the chief duties of our municipality, and the first object for which the money of the town shall be expended.

2nd. The streets of the town should be strictly kept in good condition.

3rd. We declare that it shall be the duty of the Town Clerk to make an itamized report of all monies received and expended, the source from which received, and the object for which expended, during the week following the first meeting of tne Council in each alternate month—said report to be posted at the Post Office and some other public place.

On motion of Mr. Bice, and amended by Mr. Butler, a fourth clause was added, viz: We also demand that the prohibition laws be strictly enforced. The report as amended was adopted.

Nominations for mayor were, Sam W. Collins and M. C. Crumton; the chairman appointed Messrs. Butler and C. A. Peterson as tellers. The vote was, Collins 40; Crumpton, 21; Sam W. Collins was declared the nominee.

The following councilmen were nominated by a majority vote, viz: B. T. Franklin, Carl C. Peterson, Felix Eiland, W. M. Parnell, and E. F. Mead.

The nominees for School Board were W. L. Leavy, M. C. Crumpton, J. A. Carlson, J. W. Littleton and W. A. J. McClain.

The meeting then adjourned.

Wallace C. Edler, Chairman.

Free Springs

The people at this place have about all their crops laid by. The corn is going to be somewhat short this time on account ot the dry spring and summer; but cotton is looking well and will prabably turn out a full crop. Gardening has almost proven an absolute failure with most people.

Prof. Oden and sister are running a singing school at this place and are having a good attendance.

Mumps, which has been raging in this community has about died down; and the health all over the community is good at present.

The trade of selling beef is taking the day in this part of the county. Peddlers are almost as numerous as candidates before an election.

The protracted meeting will begin here the last of this week; and a grand, old time revival is predicted.

Madison Invaded By Army Worm

Huntsville, August 3—Reports from several parts of Madison county today say that the army worm has arrived and is invading the cotton fields by the millions. The damp weather of the last few days has been very favorable to the propigation of these pests. Whether or not the worm can do any great damage this late in the season is the subject of debate among the farmers. Many claim that the worm can do small damage even if it spreads over all the fields.

SHERIFF M'ADORY SCORED IN REPORT

EXECUTIONS AMOUNTING TO SEVERAL THOUSAND DOLLARS ARE NOT SATISFIED.

STATE CAPITAL HAPPENINGS

Doings In and Around the State House Chronicled for Our Readers.

—Montgomery.

Outstanding executions amounting to several thousand dollars have not been satisfied by Sheriff W. K. McAdory of Jefferson County, and he is criticised for not having these papers satisfied in a report filed with Governor O'Neal by W. R. Foster, Examiner of Public Accounts. Sheriff McAdory failed to satisfy executions amounting to $811 for the Supreme Court and to $269 for the State Court of Appeals. The amount due the Court of Appeals has been paid by the sheriff.

"It seems to me that many of the sureties on these executions should be made to settle them," declares the Examiner.

Many of the papers have been in the hands of the sheriff for almost one year without being satisfied. The sheriff told the examiner that some were uncollectable but that many were collectable and that he would make every effort to obtain the money on them.

"The investigation of feed bills paid him to December 31, 1913, show quite a number of errors both pro and con as to monthly payments. The sheriff owing the state 252 days, the state being due the sheriff 299 days, making an error of 47 days in the sheriff's favor, which as 30 cents a day, amounts to $14.10 due him by the state.

The number of prisoners handled in and out of this jail monthly is very great and you can readily see that some errors must of necessity occur both for and against the state. I wish to state that the warden has been very careful in the accounts of these feed bills as to his mittimuses, bonds and releases."

Etowah Convict Camp Criticised.

Etowah County's convict camp is in wretched condition and immediate improvement is needed, according to a report filed with Governor O'Neal by Dr. W. H. Oates, state prison inspector. The county officials assured Dr. Oates that his recommendations will be carried out.

Dr. Oates criticises severely the sanitary conditions, the sleeping quarters, the kitchen and the methods used in cooking. He declares that the bedding upon which the convicts sleep has not been washed for more than a year and that there is not sufficient ventilation provided.

Four white boys between the ages of 18 and 19 were found in the camp by Dr. Oates and he recommended that the Governor parole these lads. They were convicted on a charge of riding trains and sentenced to thirty days each.

While in Etowah Dr. Oates inspected the county jail, the county almshouse and the Gadsden city jail. He praises the condition of the county jail and almshouse, but declares that the city jail needs improvement. This improvement will be made later, according to assurances received by Dr. Oates.

Want Negroes to Attend Institutes.

W. F. Feagin, State Superintendent of Education, has written to all county superintendents, urging them to insist upon all negro teachers attending the teachers institutes. It has been reported to Mr. Feagin that many of the negro teachers are failing to report at the institutes. Mr. Feagin pointed out to the county superintendents that the penalty for non-attendance is the cancellation of the teachers licenses. He said all licenses of teachers who fail to attend institutes will be cancelled.

Macon County Books O. K.

Accounts of seven officials of Macon county are correctly and accurately kept, according to W. F. Wilkinson, examiner of public accounts, who has submitted a report of his examination to Governor O'Neal. Those whose books were examined were Judge Abercrombie, W. A. Cloud, clerk of circuit court; W. S. Daniels, sheriff; Walter Breedlove, tax collector; E. M. Hendon, tax assessor; G. S. Rodgers, former superintendent of education, and W. G. Swanson, treasurer of school funds.

Department Wants Information.

Further and more detailed information concerning the effects of pellagra in Alabama is being sought by the department of health, and inquiries to various county health officers also are being sent out by Dr. W. W. Dinsmore, director of the state hookworm commission. The facts that are obtained are to be published in the bulletins of the health department. Each county health officer will receive a list of the conditions in his county. The officers have been asked to return the answers as soon as possible.

County Conventions to Continue.

The series of County Sunday School Conventions, now under way in the state, will continue through August and September, according to the schedule of meetings announced by State Secretary, Leon C. Palmer.

At least one of the state field workers will co-operate with the local workers at every convention. In addition to the county sessions already held, the following have been arranged for the next several weeks:

Coosa County, August 6-7; St. Clair County, August 8-9; Lownds County, August 9-10; Jackson County, August 11-12; Calhoun County, August 11-12; Morgan County, August 13-14; Talladega County, August 13-14; Franklin County, August 15-16; Cleburne County, August 15-16; Sumter County, August 18-19; Marion County, August 18-19; Greene County, August 18-19; Tuscaloosa County, August 20-21; Fayette County, August 25-26; Shelby County, August 25-26; Etowah County, August 27-28; Lee County, August 27-28; Marengo County, August 29-30; Cherokee County, August 29-30; Randolph County, September 3-4; Marshall County, September 5-6; Clay County, September 5-6; Autauga County, September 8-9; Baldwin County, September 8-9; Bibb County, September 10-11; Blount County, September 12-13; Choctaw County, September 12-13; DeKalb County, September 12-13; Limestone County, September 15-16; Colbert County, September 17-18; Washington County, September 19-20 Monroe County, September 19-20; Bullock County, September 22-23; Crenshaw County, September 24-25; Conecuh County, September 26-27.

Chambers Officials Owe State.

Officials of Chambers owe their county a total of $71,136, according to a report filed with Governor O'Neal by J. T. Gorman, examiner of public accounts, who has just finished an examination of the accounts of the Chambers officials. The bulk of the discrepancies of the Chambers officials resulted because the treasurer honored warrants which were illegally issued by the county commissioners, according to Examiner Gorman.

"The county treasurer is custodian of county monies, and is liable for all illegal payments," said Examiner Gorman. "The payment of illegal claims is a mis-appropriation of county money. The treasurer must not only know that claims have been legally allowed by the commissioners court but that the court had authority to allow them."

Amounts due the county are: By J. J. Robinson, probate judge, $497; Sheriff John W. Lane, $814; W. R. Chatfield, hard labor agent, $264; and Treasurer T. J. Burton, $69,559.

Accounts of the officials with the state were in good condition and only a few minor irregularities were discovered by the examiner. Nearly all these small discrepancies were immediately paid as soon as the attention of the officials were called to the matter.

In regard to the county accounts Mr. Gorman made a report to Judge S. L. Brewer of Tuskegee in which he points out the reasons for discrepancies. He quotes from opinions of the attorney general to uphold his contentions.

In reference to the commissioners' court, Examiner Gorman declared that it did not comply with the law in allowing claims.

Governor Issues Proclamation.

Proper representation for Alabama at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco next year is urged by Governor O'Neal in a proclamation issued. He urges every patriotic citizen of the state to aid in the efforts that are being made to raise funds for the construction of a building and the maintenance of an exhibit. He approves the plans for raising money suggested by the special commission appointed for this purpose.

"I fully concur with the commission in the statement that with the completion of the Panama canal, there will be no limit to the possibilities of business, agricultural, industrial and professional progress in Alabama," said the governor. "On account of our contiguity to the Panama canal, with a magnificent harbor at the mouth of two of the greatest rivers in the world the port of Mobile will be the gateway to an immense commerce."

Governor O'Neal declares that the state cannot afford to miss this opportunity to make an adequate showing and exhibit of her resources.

Rehearing Sought.

At the next session of the supreme court, an application for a rehearing will be filed by the state in the case of Cyrus B. rown, against the Pittsburg Life and Trust company, which was decided adversely to the state at the last session of the court. In this case the state contends that it can collect a license tax on premiums that are remitted directly to the home offices of foreign insurance companies. In the lower court the case was won by the state, but in the higher court the verdict was reversed.

Asked to Join Roads Association.

Governor O'Neal has been invited to become one of the incorporators of the Alabama Good Roads association, the invitation being extended by J. Asa Rountree of Birmingham, secretary of that organization. Mr. Rountree in a letter to the governor, declares that the scope of the Alabama Good Roads association is to be broadened and that for this purpose the association will be incorporated under the civil and fraternal laws of the state at an early date.

EXPLANATION OF EUROPEAN CRISIS IS HARD TO FIND

Diplomats and Observers Unable to Understand the Attitude of Austria.

RECENTLY STRONG FOR PEACE

Count Berchtold, Only a Few Weeks Ago, Bitterly Criticized the War Party, and His Change of Front Has Not as Yet Been Explained.

"Confusion worse confounded" is the one phrase that aptly characterizes the war situation in Europe. The leading newspapers and the most experienced observers are unable to agree on any explanation of the crisis. And the reason is not far to seek.

Only a few weeks ago the foreign minister of Austria, Count Berchtold, was earnestly defending the pacific and moderate policy he had been pursuing toward the Balkans and Russia.

Berchtold for Peace.

In a speech to the delegates at Budapest he vigorously answered criticisms of spokesmen of the war party, particularly of a delegate who was supposed to be expressing the sentiments of the then heir presumptive, the late Archduke Franz Ferdinand. Count Berchtold spoke of the aged emperor's sincere and resolute devotion to peace; he gave arguments of his own, moreover, in support of a policy of patience and peace.

Feared Loss of Prestige.

The frankness and directness of that speech impressed everybody except those who feared that Austria might be accused of timidity and weakness, might be misunderstood and in consequence might lose political and military prestige.

There were some among these who thought, moreover, that Russia, whose recuperative power was wonderful—whatever might be said of its efficiency and actual strength when pitted against a more civilized and free power—was getting too mighty and too confident, and was enjoying too much opportunity for rehabilitation and consolidation of its financial and military-naval resources.

These vaguely favored a bold and aggressive policy even at the risk of war, which had better come sooner than later, they held.

Sweden Takes Up Cry.

But Count Berchtold's view prevailed for the moment and excellent observers concluded that Austria, at any rate, was not going to add to the troubles, complications, and dangers of Europe by tempting fortune.

At that very moment Sweden was excitedly discussing "the Russian peril" and demanding new measures of defense, while a section of the German press was pointing to the "bear that walks like a man" as the foe to reckon with in the near future.

Yet the peace of Europe is broken not by Russia, not by a Balkan power desirous of revising the settlement imposed by Roumania and the concert of Europe at the Bucharest conference, but by Austria, and seemingly under Count Berchtold's direction.

What has happened in the short interval? If peace was necessary and desirable to Austria-Hungary a few weeks ago, why is war inevitable today?

To understand the situation it is essential to distinguish between glittering generalities, fanciful aspirations, literature, and rhetoric, on the one hand, and hard, grim, concrete facts on the other. It is essential to know what the conflict is not. It is not a war between Teuton and Slav. It is not a war between the Pan-German world party and the Pan-Slav world party. It is not war for the preservation of Hapsburg monarchy.

Move Is Anti-Austrian.

The Pan-German movement is anti-Austrian and cannot fail to be so. The success of that movement would destroy Austria as a political entity. The Pan-German extremists have had to be rebuked and repudiated by responsible German statesmen. As allies of Austria they could not countenance a movement which assumed and labored for the disruption and disappearance of Austria.

The Pan-Slav movement in Russia is manifestly anti-Austrian, as well as anti-German. It dreams of Slav rule "from the Adriatic sea to the Pacific ocean." It dreams of Slav union or confederation under the gentle and benevolent sovereignty of Russia.

Czar's Interest in Servia.

Pan-Slavism is, however, in a limited sense, unmistakably in evidence in the czar's profound interest in Servia and Montenegro. The czar's ministers have often blundered in the Balkans and have at times caused estrangement, gravitation toward Germany, bitter feeling against Russia. But the blunders were personal blunders of bungling politicians. Russia has always posed and often acted as the patron, friend, and protector of the Slavs everywhere, and especially of the Balkan Slavs. It has had and still has its eye on its "estate in reversion," Constantinople, and it cannot hope to plant its flag there without the consent and support of the Balkan Slavs. It is good "Pan-Slavism" to support Servia.

But in facing Austria, Russia confronts not a German power, but a power that is itself largely Slav. Slav will thus be fighting Slav and the Germans, whatever their colors, will be fighting for Slavs and with other Slavs and postponing the realization of the Pan-German ambitions and dreams.

Jealousy a Great Factor.

Here, then, is a strange paradox, but not the only paradox in a situation full of anomalies—anomalies inseparable from the very nature and complexion of the Austro-Hungarian empire, an empire, to repeat, that has been held together quite as much by the jealousies and differences of outsiders as by the dynastic and personal influence of the Hapsburgs.

If Austria cannot and does not represent German interests and German culture in this fight, what is it fighting for? Pan-Servian agitation did not endanger its existence, while the war does. Its own Slav elements at no time displayed an inclination to exchange its rule for that of the czar, although they were not averse to using Pan-Slav slogans in order to secure better representation and larger recognition.

Danger to Dual Monarchy.

The opinion of the soundest students of politics has long been that if Austria-Hungary was to be preserved, only a policy of peace, liberalism, greater autonomy, and home rule, conciliation of the various races and elements by reform measures, political and social, contained the promise of such preservation.

The war actually endangers the existence of the dual monarchy, for aside from the chances of defeat and disaster, there is the fact that the Slav subjects of the emperor cannot sympathize with it. The separatist and particularist tendencies feared by the court and government can only be deepened and strengthened by the conflict.

The army and navy may be loyal and obedient, as many assert. The army and navy may be "Austrian," if the nation is not. But popular sentiment is a potent factor in war and popular sentiment among the Austrian and Hungarian Slavs does ont favor fratricidal strife.

No wonder the intelligent world is puzzled and utterly at a loss to explain Austria's course.

TO LEAD SERVIAN ARMY

Crown Prince Alexander of Servia, who made a gallant record during the Balkan war, will lead his battle-scarred veterans against the Austrians.

GREAT BRITAIN MOBLIZES FORCES MAY BE DRAWN INTO CONFLICT

Sir Edward Grey Reviewed the Situation, His Words Were Generally Taken to Mean that Great Britain is Committed to War—Few Reports of Military Movements.

London.—John Burns, president of the local government board, resigned from the cabinet, owing to disagreement over the war policy of the British government, and a late report says Viscount Morley, lord president of the council, was considering resigning.

Sir Edward Grey, in the commons, reviewed the situation, and although he used qualifying phrases, his words were taken generally to mean that England is committed to war.

The German ambassador at Paris was ordered by the Emperor to demand his passports, which lines up France with Russia, Servia and Montenegro against Germany and Austria.

The mobilization of most of the countries of Europe had been virtually completed. Holland has been invaded at Limburg by German troops, according to reports, and the Dutch people are said to b flooding the country to prevent the passage of soldiers.

Germany has issued a white book, justifying her action with respect to Russia, at the same time German diplomats at London are using their utmost efforts to win Great Britain to a position of neutrality.

Few reports of actual military movements are being received, owing to the censorship.

Events Leading to War Outlined In Statement by Czar Nicholas

St. Petersburg.—Emperor Nicholas issued a manifesto outlining the events leading up to the declaration of war by Germany, and saying that "Russians will rise like one man and repulse the insolent attack of the enemy.

The text follows:

"By the grace of God, we, Nicholas II, Emperor and Autocrat of all the Russias, King of Poland and Grand Duke of Finland, etc., to all our faithful subjects make known that Russia, related by faith and blood to the Slav People, has never regarded their faith with indifference.

"But the fraternal sentiments of the Russian people for the Slavs have been awakened with perfect unanimity and extraordinary force in these last few days, when Austro-Hungary knowingly addressed to Servia claims inacceptable for an independent state.

"Having paid no attention to the pacific and conciliatory reply of the Servian government and having rejected the benevolent intervention of Russia, Austria-Hungary made haste to proceed to an armed attack and began to bombard Belgrade, an open place.

"Forced by the situation thus created to take necessary measures of precaution, we ordered the army and navy put on a war footing, at the same time using every endeavor to obtain a peaceful solution. Pourparlers were begun amid friendly relations with Germany and her ally, Austria, for the blood and the property of our subjects were dear to us.

"Contrary to our hopes in good, neighborly relations of long date, and disregarding our assurances that the mobilization measures taken were in pursuance of no object hostile to her, Germany demanded their immediate cessation. Being rebuffed in this demand, Germany suddenly declared war on Russia.

"Today it is not only the protection of a country related to us and unjustly attacked, that must be accorded, but we must safeguard the honor, the dignity and the integrity of Russia and her position among the great powers.

"We believe unshakably that all our faithful subjects will rise with unanimity and devotion for the defence of Russian soil, that internal discord will be forgotten in this threatening hour; that the unity of the Emperor with his people will become still more close, and that Russia, rising like one man, will repulse the insolent attack of the enemy.

"With a profound faith in the justice of our work and with a humble hope in omnipotent providence in prayer, we call God's blessing on Holy Russia, and her valiant troops.

"NICHOLAS."

Statement Issued by Germany Charges France as Aggressor

Berlin.—A further official communication regarding French acts of hostility against Germany was published here. It said:

"The German troops hitherto have obeyed orders not to cross the French frontier. French, on the contrary, have made several attacks on the frontier posts without any declaration of war having been made.

"The French have crossed the border at several places in spite of the fact that the French government a few days ago informed us that it would not infringe on the unoccupied zone of six miles from the frontier, and companies of French troops have been in the occupation of a number of German villages.

"French army aeronauts have been flying over Baden and Bavaria and by throwing bombs have violated Belgian neutrality by flying over Belgian territory into the Province of the Rhine in an effort to destroy our railways.

"In this way France has opened the attack upon us and has established a state of war which has compelled the German Empire to take measures for the security of its territory."

Germans Invade France and are Reported to Have Been Repulsed

London.—German forces began the invasion of France without, so far as is known a declaration of war having been made. Two German detachments entered French territory, moving in the direction of Paris.

One German force crossed the French frontier near the village of Cirey, between Nancy and Strassburg, and another German detachment, probably the twenty-ninth infantry, invaded the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, neutral territory between Belgium and Germany, and continued its march on the French fortified town of Longwy.

The German force which came into France near Cirey, which is 40 miles from Nancy, is reported to have been repulsed with heavy losses.

U. S. Adds More than a Billion Dollars to Circulating Medium

Washington.—More than a billion dollars in currency will be added to the circulating medium in the United States by the action of Congress to meet the situation resulting from the European crisis. The new money, backed by prime assets of banks, may be issued under a modification of the bank law, passed in both House and Senate, then compromised in conference and approved by the administration for final action in both houses.

All national banks and all state banks and trust companies, members of the new federal reserve system, and those that have agreed to join, may issue notes under the Aldrich-Vreeland section of the bank law, up to 125 per cent of their combined capital and surplus.

There is approximately $1,760,000 such capital and surplus on which issue of notes may be based. Of that, about $800,000,000 invested in government bonds is not available. Approximately $900,000,000 plus 25 per cent therefore is ready for a basis of issue. Bankers told administration leaders the issue available should more than care for the situation.

RUSSIAN FORCES CROSS THE GERMAN FRONTIER

Berlin.—Russia has begun the invasion of German Territory, Russian forces having crossed the German frontier at Schwinden, southeast of Bialla, while last night a Russian patrol entered Germany near Fichenreid, in Posen.

Alabama is just entering upon the greatest era of good road construction known in her history, according to J. T. Gorman, Examiner of Public Accounts, who has prepared a statement showing the amount of work done on the roads of Alabama and treating in general with the good road movement in the United States. During last year the total aid given to road building by the state amounted to $116,000, according to Mr. Gorman. He declares that it is the earnest hope that the next legislature will increase the state appropriation for the construction of good roads.

Cotton picking time is getting close enough to figure by days. The bolls are beginning to burst and the fields are slowly turning white. In ten more days the black faces of the field hands and the white cotton piled high in the hampers will be a common sight in the southern counties. Even with picking time so close at hand, the size of the crop is a matter of uncertainty. Most of the counties are crying for rain and most of the farmers say that their cotton is parching and shedding. Many say that the last week has brought deterioration to the crop. The hot sun has been merciless, the rain has kept away from the cotton belt and many of the counties that predicted a bumper crop earlier in the season have lost their optimism. The boll weevil, marching steadily eastward, has wrought havoc in some of the counties, and from these reports a good crop is doubtful. Yet with the big batch of troubles and pessimistic reports there come many reports that sound a note of hope, and a few that proclaim the crop of their county to be a bumper.

NEW IDEA
Helped Wisconsin Couple.

It doesn't pay to stick too closely to old notions of things. New ideas often lead to better health, success and happiness.

A Wis. couple examined an idea new to them and stepped up several rounds on the health ladder. The husband writes:

"Several years ago we suffered from coffee drinking, were sleepless, nervous, sallow, weak and irritable. My wife and I both loved coffee and thought it was a bracer." (Delusion.)

"Finally, after years of suffering, we read of Postum and the harmfulness of coffee, and believing that to grow we should give some attention to new ideas, we decided to test Postum.

"When we made it right we liked it and were free of ills caused by coffee. Our friends noticed the change—fresher skin, sturdier nerves, better temper, etc.

"These changes were not sudden, but increased as we continued to drink and enjoy Postum, and we lost the desire for coffee.

"Many of our friends did not like Postum at first, because they did not make it right. But when they made Postum according to directions on pkg., they liked it better than coffee and were benefited by the change."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. Made in the cup with hot water—no boiling. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

THE UNION-BANNER

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

It is rather humiliating to be called a watchdog; but we had rather be a watchdog, guarding the people's interest, and ready al all times to warn them of pending danger, than one who is aspiring supposedly to dictate for the better and at heart a false ftiend, ready at any moment to fillibuster a few times and disappear all of a sudden, leaving someone else with the bag to hold.

It seems that some politicians who were greatly concerned about the Progressive mass meeting Saturday, but who were not disposed to show themselves for some unknown reason, are surprised and disapoointed at the manner of proceedings of said meeting. They must have been expecting the party leaders to go headstrong into something which they calculated would give the Democrats a clue at their opponents—and that is where they were mistaken. Perfect harmony dominated the whole afiair, And nothing was left undone, nor nothing done in a way that will be a discredit to the Progressive party in Chilton county.

Yes, you call us a watchdog of the county treasury, Mr. Press, and may we prove worthy of the trust. And we try to be watchful of other interests of our people too--not only their money; and do not forget that we are going to give warning of any danger we see. Do not try to put any of your thin woven Democratic yarns over the people of this county, pretending that they are rock-ribbed democracy and substantial logic. If you do, your watchdog will give the sound of danger to those whose interests are being jeopardized, and they will rise up and demand your justification. We just want to give you fair warning so you can save yourself from getting "up a tree" like Moses did a few weeks ago, it you are capable of exercising the proper judgment.

Last week the Clanton Press said there was not a word of truth in the statement of the Union-Banner that the county was in debt, and owed accounts on its current expenses. The best justification we could ask for in answering this accusation of the Press is the vote that was taken at the mass meeting last Saturday, and the editor of the Press was a personal witness to it. Those to whom the county was owing fees for conducting elections and enumerating school children, road work and other things, were asked to stand up and about thirty men in the room rose to their feet. The Press knew that the county owed these things. It also knows that these little items are just a small part of what the county does owe. It knows that there are debts on the county for road work, and current expenses that amount, as we said, to about fifteen thousand dollars. We say the Press knows these these things, because everybody else knows them, and consequently they are bound to know them too. If this incident is not sufficient to satisfy the people as to who is right regarding the matter of the county being in debt, we shall be glad to give further citation.

COL. HOWARD'S SPEECH

The address delivered by Col. M. W. Howard before the Progressive mass meeting last Saturday, was a powerful oration, and in point of estimation, far beyond our limited capacity of expression.

First of all, Mr. Howard is a man of broad knowledgs and ability with an exhaustless fund of information regarding the political history of our state and nation. This with his remarkable and expressive talent for public speaking made him able to draw out from the debths of his intelect, an address of the very best kind.

Throughout, it was imbued with the spirit of Progressiveism, making arguments for the principles of the party which no one can dispute.

He pictured the Progressive party as the party of the people, in rivalry with wicked Democracy, and showed the great necesity of the conflict. The hope which he expressed for the triumph of Progressiveism over its enemies was put in beautiful expression, and made the spirit of eagerness for a more popular government warm the soul of every man who heard him—every man from the gray haired veteran of the vanquished cause of the Populist party of years ago, who labored hard and dreamed intently for its success, to the young and vigorous champion of a civic reformation which is sure to come, at some time or other.

The following appeared in last week's issue of the Clanton Press: "The Union-Banner is either grossly ignorant of the financial condition of the county, or is willing to resort to any kind of scheme to deceiye the people and discredit the present board of Commissioners without first ascertaining the facts. There is not a word of truth in the statement that the county has failed to pay the current expenses; nor is it true that the county owes several thousand dollars on accounts that have not been passed on by Commissioners Court."

In reply to this we want to ask the Press the following questions: Doesn't the county owe at this time six or seven thousand dollars on road work? Doesn't the county owe three thousand dollars on one of the roads machines? Doesn't the county owe over a thousand dollars to the managers and clerks of the elections that have been held this year, and to the school enumerators? Doesn't the county owe its own current expenses for the last four or five months? Will not all the above amount to about fifteen thousand dollars, and perhaps more? Is it not a fact that there is not a dollar in the general funds of the county? Do you know whether or not there are being held from the Commissioners several thousand dollars worth of claims, as there was during the campaign of two years ago, until after the November election? Now Mr. Press, we want answers to these questions. Let's not have any "beating the devil around the stump," as the saying is; let's have your answer plain and open. That will be enough to make every doubting mind satisfied.

If the Press will inform itself as to the correct answers to our questions this week, it will doubtless find itself not so well posted as they might have tried to make believe. Would the Press in the face of facts which everyone knows to be the answer of our questions, make the statemeht that this county does not owe anything, and has paid up its current expenses?

HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Henry Russell Miller, the young Pittsburgh lawyer-novelist, who is known for his political stories which have appeared during the last few years, has distinguished himself again through the production of another story, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt"—a story of social and industrial Pittsburgh—which critics say is far better than either "The Man Higher Up" or "His Rise to Power," his two earlier political stories. We have secured this story as our next serial, and the first installment will appear in an early issue.

For a number of years Mr. Miller has exhibited a great interest in the steel industry. He has made the acquaintance of many of the big men as well as the laborers in the mill towns, and from them has learned a great deal about the game.

"The Ambition of Mark Truitt" is a story that is not only tremendously interesting, but one that will cause readers to stop and think.

Whole Family Benefited By Wonderful Remedy

There are many little things to annoy us, under present conditions of life. The hurry, hard work, noise and strain all tell on us and tend to provoke nervousness and irritability. We are frequently so worn out we can neither eat, sleep nor work with any comfort. We are out of line with ourselves and others as well.

A good thing to do under such circumstances is to take something like to relieve the strain on the nerves. Mrs. J. B. Hartsfield, 82 Plum St., Atlanta Ga., writes:

"I have on several occasions been vastly relieved by the use of your medicines, especially the Anti-Pain Pills, which I keep constantly on hand for the use of myself, husband and two sons. Nothing in the world equals them as a headache remedy. Often I am enabled by the use of one or two of the Pills to continue my housework when otherwise I would be in bed. My husband joins me in my praise of the Anti-Pain Pills and Nervine."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

are relied upon to relieve pain, nervousness and irritability in thousands of households. Of proven merit after twenty years' use, you can have no reason for being longer without them.

At all Druggists, 25 doses 25 cents.

HOW CHILDREN GROW

Children grow by nourishment—not overloaded stomachs or rich foods but qualities that are readily converted into life-sustaining blood; too often their digestive powers cannot procure these qualities from ordinary foods which results in weakness, dullness and sickness.

If your children are under-size, underweight, catch cold easily, are languid, backward, pale or frail, give them Scott's Emulsion which is pure medicinal nourishment. It sharpens the appetite, builds healthy flesh, firm muscles and active brains. Scott's is growing-food for children. Refuse alcoholic substitutes.

The Hollow of Her Hand

by George Barr McCutcheon

"I thought perhaps he had written you about his plans."

"My father does not know that I have returned to New York."

"Oh, I see. Of course. Um—um! By the way, I think the colonel is a corker. One of the most amiable thoroughbreds I've ever come across. Ripping. He's never said anything to me about your antipathy toward him, but I can see with half an eye that he is terribly depressed about it. Can't you get together some way on—"

"Really, Mr. Wrandall, you are encouraging your imagination to a point where words ultimately must fail you," she said very positively. Booth could hardly repress a chuckle.

"It's not imagination on my part," said Leslie with conviction, failing utterly to recognize the obvious. "I suppose you know that he is coming over to visit me for six weeks or so. We became rattling good friends before we parted. My Jove, you should hear him on old Lord Murgatroyd's will! The quintessence of wit! I couldn't take it as he does. Expectations and all that sort of thing, you know, going up like a hot air balloon and bursting in plain view. But he never squeaked. Laughed it off. A British attribute, I dare say. I suppose you know that he is obliged to sell his estate in Ireland?"

Hetty started. She could not conceal the look of shame that leaped into her eyes.

"I—I did not know," she murmured.

"Must be quite a shock to you. Sit down, Brandy. You look very picturesque standing, but chairs were made to sit upon—or in, whichever is proper.

Booth shrugged his shoulders.

"I think I'll stand, if you don't mind, Les."

"I merely suggested it, old chap, fearing you might have overlooked the possibilities. Yes, Miss Castleton, he left us in London to go up to Belfast on this dismal business." There was something in the back of his mind that he was trying to get at in a tactful manner. "By the way, is this property entailed?"

"I know nothing at all about it, Mr. Wrandall," said she, with a pleading glance at her lover, as if to inquire what stand she should take in this distressing situation.

"If it is entailed he can't sell it," said Booth quietly.

"That's true," said Leslie, somewhat dubiously. Then, with a magnanimity that covered a multitude of doubts he added: "Of course, I am only interested in seeing that you are properly protected, Miss Castleton. I've no doubt you hold an interest in the estates."

"I can't very well discuss a thing I know absolutely nothing about," she said succinctly.

"Most of it is in building lots and factories in Belfast, of course. It was more in the nature of a question than a declaration. "The old family castle isn't very much of an asset, I take it."

"I fancy you can trust Colonel Castleton to make the best possible deal in the premises," said Booth drily.

"I suppose so," said the other resignedly. "He is a shrewd beggar, I'm convinced of that. Strange, however, that I haven't heard a word from him since he left us in London. I've been expecting a cablegram from him every day for nearly a fortnight, letting me know when to expect him."

"Are you going to California this winter for the flying?" asked Hetty.

Sara entered at that juncture, and they all sat down to listen for half an hour to Leslie's harangue on the way the California meet was being mismanaged, at the end of which he departed.

He took Booth away with him, much to that young man's disgust.

"Do you know, Brandy, old fellow," said he as they walked down Fifth avenue in the gathering dusk of the early winter evening, "ever since I've begun to suspect that damned old humbug of a father of hers, I've been congratulating myself that there isn't the remotest chance of his ever becoming my father-in-law. And, by George, you'll never know how near I was to leaping blindly into the brambles. What a close call I had!"

Booth's sarcastic smile was hidden by the dusk. He made no pretense of openly resenting the meanness of spirit that moved Leslie to these caddish remarks. He merely announced in a dry, cutting voice:

"I think Miss Castleton is to be congratulated that her injury is no greater than nature made it in the beginning."

"What do you mean by 'nature?' "

"Nature gave her a father, didn't it?"

"Obviously."

"Well, why add insult to injury?"

"By Jove! Oh, I say, old man!"

They parted at the next corner. As Booth started to cross over to the Plaza, Leslie called out after him:

"I say, Brandy, just a second, please. Are you going to marry Miss Castleton?"

"I am."

"Then, I retract the scurvy things I said back there. I asked her to marry me three times and she refused me three times. What I said about the brambles was rotten. I'd ask her again if I thought she's have me. There you are, old fellow. I'm a rotten cad, but I apologize to you just the same."

"You're learning, Leslie," said Booth, taking the hand the other held out to him.

While the painter was dining at his club later on in the evening, he was called to the telephone. Watson was on the wire. He said that Mrs. Wrandall would like to know if Mr. Booth could drop in on her for a few minutes after dinner, "to discuss a very important matter, if you please, sir." At nine o'clock, Booth was in Sara's library, trying to grasp a new and remarkable phase in the character of that amazing woman.

He found Hetty waiting for him when he arrived.

"I don't know what it all means, Brandon," she said hurriedly, looking over her shoulder as she spoke. "Sara says that she has come to a decision of some sort. She wants us to hear her plan before making it final. I—I don't understand her at all tonight."

"It can't be anything serious, dearest," he said, but something cold and nameless oppressed him just the same.

"She asked me if I had finally decided to—to be your wife, Brandon. I said I had asked you for two or three days more in which to decide. It seemed to depress her. She said she didn't see how she could give me up, even to you. She wants to be near me always. It is—it is really tragic, Brandon."

He took her hands in his.

"We can fix that," said he confidently. "Sara can live with us if she feels that way about it. Our home shall be hers when she likes, and as long as she chooses. It will be open to her all the time, to come and go or to stay, just as she elects. Isn't that the way to put it?"

"I suggested something of the sort, but she wasn't very much impressed. Indeed, she appeared to be somewhat—yes, I could not have been mistaken—somewhat harsh and terrified when I spoke of it. Afterwards she was more reasonable. She thanked me and—there were tears in her eyes at the time—and said she would think it over. All she asks is that I may be happy and free and untroubled all the rest of my life. This was before dinner. At dinner she appeared to be brooding over something. When we left the table she took me to her room and said that she had come to an important decision. Then she instructed Watson to find you if possible."

"'Gad, it's all very upsetting," he said, shaking his head.

"I think her conscience is troubling her. She hates the Wrandalls, but I—I don't know why I should feel as I do about it—but I believe she wants them to know!"

He stared for a moment, and then his face brightened. "And so do I, Hetty, so do I! They ought to know!"

"I should feel so much easier if the whole world knew," said she earnestly.

Sara heard the girl's words as she stood in the door. She came forward with a strange—even abashed—smile, after closing the door behind her.

"I don't agree with you, dearest, when you say that the world should know, but I have come to the conclusion that you should be tried and acquitted by a jury made up of Challis Wrandall's own flesh and blood. The Wrandalls must know the truth."

CHAPTER XXI.

The Jury of Four.

The Wrandalls sat waiting and wondering. They had been sent for and they had deigned to respond, much to their own surprise. Redmond Wrandall occupied a place at the head of the library table. At his right sat his wife. Vivian and Leslie, by direction, took seats at the side of the long table, which had been cleared of its mass of books and magazines. Lawyer Carroll was at the other end of the table, perceptibly nervous and anxious. Hetty sat a little apart from the others, a rather forlorn, detached member of the conclave. Brandon Booth, pale-faced and alert, drew up a chair alongside Carroll, facing Sara who alone remained standing, directly opposite the four Wrandalls.

Not one of the Wrandalls knew why they, as a family, were there. They had not the slightest premonition of what was to come.

The Wrandalls had been routed from their comfortable fireside—for what? They were asking the question of themselves and they were waiting stonily for the answer.

"It is very stuffy in here," Vivian had said with a glance at the closed doors after Sara had successfully placed her jury in the box.

"Keep still, Viv," whispered Leslie, with a fine assumption of awe. "It's a spiritualistic meeting. You'll scare the spooks away."

It was at this juncture that Sara rose from her chair and faced them, as calmly, as complacently as if she were about to ask them to proceed to the dining-room instead of to throw a bomb into their midst that would shatter their smug serenity for all time to come. With a glance at Mr. Carroll she began, clearly, firmly and without a prefatory apology for what was to follow.

"I have asked you to come here tonight to be my judges. I am on trial. You are about to hear the story of my unspeakable perfidy. I only require of you that you hear me to the end before passing judgment."

At her words, Hetty and Booth started perceptibly; a quick glance passed between them, as if each was inquiring whether the other had caught the extraordinary words of self-indictment. A puzzled frown appeared on Hetty's brow.

"Perfidy?" interposed Mr. Wrandall. His wife's expression changed from one of bored indifference to sharp inquiry. Leslie paused in the act of lighting a cigarette.

"It is the mildest term I can command," said Sara. "I shall be as brief as possible in stating the case, Mr. Wrandall. You will be surprised to hear that I have taken it upon myself, as the wife of Challis Wrandall and, as I regard it, the one most vitally concerned if not interested in the discovery and punishment of the person who took his life—I say I have taken it upon myself to shield, protect and defend the unhappy young woman who accompanied him to Burton's inn on that night in March. She has had my constant, my personal protection for more than twenty months."

The Wrandalls leaned forward in their chairs. The match burned Leslie's fingers, and he dropped it without appearing to notice the pain.

"What is this you are saying?" demanded Redmond Wrandall.

"When I left the inn that night, after seeing my husband's body in the little upstairs room, I said to myself that the one who took his life had unwittingly done me a service. He was my husband; I loved him, I adored him. To the end of my days I could have gone on loving him in spite of the cruel return he gave for my love and loyalty. I shall not attempt to tell you of the countless lapses of fidelity on his part. You would not believe me. But he always came back to me with the pitiful love he had for me, and I forgave him his transgressions. These things you know. He confessed many things to you, Mr. Wrandall. He humbled himself to me. Perhaps you will recall that I never complained to you of him. What rancor I had was always directed toward you, his family, who would see no wrong in your king but looked upon me as dirt beneath his feet. There were moments when I could have slain him with my own hands, but my heart rebelled. There were times when he said to me that I ought to kill him for the things he had done. You may now understand what I mean when I say that the girl who went to Burton's inn with him did me a service. I will not say that I considered her guiltless at the time. On the contrary, I looked upon her in quite a different way. I had no means of knowing then that she was as pure as snow and that he would have despoiled her of everything that was sweet and sacred to her. She took his life in order to save that which was dearer to her than her own life, and she was on her way to pay for her deed with her life if necessary when I came upon her and intervened."

"You—you know who she is?" said Mr. Wrandall, in a low, incredulous voice.

"I have known almost from the beginning. Presently you will hear her story, from her own lips."

Involuntarily four pairs of eyes shifted. They looked blankly at Hetty Castleton.

Speaking swiftly, Sara depicted the scenes and sensations experienced during that memorable motor journey to New York city.

"I could not believe that she was a vicious creature, even then. Something told me that she was a tender, gentle thing who had fallen into evil hands and had struck because she was unevil. I did not doubt that she had been my husband's mistress, but I could not destroy the conviction that somehow she had been justified in doing the thing she had done. My gravest mistake was in refusing to hear her story in all of its details. I only permitted her to acknowledge that she had killed him, no more. I did not want to hear the thing which I assumed to be true. Therein lies my deepest fault. For months and months I misjudged her in my heart, yet secretly loved her. Now I understand why I loved her. It was because she was innocent of the only crime I could lay at her feet. Now I come to the crime of which I stand self-accused. I must have been mad all these months. I have no other defense to offer. You may take it as you see it for yourselves. I do not ask for pardon. After I deliberately had set about to shield this unhappy girl—to cheat the law, if you please—to cheat you, perhaps—I conceived the horrible thought to avenge myself for all the indignities I had sustained at the hands of you Wrandalls, and at the same time to even my account with the one woman whom I could put my finger upon as having robbed me of my husband's love. You see I put it mildly. I have hated all of you, Mrs. Wrandall, even as you have hated me. Today—now—I do not feel as I did in other days toward you. I do not love you, still I do not hate you. I do not forgive you, and yet I think I have come to see things from your point of view. I can only repeat that I do not hate you as I once did."

She paused. The Wrandalls were too deeply submerged in horror to speak. They merely stared at her as if stupefied; as breathless, as motionless as stones.

"There came a day when I observed that Leslie was attracted by the guest in my house. On that day the plan took root in my brain. I—"

"Good God!" fell from Leslie's lips. "You—you had that in mind?"

"It became a fixed, inflexible purpose, Leslie. Not that I hated you as I hated the rest, for you tried to be considerate. The one grudge I held against you was that in seeking to sustain me you defamed your own brother. You came to me with stories of his misdeeds; you said that he was a scoundrel and that you would not blame me for 'showing him up.' Do you not remember? And so my plot involved you; you were the only one through whom I could strike. There were times when I faltered. I could not bear the thought of sacrificing Hetty Castleton, nor was it easy to thoroughly appease my conscience in respect to you. Still, if I could have had my way a few months ago, if coercion had been of any avail, you would now be the husband of your brother's slayer. Then I came to know that she was not what I had thought she was. She was honest. My bubble burst. I came out of the maze in which I had been living and saw clearly that what I had contemplated was the most atrocious—"

"Atrocious?" cried Mrs. Redmond Wrandall between her set teeth. "Diabolical! Diabolical! My God, Sara, what a devil you—" She did not complete the sentence, but sank back in her chair and stared with wide, horror-struck eyes at her rigid daughter-in-law.

Her husband, his hand shaking as if with palsy, pointed a finger at Hetty. "And so you are the one we have been hunting for all these months, Miss Castleton! You are the one we want! You who have sat at our table, you who have smiled in our faces—"

"Stop, Mr. Wrandall!" commanded Sara, noting the ashen face of the girl. "Don't let the fact escape you that I am the guilty person. Don't forget that she owed her freedom, if not her life to me. I alone kept her from giving herself up to the law. All that has transpired since that night in March must be placed to my account. Hetty Castleton has been my prisoner. She has rebelled a thousand times and I have conquered—not by threats but by love! Do you understand? Because of her love for me, and because she believed that I loved her, she submitted. You are not to accuse her, Mr. Wrandall. Accuse me! I am on trial here. Hetty Castleton is a witness against me, if you choose to call upon her as such. If not, I shall ask her to speak in my defense, if she can do so."

"This is lunacy!" cried Mr. Wrandall, coming to his feet. "I don't care what your motives may have been. They do not make her any less a murderess. She—"

"We must give her over to the police—" began his wife, struggling to her feet. She staggered. It was Booth who stepped quickly to her side to support her. Leslie was staring at Hetty.

Vivian touched her father's arm. She was very pale but vastly more composed than the others.

"Father, listen to me," she said. Her voice trembled in spite of her effort to control it. "We are condemning Miss Castleton unheard. Let us hear everything before we—"

"Good God, Vivian! Do you mean to—"

"How can we place any reliance on what she may say?" cried Mrs. Wrandall.

"Nevertheless," said Vivian firmly. "I for one shall not condemn her unheard. I mean to be as fair to her as Sara has been. It shall not be said that all the Wrandalls are smaller than Sara Gooch!"

"My child—" began her father incredulously. His jaw dropped suddenly. His daughter's shot had landed squarely in the heart of the Wrandall pride.

"If she has anything to say"—said Mrs. Wrandall, waving Booth aside and sinking stiffly into her chair. Her husband sat down. Their jaws set hard.

"Thank you, Vivian," said Sara, surprised in spite of herself. "You are nobler than I—"

"Please don't thank me, Sara," said Vivian icily. "I was speaking for Miss Castleton."

Sara flushed. "I suppose it is useless to ask you to be fair to Sara Gooch, as you choose to call me."

"Do you feel in your heart that we still owe you anything?"

"Enough of this, Vivian," spoke up her father harshly. "If Miss Castleton desires to speak we will listen to her. I must advise you, Miss Castleton, that the extraordinary disclosures made by my daughter-in-law do not lessen your culpability. We do not insist on this confession from you. You deliver it at your own risk. I want to be fair with you. If Mr. Carroll is your counsel, he may advise you now to refuse to make a statement."

Mr. Carroll bowed slightly in the general direction of the Wrandalls. "I have already advised Miss Castleton to state the case fully and completely to you, Mr. Wrandall. It was I who originally suggested this—well, what you might call a private trial for her. I am firmly convinced that when you have heard her story, you, as her judges, will acquit her of the charge of murder. Moreover, you will be content to let your own verdict end the matter, sparing yourselves the shame and ignominy of having her story told in a criminal court for the delectation of an eager but somewhat implacable world."

"Your language is extremely unpleasant, Mr. Carroll," said Mr. Wrandall coldly.

"I meant to speak kindly, sir."

"Do you mean, sir, that we will let the matter rest after hearing the—"

"That is precisely what I mean, Mr. Wrandall. You will not consider her guilty of a crime. Please bear in mind this fact: but for Sara and Miss Castleton you would not have known the truth. Miss Castleton could not be convicted in a court of justice. Nor will she be convicted here this evening, in this little court of ours."

"Miss Castleton is not on trial," interposed Sara calmly. "I am the offender. She has already been tried and proved innocent."

Leslie, in his impatience, tapped sharply on the table with his seal ring.

"Please let her tell the story. Permit me to say, Miss Castleton, that you will not find the Wrandalls as harsh and vindictive as you may have been led to believe."

Mrs. Wrandall passed her hand over her eyes. "To think that we have been friendly to this girl all these—"

"Calm yourself, my dear," said her husband, after a glance at his son and daughter, a glance of unspeakable helplessness. He could not understand them.

As Hetty arose, Mrs. Wrandall senior lowered her eyes and not once did she look up during the recital that followed. Her hands were lying limply in her lap, and she breathed heavily, almost stertoriously. The younger Wrandalls leaned forward with their clear, unwavering gaze fixed on the earnest face of the young Englishwoman who had slain their brother.

"You have heard Sara accuse herself," said the girl slowly, dispassionately. "The shock was no greater to you than it was to me. All that she has said is true, and yet I—I would so much rather she had left herself unarraigned. We were agreed that I should throw myself on your mercy. Mr. Carroll said that you were fair and just people, that you would not condemn me under the circumstances. But that Sara should seek to take the blame is—"

"Alas, my dear, I am to blame," said Sara, shaking her head. "But for me your story would have been told months ago, the courts would have cleared you, and all the world would have execrated my husband for the thing he did—my husband and your son, Mrs. Wrandall—whom we both loved. God believe me, I think I loved him more than all of you put together!"

She sat down abruptly and buried her face in her arms on the edge of the table.

"If I could only induce you to forgive her," began Hetty, throwing out her hands to the Wrandalls, only to be met by a gesture of repugnance from the grim old man.

"Your story, Miss Castleton," he said hoarsely.

"From the beginning, if you please," added the lawyer quietly. "Leave out nothing."

Clearly, steadily and with the utmost sincerity in her voice and manner, the girl began the story of her life. She passed hastily over the earlier periods, frankly exposing the unhappy conditions attending her home life, her subsequent activities as a performer on the London stage after Colonel Castleton's defection; the few months devoted to posing for Hawkright, the painter, and later on her engagement as governess in the wealthy Budlong family. She devoted some time and definiteness to her first encounter with Challis Wrandall on board the west-bound steamer, an incident that came to pass in a perfectly natural way. Her deck chair stood next to his, and he was not slow in making himself agreeable. It did not occur to her till long afterwards that he deliberately had traded positions with an elderly gentleman who occupied the chair on the first day out. Before the end of the voyage they were very good friends. . . .

"When we landed in New York, he assisted me in many ways. Afterwards, on learning that I was not to go to California, I called him up on the telephone to explain my predicament. He urged me to stay in New York; he guaranteed that there would be no difficulty in securing a splendid position in the east. I had no means of knowing that he was married. I accepted him for what I thought him to be: a genuine American gentleman. They are supposed to be particularly considerate with women. His conduct toward me was beyond reproach. I have never known a man who was so courteous, so gentle. To me, he was the most fascinating man in the world. No woman could have resisted him, I am sure of that."

She shot a quick, appealing glance at Booth's hard-set face. Her lip trembled for a second.

"I fell madly in love with him," she went on resolutely. "I dreamed of him, I could hardly wait for the time to come when I was to see him. He never came to the wretched little lodging house I have told you about. I—I met him outside. One night he told me that he loved me, loved me passionately. I—I said that I would be his wife. Somehow it seemed to me that he regarded me very curiously for a moment or two. He seemed to be surprised, uncertain. I remember that he laughed rather queerly. It did not occur to me to doubt him. One day he came for me, saying that he wanted me to see the little apartment he had taken, where we were to live after we were married. I went with him. He said that if I liked it, I could move in at once, but I would not consent to such an arrangement. For the first time I began to feel that everything was not as it should be. I—I remained in the apartment but a few minutes. The next day he came to me, greatly excited and more demonstrative than ever before, to say that he had arranged for a quiet, jolly little wedding up in the country. Strangely enough, I experienced a queer feeling that all was not as it should be, but his eagerness, his persistence dispelled the small doubt that had begun even then to shape itself. I consented to go with him on the next night to an inn out in the country, where a college friend who was a minister of the gospel would meet us, driving over from his parish a few miles away. I said that I preferred to be married in a church. He laughed and said it could be arranged when we got to the inn and had talked it over with the minister. Still uneasy, I asked why it was necessary to employ secrecy. He told me that his family were in Europe and that he wanted to surprise them by giving them a daughter who was actually related to an English nobleman. The family had been urging him to marry a stupid but rich New York girl and he—oh, well he uttered a great deal of nonsense about my beauty, my charm, and all that sort of thing—"

She paused for a moment. No one spoke. Her audience of judges, with the exception of the elder Mrs. Wrandall, watched her as if fascinated. Their faces were almost expressionless. With a perceptible effort, she resumed her story, narrating events that carried it up to the hour when she walked into the little upstairs room at Burton's inn with the man who was to be her husband.

POULTRY FACTS

GOOD POULTRY HOUSE PLANS

Description of Structure Suitable for Accommodation of Fifty Hens—Can Be Enlarged.

The writer has noticed the repeated request by readers for plans of a good farm poultry house. For this reason I am giving you herewith the description and plans of a house large enough to accommodate 50 hens comfortably, writes F. W. Kazmeier in Wisconsin Agriculturist. If you desire to house more, build it longer.

This building is 24 feet long and 12 feet deep, 7 feet high in front and 4½ feet high in the rear. The foundation is of concrete about eight inches higher than surrounding ground. The floor is of cement laid on a layer of 6 inches of very coarse gravel. The house of course, faces to the south to obtain all the sunlight possible for the welfare of the fowls. The studding, rafters, sills and plates are all of 2 by 4's. The uprights are placed 30 inches apart, roof timbers two feet apart. The frame is covered with a good grade of hemlock matched boards, which in turn is covered on the north side, east and west ends with a good grade of roofing paper. The south side is painted with two coats. The rear or north side of roof is not allowed to project. This makes it possible to lap the roofing over this joint, making it practically air tight. The roosting closet is double boarded, including the west end. In very cold weather a muslin curtain is let down in front. This comes to within six inches of the bottom of the roost platform. This curtain should not be used except on exceedingly severe cases of cold weather.

There are in the front, two windows of glass, each light 9 by 12 inches. These windows are hinged on the inside, so as to swing in and against the wall when open. These windows are about two feet above the floor. There is also an opening 8 feet long by 3 feet wide, which is covered with 1-inch poultry netting. Here also a muslin or burlap covered curtain frame is hinged to be lowered in severe weather. This curtain is so hinged as to swing up against the roof where it is fastened when open. This will admit plenty of fresh air which is essential.

The roost platform is 16 feet long and 3½ feet wide and 3 feet above the floor. There are two roosts 15 feet long, framed together and only two inches above roost platform. The nests are made like drawers, pulling from a shelf 24 inches wide and 18 inches high, along the west end of house. There are ten of these nests. The top is built slanting to prevent fowls from roosting on the same at night. Along the east end are a grit hopper; oyster shell hopper and a large dry mash hopper. This house will cost about sixty dollars for material. In some localities where lumber is high priced it may cost a little more.

Front View.

End View.

The three sides, north, east and west, are built absolutely air tight. This is very important and should not be overlooked. The door should be at least thirty inches wide and in some instances thirty-six inches is advisable. The house is entirely single boarded excepting where the roosting room is, here it is ceiled on the inside with matched material to within a few inches below roost platform and four feet up the north slope of roof.

Poultry Essentials.

Feed plenty of clean, wholesome food and water, and provide plenty of clean dry nests in a clean poultry house.

Clean Drinking Pans.

Cleaning the fowls' drinking pans is important as well as keeping them filled.

CLOG ON BUSINESS

Threatened Legislation Retards Good Times.

Immediate Adjournment of Congress Would Restore Confidence—Plain Duty of Democrats Is to End the Session.

Members of the senate and house are engaged in a lively dispute as to whether the country is suffering from "hard times" or from too much prosperity. Opposition legislators are proving that the country is on the rocks, and the Democratic legislators are showing that their party leader was wrong when he said there was a psychological depression. They prove that there is no depression at all—that business is bounding along at breakneck speed.

As usual, the truth is between the two extremes. Times are not as good as they should be, but big crops are restoring confidence and business is picking up.

There is one thing, however, that is so clear that it ought to be admitted by Republicans and Democrats alike: The country is going ahead in spite of, and not with the aid of, congress or the administration.

The government, instead of facilitating the work of the ordinary man in making a living, is an additional burden upon his back. Washington is not furnishing freight for empty cars, or developing new territory, or reducing the cost of living, or preserving the home market for the home producer.

On the contrary, legislation passed and pending tends to a paralysis of business, a cessation of development, an increase in the cost of living, and an opening of the home market to the competition of low-wage labor. The tariff forces the home producer to share the market with the foreigner, while the foreigner joins the general conspiracy to boost the cost of living. The producer loses, but the consumer does not gain.

Granting that Democrats in congress are anxious to help in bringing about good times, and seeing that the legislation passed and pending is a clog on good times, it is obviously the duty of all good Democrats in congress to return at once to their respective districts without enacting any more legislation. By adopting this patriotic and highly intelligent plan they will powerfully aid the efforts of nature and everybody outside of congress to hurry good times along.

What's Wrong With It?

Senator Borah says that the Nicaragua treaty came malodorously forth from some sink hole of tyranny and corruption—or phrases to that effect—and would serve only the purpose of modern buccaneers in the Caribbean sea. Its iniquities must be revealed, he says, even if he has to break senate restraints.

Let's have the scandal with its details. The treaty recommends itself. Its provisions seem equitable and wise and far sighted. It would establish orderly government in a country this nation needs as an orderly neighbor. It would guarantee Nicaraguan independence under a protectorate. It would give this nation rights which seem valuable. It would contribute, in compensation for these rights, the sum of $3,000,000 to the relief of Nicaraguan indebtedness.

If this money is going into the wrong pockets let's have the story and correct the error, but the financial consideration is the least important of all involved.

Principles, Not Names.

In reply to the G. O. P. "harmony" overtures Harry Woods, the Progressive editor of the Wellington Daily News, says: "I care nothing for the word 'Progressive' and have no feeling against the word 'Republican.' If the Progressive leaders would steal a presidential nomination from the members of the party, I'd quit it with the same enthusiasm as I got away from the rotten Republican hulk. Principles are everything—names nothing. If the Republicans would kick out the thieving leaders it would be a mighty respectable organization. And as to Teddy, I couldn't go back on a man who in seven years made the greatest record ever made in the presidency, all things considered."

Is This Change of Opinion?

President Wilson in a formal statement said "the businss of the country has been chiefly promoted in recent years by enterprises organized on a great scale, and that the vast majority of the men connected with what we have come to call big business are honest, incorruptible and patriotic." That must have been after that $12,000,000 check from the Riggs National bank had been deposited in the treasury.

Must Explain to Voters.

Hope and confidence have little part in the Democratic campaign of this year.

It will be a defensive campaign from start to finish with every Democratic candidate.

Neither the good crops nor the distribution of patronage will bring strength to the senators and representatives who have to face the voters with apologies for their own or the administration's violations of platform pledges and promises.

Some people burn their bridges behind them, and others fireproof theirs.

All the Difference.

The four persons were having some trouble in getting seated as the train rolled out of the station. One, a truthful looking old lady, insisted on taking a seat facing the front of the train.

"You know, I can never ride with my back to the engine," she said.

"But, auntie, this train hasn't got any engine," suggested one of the younger ones selfishly. "It has a motor."

And the old lady, mollified, sat comfortably with her back to the motor.

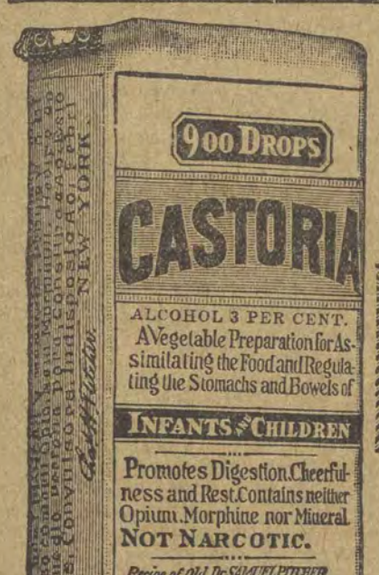
An Ounce of Prevention

Most people who enjoy a frequent drink of beer or liquor fail to realize it's weakening effect on the kidneys.

Kidney weakness sets up backache, headache, rheumatic pain, nervousness, and disorders of the urine and if neglected leads to dropsy, gravel, and Bright's disease.

In the early stages kidney weakness can be corrected. Doan's Kidney Pills tone and strengthen weak kidneys and are used with success all over the civilized world. There's no other kidney remedy so well recommended.

A Mississippi Case



J. A. Padgett, prop. grocery & general store, N. Pearl St., Columbia, Miss., says: "My kidneys were in bad shape and the secretions pained in passage and contained sediment. My back ached constantly and it was hard for me to breathe. A specialist said my case was hopeless. Nothing helped me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They drove away the pains in my back, I gained in weight and I am now in good health."

The New Catechism.

A well-known doctor of Savannah has two children—a little daughter, aged six, and a small son, aged four. One day he overheard the little girl putting her brother through an examination in Bible history.

"Do you know who the first man and the first woman were?"

"Yeth, I do," lisped the boy.

"I'll bet you don't know their names," pressed the sister.

"I'll bet I do!" replied the little fellow.

"Well, what were their names, then, Mr. Smarty?"

"Edem and Ab!" answered the little boy.—Saturday Evening Post.

Some Headline.

At the time of the Volturno disaster a literary critic for a certain New York newspaper was acting as substitute for a copy reader who was ill. It fell to him to write a head for the sctory of the disaster. The story was full of thrills, of course, and he was told to condense them all in a big black line to extend across the page, leading the paper.

He thought for some time, tore up several attempts, and finally submitted this: "O Restless Sea!"

Not for Her.

"What did you say to him, dad?"

"I asked him if he could support you in the style to which you had become accustomed."

"And he?"

"He said he could."

"If he tries it I'll leave him."

Experienced Women Advise Mother's Friend

Because it is so perfectly safe to use and has been of such great help to a host of expectant mothers, these women, experienced in this most happy period, advise the use of "Mother's Friend."

Applied externally to the abdominal muscles its purpose is to relieve the undue tension upon the cords and ligaments resulting from muscular expansion. Beneath the surface is a network of fine nerve threads and the gentle, soothing embrocation, "Mother's Friend," is designed to so lubricate the muscular fibres as to avoid the unnecessary and continuous nagging upon this myriad of nerves. It is a reflex action.

Applied to the breasts it affords the proper massage to prevent caking.

Thousands of women have reason to believe in this splendid help under the trying ordeal of motherhood. Their letters are eloquent evidence of its great value to women. In use for many years it has come to be a standard remedy for the purpose.

There is scarcely a well-stocked drug store anywhere but what you can easily obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" and in nearly every town and village is a grandma who herself used it in earlier years. Expectant mothers are urged to try this splendid assistant to comfort.

Editor Union-Banner:—Please allow me space to say a few words.

Saturday was the closing day of our singing school,

On Sunday morning at 9:45 the people of the community and neighboring communities met and began singing praises unto Jehovah with hearts full of the spririt and love of Christ. The services were opened with a song by Prof. J. M. Williams, and prayer by C. W. Langston. The music for the morning was directed by J. M, Williams, R. M. Brigance, C. W. Langston, and A. A. Beard. A sermon was preached by Rev. W. H. Connell. Music for the afternoon was directed by Prof. James Franklin and others.

The day was greatly enjoyed by all present, and we thand all the singers for their splendid music.

We hope to have Prof. Williams teach us another school next summer, and we recommend him as being an efficient teacher.

DON'T TAKE CALOMEL HERE'S A BETTER REMEDY

Taking calomel is mighty risky and often times dangerous.

You ought to get along without taking calomel yourself or giving it to your family, when you can get a remedy that takes its place. Dodssn's Liver Tone is an agreeable vegetable liquid that starts the liver to action just as surely as calomel does. But, unlike calomel, Dodson's Liver Tone does not stimulate the liver too much. It gives relief gently. Calomel acts so strongly that it may leave you worse than you were at first, and calomel also sometimes causes salivation. Dodson's Liver Tone works well and never harms.

A large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone is sold for fifty cents by Alred Drug Company. It always has given such perfect satisfaction that your money will be given back to you with a smile if you buy a bottle and are not perfectly satisfied with it in every way.

Purifies Blood With Telling Effect

Gives Conscious Evidence of Its Direct Action.

S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, almost talks as it sweeps its way through the circulation. Its action is so direct that very often in some forms of skin affliction the appearance of the eruptions changes over night, the itch and redness are gone and recovery begins immediately.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin afflictions.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antidotal effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 534 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores, but beware of all substitutes. Do not accept them.

PROGRESSIVES FOR PROTECTION AND A SCIENTIFIC TARIFF COMMISSION

The attitude of the Progressive party on the tariff is perfectly expressed in the Progressive platform adopted at Chicago on Augnst 7, 1912, which reads as follows:

We believe in a protective tariff which shall equalize conditions of competition between the United States and foreign Counties, both for the farmer and the manufacturer and which shall maintain for labor an adequate standard of living.

Republican tariffs used to be written quite frankly by their beneficiaries, by men who did not scruple to assert their private demands, regardless of the general welfare. How much they contributed to republiacn campaign funds in exchange for the privilege of taking what they personally wanted in the matter of protection, rather than what their business needed, is a pertinent inquiry.

Prior to the election of Taft in 1908 the people demanded a downward revision of the tariff. The republican party promised the revision. The Taft administration, under the leadership of Payne and Aldrich, miserably failed in redeeming its promise to the American people, and because of his earnest protest read the great Dolliver out of the republican party.

The last Democratic platform, upon which Wilson was elected President, declared the imposition of the tariff to be illegal and unconstitutional, except for the purpose of revenue. It is therefore apparent that nothing can be expected from the Democrats in the way of protection. The Underwood bill has failed as completely to satisfy the people as did the Payne-Aldrich tariff. They represent the two extremes in tariff making.

The Progressive party is opposed to either extreme. We say that there must never again be a political revision of the tariff in this country, and that the determination of what tariff rates and schedules will correctly and wisely carry out the protective principles should be committed to an expert tariff commission, far removed from the vicissitudes of party exigency and partisan interference. The republicans are now professing to favor the creation of a tariff commission. The insincerity of this pretense is demonstrated by the fact that in the Sixty-first Congress they had three distinct opportunities to enact such a measure, but instead of passing the bill they beat it by connivance with the avowed enemies of a tariff commission, and violated the rules of the House to do so. The republican congress and President refused to create such a tariff commission. The democratic Congress and President refused to create such a commission. The Progressive party is the only party which offers the tired business men and anxious working working men of the country a sound and conservative remedy, which will prevent for all time both the outrageous exactions of a Payne-Aldrich tariff and the ruinous consequences of a Wilson-Underwood tariff.

We of the Progressive party believe in a protective tariff. The American protective system has become an established institution, and when properly safeguarded and honestly regulated by a non-partisan, scientific tariff commission, free from the abuses to which it has been put by the overloads of special privilege, will guard the American farmer and working man in every legitimrte way against the American producer the American market when he makes honest goods and sells them at honest prices.

The Progressive party believes that the tariff commission should have plenary power to ascertain whether or not the labor employed in protected industries is receiving a fair and just proportion of the benefits of that protection and that no discrimination should be made against the farmer.

Neither of the old parties approves of the Progressive plan for a tariff commission. The Progressive party introduced a bill in Congress providing for such a commision under date of May 6, 1913. It was referred to the committee on ways and means, where it will peaceably slumber until such time as the people place the reins of government in the hands of the Progressive party.

Let every Progressive put his shoulder to the wheel in this campaign and let the people know the position of the Progressive party on this important issue.

W. H. Hinebewgh Chairman.

Business College Closes first Term

The branch school of the Southern Business College of Mobile, which has been operating here for the past six months under the management of Prof. G. O. Anderson, closed its session last week, and Mr. Andeson left for his home at Biloxi, Miss. During the term there were a total of more than forty students who enrolled for the various courses offered, most of whom completed the work, and received diplomas. The school on the whole was well conducted, and at all times commanded the best and most hearty co operation of those who were in attendance. The teachers and management, especially Mr. Anderson, acquitted themselves well while here, and in going away certainly carry with them the respect and admiration of everyone with whom they had dealings while here.

Report of County Health Officer

To the Honorable Probate Judge and Commissioners of Chilton county.

Gentlemen:—

I beg to submit my report for the month of July. As required by law, I inspected the county jail and found it to be in good condition. I visited the poorhouse on July 6, and found same to be in good condition.

All doctors have reported births and deaths except the following: J. W. Maddox, Mt, Creek, J. J. Dubose, Stanton, W. A. Mason, Riderville, A. M. Wooley, Jemison.

All midwives have reported.

The vital statistics are as follows:

Births, white 56; colored 2; Total 58.

Deaths, white 18; colored 5; total 23.

The following cases of infectuous diseases were reported and have been carefully looked after: Typhoid fever, 18; tuberculosis, 2; diphtheria, 1; small-pox, 1.

During the past month I hove made three visits to the Thorsby neighborhood for the purpose of trying to surpress the typhoid epidemic in that section. I have also looked after a small pox case at Riderville and a diphtheria epidemic near Mineral Springs This is a typical type of the disease and demands a very careful attention from the attending physician, lest some of the cases be overlooked and the disease spread to an alarming extent. There is also a small epidemic of Typhoid existing at Maplesville. Owing to indisposition I have not yet been able to cover that ground, but detailed the county nurse to investigate and report, what she has done.

It seems that proper precautions are being taken and that the Mayor of Maplesville, Dr. W. E. Kay is putting forth an earnest effort to eradicate the disease.

Respectfully submitted,
V. J. Gragg, M.D.,
County Health Officer.

The Ladies Aid Society Meet

Register Chancy 2 Aug 12

The Methodist Ladies Aid Sociely Entertained at the Parsonage, on Monday evening last, in honor of their husbands. There was a lavish supper spread consisting of the very edibles the men love best which every one present enjoyed. In fact you would have thought the "old folk" were transformed into "young folk" could you have heard the merry voices, and the gay laughter. The only trouble the men had was to find a place to hide the chicken bones. The only trouble the ladies had was the fear of being sick on tomorrow. This was a supper right and no PAY Supper. The only ones who missed having a good jolly time were those who did not come. The Semi-Annual Election of Officers for the society were as follows: Mrs. Sam Johnston, President Mrs. J. H. Middleton Vice President, Mrs. E. A. Matthews, Secretary Mrs. W. W. Fox, Treasurer. Those present were: Rev. L. H. S. Chappelle and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Alabama Banks In Good Condition

Alex Walker, State Superintendent of Banking Department Says Optimism Reigns Among Alabama Bankers.

Alabama banks are in sound condition and Alabama bankers are optimistic and confident that they can handle the financial situation in this State with a firm grasp in case of unfavorable conditions that may arise from an European war, according to Alex E. Walker, superintendent of the State Banking Department, who has just returned from Birmingham where he held a conference with bankers from all parts of the State.

Mr. Walker declared yesterday that he talked with many of the leading bankers of Alabama and that they are unusually optimistic on conditions, despite the fact that the war cricis is upon the financial institutions of the world.

CARD OF THANKS

We take this means of expressing our gratitude and sincere thanks to our many friends for their beautiful floral offerings, kind help and sympathy given us at the death of our darling baby girl, Willie Margaret.

Thorsby Has Clean up Day

Never in the history of Thorsby has the town had such a general cleaning up, as was given it on Friday. An epidemic of Typhoid Fever for the past two months has aroused the people to the necessity of exerting themselves to stamp it out.

Under the directions of Miss Helen Harlan, Red Cross Nurse for Chilton County, the ladies of the town have been organized as the Thorsby branch of the Chilton County Improvement Association; their first work was to discover the source of Typhoid infection which proved to be "open wells" receiving drainage or seepage from unprotected water closets, which were also accessible to flies, well known to be carriers of Typhoid germs. To prevent further contamination of food or water from this source, the Town Council passed an ordainance requiring all water closets to be provided with "Dry Pail System" and to be made fly proof, and to complete the work. The ladies have interested not only the Council members, but men women and children to devote a day to civic improvement cleaning the streets, cutting grass and weeds, gathering and hauling away rubbish and cleaning up generally.

The ladies provided a picnic dinner on Thorsby Institute Campus, and sold Ice Cream and cake to secure money for their treasury.

There have been no deaths from Typhoid Fever, and no recent cases at Thorsby. All patients are now convalescent and it is hoped that the disease is under control and with vigilence may be subdued.

Institute

The Teachers Institute of Chilton county convened at the court house in Clanton, Aug. 10, 1914.

The Institute was called to order by County Supt. W. T. Bean who made a brief talk, setting forth the advantages of Institute work, which was quite appropriate for the occasion.

The conductors were introduced by Supt. W. T. Bean, who were Mr. T. W. Smith of Montgomery and Miss Rosa Strickland of the Birmingham high school.

The Chilton county teachers are highly pleased with their conductors. Many interesting topics to teachers have already been discussed by Mr. Smith, who has succeeded in creating considerable interest in vocational training. Then, again, his explanation are far above the average. Miss Strickland is hard to excell in making people think for themselves.

The Institute had a rare treat yesterday by having the privilege of listening to Prof. E. M. Wright of Troy Normal school lecture on the science of teaching. He pointed out some interesting thoughts.

Ninety-two teachers have enrolled up to the present date.

A concise report of the week's work will appear in the county papers next week and one or two of the state papers.

FRANCE BREAKS WITH AUSTRIA

FRENCH GOVERNMENT CHARGES AUSTRIANS VIOLATED THEIR PROMISES.

MAKE FORMAL STATEMENT

French Consider Austrian Troop Movement As Acting Against France.

Paris.—It was officially announced that France had broken off diplomatic relations with Austria-Hungary. The French ambassador at Vienna has left the Austrian capital and the Austro-Hungarian ambassador to Paris has asked for his passports.

In announcing the breaking off of relations with Austria the French foreign office made the following statement:

"Contrary to assurances given by Austria to the French minister of foreign affairs that no Austrian troops were taking part in the Franco-German war, the French government has ascertained beyond any possible doubt that certain Austrian troops are at present in Germany outside the Austrian frontier. These troops, which have set free certain German troops destined to be employed in fighting the French, ought indubitably, de facto and de ure to be considered as acting against the French. In the circumstances the French ambassador was ordered to leave Vienna.

"The Austrian ambassador at Paris, on being informed as to France's decision, asked for his passports."

LIEGE FORTS REMAIN INTACT

Offical Dispatches Declare Stragetic Importance of City Not Affected By German Occupation.

London.—Messages received in official headquarters from the Belgian general staff assert that the occupation of the town of Liege by the German troops has not had the slightest influence on the stragetic situation.

It is declared that so long as the ring of forts around Liege remains intact, as it still is, the guns command three of the principal roads by which the German army can advance. This, it is pointed out, makes it impossible for the Germans, under the present circumstances, to receive supplies or ammunition.

Every line of railroad between Liege and the German frontier is alleged to have been destroyed and the Belgian troops are said to have blown away every bridge, tunnel and culvert.

The Belgian general staff declares it has received intelligence that the Germans, expecting to take Liege in a few hours, brought with them only sufficient food for a few days and little ammunition, their plan being to rush Liege and make it their prepared base of operations.

The same authority states that the German assertion of the capture of 4000 Belgian prisoners is baseless, and adds that not a single Belgian soldier remains in the town of Liege, as they all are stationed in the forts.

So far as can be learned by the Belgian general staff, some 120,000 German troops were engaged at Liege. They are said to have so weakened as to be unable effectively to attack the forts.

On the other hand, it is argued that it is not possible for the forts to concentrate their fire on the town of Liege, itself.

The next development in the situation is to be the arrival of the Belgian main army, reported to be advancing rapidly from Louvain, in the northwest, to attack the Germans occupying the town of Liege.

ONE HUNDRED SPIES KILLED

Belgium Covered By Network of German Spies, Says Report from Brussels—Private Signs Discovered.

Brussels.—Belgium has been covered by a network of German spies. Six hundred already have been arrested and 100 were shot.

Some of the Germans captured wore uniforms of gendarmes, civic guards, soldiers and officers of the Belgian army. Many were armed with bombs and revolvers and rode in automobiles bearing false numbers. They also had in their possession telegrams and letters with the counterfeit signature of the Belgian minister of war. Just before and after the fighting private signs were discovered on bridges, military works and aqueducts indicating that these structures should be blown up.

Severe precautions have now been taken by the military authorities. No one is admitted at the railway stations without a permit, and automobiles are halted at every mile.

The war minister has issued a proclamation that every German and Austrian who does not declare himself within 24 hours will be considered a spy. Since the Flanders provinces were placed under martial law more than 2000 have been arrested as spies.

Forty thousand volunteers have been enrolled and have been formed into 20 regiments of 200 each.

ITALY DEMANDS AN EXPLANATION.

Rome.—Italy took the first step toward war with Austria by demanding from Vienna an explanation of the bombardment of Italian business houses when the Montenegrin port of Antivari was shelled by an Austrian fleet.

FRENCH ARMY INVADE ALSACE

Paris.—The invasion of lower Alsace by a French army under Gen. Joseph Joffre, the French commander in chief, has awakened great enthusiasm throughout France.

French military authorities, while recognizing the occupation of Altkirch and Meulhausen by French troops is not of high strategical importance, believe the successful advance of the French army far across the German frontier will have considerable moral effect.

It is reported unofficially that Kolmar, farther to the north, has fallen into the hands of the French. None of these three places was strongly fortified and all lie outside the line of real German defense, being regarded as outposts of the strongly fortified cities. Their German garrisons numerically were fairly strong, but it was understood that in case of attack they merely would endeavor to hinder the French advance before falling back.

Neu Briesach, where they are said to have retired, is east of Kolmar, and is strongly fortified, while Strassburg, some distance to the north, the center of a great aggregation of German troops, is strongly fortified and supposed to be prepared for a long siege.

Official reports of fighting between the French and German troops state that the French losses were "not excessive," while those of the Germans are declared by the French to have been "very serious."

The Alsatrian inhabitants are said to have been so overjoyed at the appearance of the French army that they tore up the frontier posts.

Reports of the arrival of an Austrian army corps on the Swiss frontier near Basel were the object of close attention by French military authorities. It was said that several more Austrian army corps were being organized in the Tyrol, whence they later would bt sent toward the French frontier. In view of this the French government asked the Austro-Hungarian ambassador to France, who remains at his post, to explain the intention of Austria-Hungary in regard to France.

Before retiring from Meulhausen German troops are said to have set fire to numerous buildings, especially warehouses, where food and forage were stored. The forest of Hard, near Kolmar, is said to have been razed.

Martial law has been established in Alsace, where it is said the Germans announced that any persons suspected of Sympathizing with the French would be executed.

Detailed orders were issued by both the French and Belgian governments making the industrial resources of the two countries common property while the arms factories in Franch and Belgium are co-operating in supplying military material. Coal and grain will be utilized in common by the two countries, and there will be complete coordination of military resources.

The governor general of French West Africa telegraphed to the colonial office that the French forces there, co-operating with an English warship, have occupied the German colony of Togoland. At the same time the British warship appeared off Port Lome and the French garrison of Grand Popo in Dahomey crossed the frontier and occupied the eastern part of the German colony.

All wireless stations in France and Algeria were suppressed except in case where special authorization had been given or where they were used for military purposes.

Joseph Caillaux, former premier, has joined the French army and has been attached to the treasury department as inspector of finance.

Two German steamers, the Neptune and Adriana, have been seized at Rouen. Their officers and crews of 30 men were imprisoned.

THE WAR IN BRIEF.

Fighting by land, sea and air has begun in what will probably prove the greatest war of modern times. Eight European nations are involved and their armies of 17,000,000 men are in the field.

Germans occupy City of Liege, but forts remain intact.

One hundred spies were shot at Brussels.

France has broken off diplomatic relations with Austria-Hungary.

French army invades lower Alsace.

The British cruiser Amphion has been sunk by contact with a mine, with the loss of more than a hundred men.

Russian cavalry, endeavoring to enter east Prussia, have been driven back by the German frontier guards.

The United States offers good offices in effort to bring about European peace. Russians defeat Uhlan cavalry and invade Teuton territory. Germans lose several thousand killed and wounded in defeat at Liege by Belgian troops. Martial law proclaimed in Holland.

"A state of war Between Germany and England was declared at 12:15 English time, Wednesday, morning Aug. 5, in London.

Austria and Servia, who opened the struggle, are fighting along the Danube and Drina rivers, but their struggle has been lost sight of in the great cataclysm.

English and French ships sink one and capture two boats in Mediterranean.

FRENCH GERMAN AND BRITISH TROOPS FORM JUNCTION

Brussels.—Belgian official reports received by the war office, record the important fact that a junction has been effected by Belgian, British and French troops across the line of the German advance through Belgium.

The location of the three armies was not revealed, but it is understood they will act together. At Liege where the Belgian garrison has presented a stubborn front to the German attackers, fighting has ceased and the Belgian troops and citizens have strengthened the city's defenses. Between the forts lines of earthworks have been thrown up by men who have worked without cessation night and day.

Reports reached here by way of London that according to announcements in Berlin, Liege had fallen into the hands of German troops.

The sighting of a German cavalry patrol to the south of Namur as evidence of the activity of the German of Liege which supposed to indicate they were reconnoitering to discover the position of the defending armies.

25,000 GERMANS KILLED IN ATTACK ON LIEGE

London.—A dispatch to the Post from Brussels says that the Belgians granted the armistice for 24 hours required by the Germans, and that the latter now are collecting their wounded and burying their dead. The Germans have withdrawn to a less exposed position to recuperate.

On the authority of the Belgian war ministry, the German casualties in the battle around Liege number 25,000, according to their own admission. An official statement issued from Berlin described the attempt on the Liege forttress as unsuccessful and the assault of the Germans as a "unique act of heroism," and added that it will not have the slightest influence on the larger operations of the German army.

German diplomats have been using their utmost efforts to win Itlay to the German side by negotiations and a direct appeal to King Victor Emmanuel, but without success.

AUSTRIANS CONTINUE TO BOMBARD BELGRADE.

Belgrade.—The bombardment of Belgrade by the Austrians, which began July 29, has continued almost steadily since. The capital was crowded with women and children when the Austrian artillery opened fire, and there was a rush for the country, but the people were obliged to return because of the concentration of food supplies here.

In the first few days of the fighting the people were terror stricken, but gradually they became calmer and the merchants reopened their shops.

The royal palace, the British and German legations, and most of the larger buildings of the city have been struck by shells.

The legations and consulates are filled with frightened nationals.

WILSON EXTENDS GOOD OFFICES TO WARRING NATIONS

Washington.—President Wilson has offered his good offices to all the European powers involved in the war.

The President has sent the following message to Emperor William, Emperor Nicholas, Emperor Francis Joseph, President Poincaire and King George:

"As official head of one of the powers signatory to The Hague Convention, I feel it to be my privilege and my duty, under Article Three of that Convention, to say to you in a spirit of most earnest friendship, that I should welcome an opportunity to act in the interest of European peace, either now or any other time that might be thought more suitable as an occasion to serve you and all concerned in a way that would afford me lasting cause for gratitude and happiness. (Signed)

"WOODROW WILSON."

RUSSIAN AND GERMAN VESSELS ARE SUNK.

London. — A dispatch to the London Daily Mail from Tien Tsin says that the Russian cruiser Askold and the German cruiser Emden both have been sunk after an engagement off Weihai-Wai, China.

London.—The first naval battle in the Mediterranean has occurred and resulted in a crushing defeat for the German sea forces. Dispatches received state that the French and British fleets effected a junction while in pursuit of German warships that had been sighted off the northern coast of Africa.

SPECIAL SESSION STILL CONSIDERED

GOVERNOR HAS NOT YET REACHED DECISION ON CALLING EXTRA SESSION.

NEWS LETTER FROM CAPITAL

Happenings in and About Alabama's State House Interestingly Told.

—Montgomery.

No decision as to whether or not he will call the Alabama legislature together in extraordinary session has been made by Governor O'Neal. The governor has been urged by citizens in many parts of the State to assemble the legislature and has also been urged not to call that body together by other leading citizens.

If the legislature is called together, it will be the new legislature, the members of which will be elected in November. It is not believed that the present legislature will be called together by the governor should he decide that an extra session is necessary.

It is pointed out by those desiring an extra session that much good can be done by such a session in the matter of providing relief to Jefferson county from the burdens of the fee system and the passage of laws which will bring about a reformation in the judiciary system of the State.

It is known that Governor O'Neal will insist on certain changes in the present judicial system in case an extra session is called.

Much legislation of a preliminary nature would be discussed at the extra session so that it can be whipped into shape for the regular session next January.

During the last few weeks many members of the new legislature have called on the governor and discussed with him the probable business that will be taken up should a session of the new legislature be called.

Quite a number of the members of the present legislature have also called on the governor recently, among whom was E. B. Almon, speaker. Judge Almon talked with the governor this week, but no announcement of the subject under discussion was made.

1000 Apply for Pension.

More than 1,000 applications for pensions were considered by the state pension board at its annual meeting. These applications have been filed in all the counties of the State and were reviewed by the State board for final action.

No cases involving the removal of names from the pension rolls were heard at the annual meeting of the board. The purging of the rolls of the names of illegal pensioners will be continued by the board at a special session which will be held in September. More than 1,200 persons have been cited to appear before the board at the September session so show cause why their names should not be dropped from the rolls.

Members of the State pension board are Capt. John C. Wood, Demopolis, chairman; Dr. M. L. Wood of Montgomery, and Gen. Fred S. Ferguson of Birmingham. W. B. Moore of the State auditor's office, is secretary of the board. General Ferguson has served for almost a year as special master for the board in the work of purging the rolls of the names of illegal pensioners.

Must Serve Sentence.

Robert L. Sears of Montgomery county must serve a three-year term in the penitentiary for shooting Bud Smith, a negro, last fall, according to action taken by Governor O'Neal in refusing to grant a temporary parole to the convicted man. Last week the governor declined to grant a parole to Sears and he announced that he had finally decided that he will not interfere with the sentence imposed by the Montgomery city court. A delegation in Sears' behalf appeared before the governor.

Court of Appeals Great Aid.

During the three years of its existence the state court of appeals has rendered final decisions in 1,728 cases, an average of 576 cases for each of the three judges, and has transacted other business which would have been a severe burden upon the supreme court had it been necessary for the supreme court to handle this business, according to a statement issued by Col. Alexander Troy, clerk of the court of appeals. At present the court of appeals has almost caught up with its work.

Jackson's Book. C K.

Books and accounts of J. Kirk Jackson of Montgomery, as treasurer of the Alabama School for Juvenile Law Breakers at Mt. Meigs and the Negro State Normal School of Montgomery, are correct and accurately kept, according to J. T. Gorman, examiner of public accounts, who has filed a report of his examination with Governor O'Neal. At the reform school, receipts during the year amounted to $15,272 and disbursements amounted to $11,697, leaving a balance on hand July 27, 1914.

Revision of Rates Petitioned.

Petitions requesting a revision on class rates I. L. M. and N. between Mobile and all points on the Louisville and Nashville were filed before the State railroad commission by that railroad. The claim is made that the rates on these classes now in force are discriminatory as against Birmingham, Montgomery, Selma and other points. The discrimination is said to be in favor of Mobile. The proposed revision will eliminate the discriminations according to the railroad attorneys.

The petitions ask for both advances and reductions in rates. This is an important case and will be heard by the commission in September. The petition refers only to car load lots.

Classes I. L. M. and N. include car load lots of wagons, barytes, sash, doors and blinds, brick, metal, charcoal, clay earthen cups, cotton seed meal, handles, ice, bridge materials, links and pins, cast iron and material, lumber, lathes, graders' outfits, earthern pipes, pitch, cement, salt, shingles, sand, cotton, stone and tar.

Girard Excise Commission Named.

The governor has appointed Dr. R. C. Prather chairman and C. T. Stillwell associate member of the Girard excise commission. The appointment of the two commissioners was made after several interviews and conferences with delegations from Girard, and those named for the offices are declared to be acceptable to all classes of citizens of that city

The governor several weeks ago appointed John Adams chairman of the commission, but in view of severe protest against his appointment, the governor withdrew his name.

In making the appointments the governor gave out the following statement:

"After repeated interviews and conferences with delegations of the city of Girard, it was the concensus of opinion that the following gentlemen would be competent and acceptable to all classes of people of that city, and hence I have accordingly appointed Dr. R. C. Prather, chairman, and C. T. Stillwell, associate member of the Girard excise commission.

"No charges were made reflecting upon the integrity or character of the present commissioners, but some friction was developed on account of the fact that these gentlemen had large business interests. It has been my policy, on that account, always to avoid appointing those who were engaged in the real estate or banking business as excise commissioners."

Would Advance Coal Rates.

Permission to advance rates on coal from the Birmingham mines to the Gadsden-Anniston-Talladega district is sought by the Louisville and Nashville railroad in a petition filed before the state railroad commission. The railroad desires to advance the rate on coal from 50 to 60 cents per ton and on coal used by certain manufacturing companies from 50 to 70 cents per ton. These manufacturing companies are located at Gadsden, Alabama City, Attalla, Anniston, Talladega and Sylacauga.

This is one of the most important cases the state railroad commission has ever been called upon to settle. The advance of 10 cents a ton on coal to the Birmingham group on account of the vast coal consumption at those points is a momentous question and the advance on coal for the manufacturing companies or 20 cents a ton is necessarily of utmost importance to those manufacturing cities.

September 11 has been set as the date for the hearing. It is probable that the cities affected by the rates will send delegations to appear before the commission.

Parole is Denied.

Because the trial judge refused to recommend clemency, Governor O'Neal declined to issue a parole to Burrell Grubbs, of Geneva county, who was sentenced to 20 years on a charge of second degree murder. It was claimed by Burrell's attorneys that the killing for which Grubbs was convicted was done by some one else.

Governor O'Neal took up the matter with the trial judge, and in a letter to the govenor the judge declined to recommend the extension of clemency. Several affidavits to the effect that Grubbs was innocent were presented to the governor and he referred them to the trial judge who refused to consider them.

Negroes Will Get Their Share.

Booker T Washington, president of the Tuskegee Institute, called on governor O'Neal and discussed the distribution of funds in Alabama which will be made under the provisions of the Smith-Lever bill recently passed by Congress. Governor O'Neal told Washington that the fund for this year will be administered by Dr. C. C. Thach, president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and that the negroes will be given their full share under the law.

At the next session of the legislature provision will be made for the administration of the funds that will be allotted to Alabama. It is probable that the legislature will auuoint Dr. Thach as administrator.

Recently a special commission appointed by Governor O'Neal visited Tuskegee and inspected the Tuskegee Institute. Capt. Reuben F. Kolb was chairman of the commission. Recommendation was made that 30 per cent of the Smith-Lever fund be divided between the Tuskegee Institute and the negro school at Normal.

MRS. WILSON'S BODY LAID TO REST IN GA.

SIMPLE CEREMONY MARKS THE FUNERAL SERVICES AT WHITE HOUSE.

LESS THAN 200 PRESENT

Services Were Conducted By the Rev. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, New Jersey.

Washington.—While flags drooped at half-mast throughout the capital and thousands gathered in the wide avenue before the closed gates of the White House grounds, the first service was held over Mrs. Wilson's body in the east room. The flags, the crowds, the closing of the government departments in the afternoon, and the masses of flowers which overflowed the east room, were the nation's only way of expressing its sympathy.

In accordance with Mrs. Wilson's wish, the service was of the simpliest. There was no music; only the reading of a few verses from the Bible, a prayer by the Rev. Sylvester Beach of the church which the Wilson family attended during their years in Princeton, N. J., and a benediction by the Rev. J. H. Taylor, at whose church the President has worshipped since he came to Washington.

MRS. WOODROW WILSON

Whose Death in Washington Has Plunged a Nation Into Grief.

Less than 200 were present. Besides the family there were a few intimate friends, the members of the cabinet and their wives, the committees from the Senate and the House, headed by the Vice President and the speaker, and the employes of the White House.

The casket was borne from the White House by six members of the city police force, who have guarded the home of the President for years. There were no honorary pallbeares...

Few saw the funeral party pass on its way to the Union station, where the train awaited it. The drive was made over less frequented streets and only three closed automobiles bearing the President and a dozen men, relatives or close friends of the family, followed the hearse.

Services At Rome, Ga.

Rome, Ga.—The last simple ceremoney over the body of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson took place in the quiet wooded cemetery here, when the body of this beloved woman was laid to rest beside the graves of her father and mother.

Washington. — Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of the United States, died at the White House at 5 o'clock p. m., August 6. Death came after a brave struggle of months against Bright's disease with complications.

The president was completely unnerved by the shock and his grief was heart-rending. He bore up well under the strain, however, and devoted himself to his daughters.

The end came while Mrs. Wilson was unconscious.

Export Condition Shows Confusion.

Chicago. — Notable broadening out of speculative business on change accompanied the whirling of Great Britain into a general European war. Despite the enforcement of 10 per cent. margins, the public at large would not be restrained from taking a liberal hand at trading in which rapid price changes covered a range of more than 4 cents a bushel and which resulted in an extreme net advance of 3 1-4 cents for wheat. Export conditions were in greater confusion than at any time since the war began.

Alabama banks are in sound condition and Alabama bankers are optimistic and confident that they can handle the financial situation in this State with a firm grasp in case of unfavorable conditions that may arise from an European war, according to Alex E. The verdict of most farmers is that the precipitation has been highly beneficial, and that marked improvement of cotton and other plant life is preceptible. Others declare that the rainfall has been injurious, causing the cotton to shed much fruit. The outlook is bad, they say. Taken as a whole the reports show that optimism prevails over the State as regards the cotton crop. In some places the plant has reached such a stage that the belated rains were ineffectual, if not actually damaging, but most of the farmers of Alabama apparently are getting ready to harvest a crop of unusual proportions.

Prohibition and woman's suffrage were made the leading planks in the platform adopted by the Progressive State convention held in Birmingham. The convention was replete with interesting features, and the fight of the prohibition plank was intense and after a most exciting fight the prohibitionists won their point by a vote of 35 to 27. A resolution was adopted placing the convention on record as being opposed to fusion or amalgamation with any other political party. With the exception of candidates for the judiciary a complete State ticket was nominated headed by Dr. E. H. Cross, of Gadsden, for governor, and Judge A. P. Longshore of Shelby for the United States Senate. The other nominees of the convention follows: For Congressman at large, G. A. Saylor of St. Clair; For Lieutenant Governor, C. B. Forman of Etowah; for Attorney General, Duncan Trimble of Jefferson; for Secretary of State, T. T. Nock of Jefferson; for Auditor, J. W. Cochran of Madison; for Treasurer, J. F. Sutterer of Cullman; for Commissioner of Agriculture, Sid Berry, of Mobile; for Railroad Commissioner, H. H. Bolton of Mobile; for Railroad Commissioner, John M. Green of Baldwin.

Woman Deserved Sharp Retort.

A white Pomeranian escaped from the arms of its mistress in Surf avenue, Coney island, the other night and ran in front of an automobile. A newsboy darted after the dog, caught it, and then fell in a mud puddle. He lost a dozen or so of papers but held on to the dog, which he returned to its owner slightly soiled.

"You impudent little scamp!" said the woman. "What made you get the dear little dog so dirty. You ought to be whipped."

"I am mighty glad I didn't save your life," replied the boy, and a score of onlookers applauded him.

"'They're all alike,' she said. 'I have had three husbands. The first, Lord Lacland, slapped me. The second, Comte L'Oignon, slashed me with a dog-whip. Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala. as second-class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

The approval of the Progressives at Birmingham last Wednesday was registered for the system of taking convicts out of the mines and placing them on the public roads.

"The Peoples Advocate" of Columbiana observes from the Clanton papers that politics down in Chilton is getting rather hot. Yes, brother, such be the case. But we would say to you, "Come on in, the water's fine."

For time immemorial the first aid and inducer of conversation between two persons just met has been the weather. But it has changed now. The first thing which is asked these days is, "How's business?"

Probably the most interesting feature of the Progressive platform is the way it deals with the subject of taxation. It says plainly, "We condemn the present tax commission and method of raising the peoples taxes. We are opposed to any system that offers a premium on raising taxes."

A card from Mr. R. L. Edwards of Pletcher, dated August 8th, states that he found a genuine cotton worm in his cotton on that date. Mr. Edwards gave no detailed explination, but we suppose the worm which he found is a species of the army worm which so completely devastated cotton plants in this county some years ago.

The platform of the Progressive party deals with the matter of old soldiers pensions in a very commendable way. It says, "We shall urge increased appropriation to this interest, and condemn the policy of the present administration in technically dropping from the roll the old soldiers at this late date, which action leaves them unprovided for, and dependent upon others, who possibly already struggling under heavy burdens."

The plattform of the Progressives of Alabama, which was adopted at the meeting in Birmingham last Wednesday is a broad and comprehensive document. It shows what the party stands for. It tells you what you are voting for when you vote for a Progressive candidate. It is divided into several sections, each devoted to treatment of such subjects as Temperance, Education, Good Roads, Old soldiers, Taxation, etc. Clear and definite assertions are made and in no case does it posses that quality which seems to guide the Democrats—to keep the people from proving what they stand for.

We can hardly blame the Democrats for having no platform in this state. First they have no principles from which to make a platform; and second so long as the people will give them the reins of government without any pledges, why should they go restrict their actions by saying what they are going to do. We believe there will come a day when they shall be called upon to give their pledges before they are elected, and there is where they fail, fer as to principles, they havent practiced any in such a long time that they would be as blank as a bareboot school boy in trying to make an ex-temporaneous speech on International arbitration.

It strikes us that it is not hardly so bad to have the Chairman and Secretary of a party committee be absent from a meeting as it is to try to get a committee together, and fail to have a quorum, taking officers and all together. It is true that the Chairman and Secretary of the Progressive Committee were absent from the mass meeting last Saturday; and iti s also true that the Democratic leaders have been trying for the past several weeks to get their crowd together, and they cant get enough of them interested in the matter to constitute a body capable of transacting business. As between the two conditions it seems to us that the Progresseves can feel that they have not the worst at all:

Regarding the subject of education in our state, we quote the following from the platform of the Progressive party in convention at Birmingham last Wednesday:

"We find that Alabama pays $4.00 per capita for the education of her children in the common schools—in fact all Democratic states pay from three to eight dollars—while on the other hand we find the anti-democratic states are paying from eleven to thirty-two dollars.

"We are in favor of the university system, but we believe there is something radically wrong in a system which appropriates $140 per annum to educate the boy who is able to attend college as against four dollars for the boy whose parents are unable to pay his expenses away from home.

"Education and all other interests alike suffer as a result of the one party system of government."

In its closing paragraphs the Progressive platform assails the Democratic machine rule with the following questions:

"We ask in all fairness, what does the Democratic party stand for? Think of the state of Alabama electing men to office without knowing where they stand on any public questions.

"We are opposed to fraud in both primary and general elections. If Democratic papers are to be relied on, the electorate of Alabama was corrupted with money. Votes were purchased as any other commodity. Votes were not counted as cast, for many were changed after they were put in the ballot box.

"We sre in favor of a state primary law in which all political parties shall participate and nominate their respective candidates for various state and county officers, on the same day each party to be fairly represented in the managers of said primary election; all expenses of the election to be borne by the state and counties."

Not Always Our Own Master.

That which we are we shall teach, not voluntarily, but involuntarily. Thoughts come into our minds by avenues which we never left open, and thoughts go out of our minds through avenues which we never voluntarily opened.—Emerson.

Stevenson on Life.

We are not meant to be good in this world, but to try to be, and fail, and keep on trying; and when we get a cake, to say, "Thank God!" and when we get a buffet, to say, "Just so: well hit!"—Stevenson.

Rifling a Barrel.

The grooves in a rifle barrel are made with special machinery, and unless one has this it could not do the work properly, no matter how skilled he was. When the grooves of a rifle barrel are filled with lead it is usually necessary to have an expert gunsmith clean them out.

Possible Solution.

"Why do you suppose it is," she asked, "that nearly all the great men of this world have been married?" "I suppose," replied the old bachelor, "it's because they had to do something to get their minds off the troubles they had at home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

HENRY RUSSELL MILLER

Henry Russell Miller, the young Pittsburgh lawyer-novelist, who is known for his political stories which have appeared during the last few years, has distinguished himself again through the production of another story, "The Ambition of Mark Truitt"—a story of social and industrial Pittsburgh—which critics say is far better than either "The Man Higher Up" or "His Rise to Power," his two earlier political stories. We have secured this story as our next serial, and the first installment will appear in an early issue.

For a number of years Mr. Miller has exhibited a great interest in the steel industry. He has made the acquaintance of many of the big men as well as the laborers in the mill towns, and from them has learned a great deal about the game.

"The Ambition of Mark Truitt" is a story that is not only tremendously interesting, but one that will cause readers to stop and think.

Marriage licenses have been issued this week to the following persons.

Joe Adams to Miss Adie Smith, M. L. Milford to Miss Mandy Roberts, John W. Cox to Miss Annie Mae Smith, T. V. Eiland to Miss Bettie Patterson, John Folmer to Miss Callie Connell.

"Clean Up the Bowels and Keep Them Clean"

There are many remedies to be had for constipation, but the difficulty is to procure one that acts without violence. A remedy that does not perform by force what should be accomplished by persuasion is Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets. After using them, Mr. N. A. Waddell, 315 Washington St., Waco, Tex., says:

"Almost all my life I have been troubled with constipation, and have tried many remedies, all of which seemed to cause pain without giving much relief. I finally tried Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets and found them excellent. Their action is pleasant and mild, and their chocolate taste makes them easy to take. I am more than glad to recommend them."

"Clean up the bowels and keep them clean," is the advice of all physicians, because they realize the danger resulting from habitual constipation. Do not delay too long, but begin proper curative measures.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are a new remedy for this old complaint, and a great improvement over the cathartics you have been using in the past. They taste like candy and work like a charm. A trial will convince you.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are sold by all druggists, at 25 cents a box containing 25 doses. If not found satisfactory after trial, return the box to your druggist and he will return your money. 12

Bill of Rights.

The bill of rights is a declaration of fundamental principles deemed basic to the Constitution itself and borrowed from the English bill of rights of 1689. When the Constitution of the United States was framed and submitted to the people it did not have a bill of rights and it was so harshly criticized on this account that its friends promised to incorporate or add such a declaration, and the first ten amendments to the Constitution, made after the main instrument was adopted, were in fulfillment of this promise. All the State Constitutions now have bills of rights, practically identical with one another.

WHY WEAK LUNGS?

The toll of tuberculosis is claiming more than 350 victims every day in the United States, yet few realize their grave condition until the critical period arrives.

Overwork, worry, weakness after sickness, catarrh, bronchitis, tender throats—all exert the weakening influence that invites consumption.

To guard against consumption, thousands of people take Scott's Emulsion after meals because its rich medicinal nourishment strengthens the lungs, puts vigor in the blood, and upbuilds strength to resist tuberculosis. Scott's Emulsion is nature's strength-builder. Refuse substitutes.

Words of Praise

For Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

"How thankful we are to you for getting a hold of your wonderful Remedy. My wife could not have had but a short time to live if she had not taken your Wonderful Remedy when she did. One more of those paroxysm pains she was having would have killed her without a doubt. Now she is free from all pain, free from heart trouble and free from that disturbing Neuralgia—all the results of five treatments—and the expulsion of five or six hundred Gall Stones. Now she is able to eat anything she wants and her appetite is good and before taking your medicine she had no appetite and when she ate anything she would suffer death for so doing and could not sleep at night; since taking your treatment she sleeps well all night long. T. A. NEALL, Roanoke, Texas."

The above letter should convince you more than anything we could say in behalf of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Sufferers should try one dose of this Remedy—one dose should convince them that they can be restored to health. Nearly all Stomach Ailments are caused by the clogging of the intestinal tract with mucoid and catarrhal accretions allowing poisonous fluids into the Stomach and otherwise deranging the digestive system. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy painlessly removes these accretions without a surgical operation and puts an end to Colic Attacks, Gases in the Stomach and Intestines and all of the usual symptoms of Stomach, Liver and Intestinal Ailments. Ask your druggist about Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. A rather eccentric man, calling on a family blessed by an observant little son, wore kid gloves that had been cleaned.
